VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MAY 9, 1872. NO. 19.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, May 1.—The Methodist General Conference opened at ten A. M., in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn. Bishops Morris, Simpson, Ames and Janes were present. The house was crowded with delegates and the general public. Rev. Dr. Harris was re-elected secretary.

The proposition to change the second restriction rule, and admit lay delegates as part of the General Conference, was then taken up, and after considerable discussion it was carried by a vote of 276 to 6.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, May 2.—The following horrible news has been received by the El Paso stage:

The Gonzales train, with six wagons, about seventy-five mules, nine men and two women, was attacked by Indians at Howard's Well, above Fort Clark. The train and bands were captured, and all burned except one woman, who escaped. She says the Indians numbered one hundred and fifty. General Merritt sent Lieutenant Vincent with cavalry in pursuit, who overtook and fought them, losing his life.

WILMINGTON, N. C., May 3.—Captain F. M. Wishart, a prominent citizen of Roheson county, was killed by the Lowry outlaws yesterday. This is one of the most brutal and cowardly murders ever committed by the band, Captain Wishart having been decoyed to one of their haunts on the pretense that they wished to make terms of surrender, and that he would not be harmed.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., May 3.—Bishop Ames presided over the Conference to-day. A motion that only the clergy be appointed on committees was defeated after a long debate.

BROOKLYN, May 4.—The Methodist convention to-day indefinitely postponed investigation of the affairs of the Book Concern by 199 to 150.

NEW YORK, May 5.—The sculptor, Tantardina, of Milan, has accepted a commission to make a bust of Mazzini for the New York statue, and contributes one thousand francs to the fund.

The government dredge boat General McAllister, for use at the mouth of the Mississippi, has made a successful trial trip and will soon go to New Orleans.

TALLAHASSEE, May 5.—Governor Reed has been acquitted and resumes the governorship.

NEW YORK, May 6.—The inside of Niblo's Theater was completely destroyed by fire this morning. Loss, $200,000. The Metropolitan Hotel and Helmbold's building were considerably damaged by water.

The fire originated in the dome of the theater, where naptha was handled; a lead gas pipe melted and an explosion occurred. Incendiarism suspected.

NASHVILLE, May 7.—The fifteenth General Conference of the African Methodist Church of the United States is now in session here. There are delegates in attendance from New England, New York, Pennsylvania, Indiana, California, Alabama, Georgia, Arkansas, Maryland, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, Kentucky, Texas and Virginia. Bishops Quinn, of Indiana, Payne and Shorten, of Ohio, Waymon, of Baltimore, Campbell, of Philadelphia, Ward, of California, and Brown, of the District of Columbia, are present.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, April 27, via Havana.—Confidence is slowly returning and commerce is becoming more hopeful. The government forces are occupying places once held by the insurgents. General Rocha has destroyed the remnants of Demont Guerra's troops, and Sataeios has routed his cavalry.

LONDON, May 1.—Bishop Fessler, secretary of the recent Ecumenical Council, is dead.

Prince William Frederick Henry, of the house of Nassau, is dead.

Correspondents report several minor engagements, wherein the Carlists were successful. Marshal Serrano delays attacking the Carlists in Navarre until his forces reach twenty thousand.

It is rumored that Bismarck has sent material aid to Amadeus to the amount of ten million francs.

NAPLES, May 1.—No harm whatever has been done to Naples by the recent eruption of Mount Vesuvius, although there have been frequent shocks of earthquake and showers of ashes from the volcano, the latter fell to the depth of [illegible] inches in the city. The eruption is steadily abating in violence, and it is thought will shortly cease. The inhabitants of several villages at the base of the mountain, who fled from their homes at the approach of the lava, have returned and resumed work.

LONDON, May 2.—A telegram has been received in this city from Bombay announcing the safety of Dr. Livingstone.—The steamer Abydos, which carried the English Livingstone search expedition to Zanzibar, had arrived at Bombay from that place with intelligence that the great traveler was safe.

The Island of Zanzibar was recently visited by a terrible hurricane. One hundred and fifty vessels were sunk. Loss, ten millions.

Granville received Fish's second note yesterday. He stated officially that negotiations were proceeding favorably.

News has been received here of the foundering of the American schooner Brooks, in longitude 61. All on board were lost.

LONDON, May 3.—Advices received in this city by mail from Spain state that the priests are endeavoring to make the insurrection in that country a religious war. The government has called upon the inhabitants of Barcelona to deliver up all arms in their possession.

NAPLES, May 3.—A terrible hurricane has swept over the foot and slopes of Vesuvius, greatly damaging the villages and remaining crops.

The eruption of Mount Vesuvius has entirely ceased.

MADRID, May 4.—The latest information from the Province of Navarre is that hostilities have commenced between the insurrectionists commanded by Don Carlos, and the troops led by Marshal Serrano. General Revera is harassing the rear of the insurrectionary forces, who, it is said, are surrounded by loyal troops.

The band of Carlists under command of Rotundehon were completely defeated.

MADRID, May 5, evening.—A dispatch from San Sebastian, dated this afternoon, says the division under Marianos to-day completely defeated the Carlists concentrated in Navarre, after a conflict of nine hours. The troops carried the village of Carasa at the point of the bayonet. The whole Carlist center is captured. It is said that Don Carlos is a prisoner.

LONDON, May 5.—A serious riot took place in Klarkof, a large market town of South Russell, last week, caused by the interference of the police with the Easter amusements of the people. The fire engines were brought out to disperse the crowd by throwing water on them. This so exasperated the populace that they attacked the police and fire stations and gutted them. The Governor ordered out the troops, who were stoned by the mob, whereupon they fired, and many citizens were killed and wounded. The rioters then dispersed, and at last accounts the city was quiet, but under martial law.

MADRID, May 6.—Latest reports confirm the defeat of Don Carlos. Prisoners are constantly arriving at San Sebastian.

Don Carlos has been completely defeated, and is flying with two hundred adherents toward France. Thirty-eight Carlists were killed and seven hundred and forty-seven captured. The insurrection is regarded at an end.

LONDON, May 7.—Advices received here by telegraph from Australia state that heavy floods, which caused terrible loss of life, have occurred in Melbourne. Four hundred persons were drowned. Growing crops have also been greatly damaged.

EDINBURG, May 7.—A deputation of clergymen of the Scotch Church sailed to-day for America, to attend the General Assembly soon to be held in Detroit. Much interest is felt in the event, which is the first acknowledgment of the church in America.

THE Scientific American says it is now "impossible to construct a burglar-proof safe—for the thief, with his cylinders of compressed hydrogen and oxygen, can, in a few seconds, burn holes of any size in the hardest metals, his fire-drill enabling him, in a few minutes, to work his way into the strongest safe that ever was constructed."

TO CURE DIARRHEA, put a tablespoonful of wheat flour in a tumbler of water; beat until it foams, and drink immediately. If the patient is thirsty more water may be added. It should be taken four times a day before meal-time and on going to bed.

ADAM'S nativity has at last been discovered. He was, according to Darwin, a germ-man.

A PREACHER EMBARRASSED.

[The Rev. R. W. Bellamy sent us the following article, which was in the printer's hands when the fire came and consumed it. He writes us, Tucker's X Roads, Tennessee, March 2: Your favor of the twenty-fourth ultimo is on my table, and is very satisfactory. I cheerfully comply with your request for a duplicate of the article published some years ago in a religious paper published in Georgia, the name of which I do not remember.—Ed. Nashville Christian Advocate.]

The following sketch is taken from a little work by Mrs. Beauchamp, entitled "Camphellism not Christianity:"

Aunt Mehetabel was a Quakeress, and a maiden lady. She was immensely interested in such religious enterprises as fairs, sewing-circles and mite-societies. She thought she would be appreciated if she were a church member. But here was a difficulty. There was no Quaker society near, and no other people approved of her spiritual notion of baptism. But when Prof. Grey came along with his broad basis and easy terms she felt sure of accomplishing her end.

"Come along," said he, at the end of an harangue on the evils of creeds and confessions of faith, "and unite with us on the book: Come, make the good confession that Jesus is the 'Son of God.' We do not ask you to subscribe to any creed; your opinions are your own private property. We will not intrude on them. You can read your Bible and interpret it as you please. We cannot expect you to think as we do. We care nothing for opinions. Faith is what we want, and faith is summed up in these words: 'I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.'"

So Aunt Mehetabel came tripping up the aisle. She was asked if she believed Jesus Christ was the Son of God, to which she cheerfully responded: "Certainly I do, Friend Grey." So Grey referred to the case of the jailer, who was baptized the same hour of the night, and remarked that they would immediately proceed to the water to immerse Miss Perkins.

"Stop, Friend Grey; thee is too fast. I did not ask thee to do God's work for me. I was baptized long ago; it was when God poured out his Holy Spirit on me when I believed."

"But you have not been immersed."

"I think I have. This is my opinion; but you care nothing for opinions. I have got the faith, Friend Grey."

"We cannot receive you unless you are immersed."

"It is my opinion I have been. Thee would not take away my private property, would thee? Thee would not interpret the Bible for me, would thee?"

Miss Perkins' case was dismissed rather unceremoniously. She was crest-fallen. She was still to be the tail of the kite in the mites, fairs and sewing-circles.

The professor turned from this tough case to a young miss, whose pretty, innocent face was the very picture of pliancy. She was asked to make the good confession, which she did. He then began to make arrangements about her baptism, feeling sure of no trouble.

"O, sir," said she, "I was baptized when I was a baby. I wanted to join your church with Aunt Mehetabel. She said we could join and believe what we pleased—that you have not a creed."

"But we require you to be baptized."

"I believe I have been. I thought you would not require us to believe as you did; you talk so hard of creed-makers for doing this. We wanted to unite with you on the book."

Prof. Grey dismissed the meeting, but made an appointment for the following day. Aunt Mehetabel gave vent to her displeasure in the aisle, after service.

"I don't believe in this way of deceiving people—inviting folks up to unite on the book, and then wants to say what the book means. I see how it is; instead of uniting on the book, it is uniting on Campbellite interpretation of the book. It is uniting on Campbellism, after all—nothing else.

Prof. Grey's ears tingled as he went home. He heard many a smothered chuckle, accompanied with "unite on the book."

The next day he did not touch on the creeds, but talked of faith, the epitome of which he declared to be: "I believe Jesus Christ is the Son of God." "Now," said he, "you have faith. You believe Christ is the Son of God. There is not a man or woman in this house but believes this. Then," said he, "come along and be baptized for the remission of sins. Just take a few steps on this carpet, and you will secure your salvation. Do not wait for a change of heart. You will never secure this until you are baptized; but you will secure it then. Come, take God at his word.—'Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as wool.'"

As he continued to talk in the approved Bethany style, the audience was astonished to see a man named Hornback come up and give his hand. Now, Horuback was a noted pugilist. He was quarrelsome, and got into some difficulty or other every day, when he was sober enough. He had a stalwart frame, and looked like a veteran soldier, scarred and bruised as he was. Said he, as he took Grey's hand, before taking his seat: "I wish you would make a Christian out of me." There was a suppressed titter. "It would save me a heap of trouble. I cannot help taking a dram occasionally, and then I am sure to take it fisticuff with somebody." Grey hesitated. "O," said Hornback, "you mustn't refuse to make a Christian when you have a chance." Grey was determined not to be disconcerted this time. "My friend," said he, "do not be discouraged; I will say to you as Ananias said to Paul: 'Arise and be baptized, and wash away your sins.'" Every church that day went to see Hornback baptized. Said he, as he walked along with Grey, just before he got to the water: "I'm mighty wicked. Somehow fight is in me, and I can't help it. I would like to be a Christian." You say I will experience this change in baptism."

"Yes, you will," said Grey.

"Now," said Hornback, "if I feel just as devilish as ever after I am baptized, I will give you a whipping, sure as you are a born man. Nobody ever fooled Bill Hornback that way without getting paid for it."

Grey began to pull back, telling him he was not in a proper frame of mind to be baptized. "O," said Hornback, "come along. You can't be afraid to baptize me unless you know you have been lying about baptism's changing folks, and if you have, you deserve a thrashing for that, and so I will whip you any way." Just then several persons, seeing the professor's difficulty, stepped in between the two.

FROM THE WORK.

DeSoto, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: Will you permit me, through the columns of your valuable paper, to publish a brief account of our second quarterly meeting on Shuhuta circuit, Meridian district; also a short history of the whole circuit?

Shubuta is a new circuit, created at our last Mississippi Annual Conference out of a portion of Clark circuit. It embraces three small towns on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, to wit: Shubuta, DeSoto and Quitman. The church at Shuhuta contains about one hundred members, the church at DeSoto fifty, and the church at Quitman about twenty-five. At Shubuta we have a good framed church, well finished, and a very comfortable little parsonage just completed. The parsonage is rented out this year, as the preacher in charge has a house of his own near the center of the circuit, and prefers remaining at home. In DeSoto we worship in what is called a free meeting house—a house built by the citizens for all denominations to worship in. At Quitman we worship in the Baptist meeting house, our house having been burnt by the Yankees during the war.

But of the quarterly meeting more particularly. We commenced on Saturday, the twenty-seventh instant. Rev. W. B. Hines, our model presiding elder, was with us—as in duty bound—in good health, and ready for business. Preaching at eleven A. M.—a good attendance for the day and place. Conference in the afternoon, and preaching again at night. A good state of feeling, both in the forenoon and at night. Bro. Hines preached again on Sunday morning, and administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. In the afternoon we had an experience meeting, a profitable one, and at night he (Bro. Hines) preached again. Our sacramental and experience meetings were good meetings, but our meeting on Sunday night was perfectly overwhelming. During the delivery of the sermon the people sat still as death, and the point and force of the preacher's argument, and the absolutely irresistible character of his appeal, made both saint and sinner quake and fear. God came down, and for a little season his steppings were stately in our midst. Saints rejoiced, and sinners cried for mercy. The sermon, the ominous silence and stillness of the people, the descent of God, and then the gushings forth of an insuppressible heart-emotion, made the scene and the occasion truly sublime. And now, my brother, a religious work is begun here which will, I trust, result in great and long-continued good to the people of our little town and neighborhood. God be praised. Your brother,

P. H. NAPIER, P. C.

DESOTO, MISS., April 30, 1872.

GREEN FARM HIGH SCHOOL.

By a private note we learn that Rev. F. M. Grace, president of Hiwassee College, East Tennessee, will open a school for boys in Jones' Valley, near Birmingham, Alabama. Here is the opportunity for parents who are seeking a safe and healthful school for their boys. Bro. Grace is an accomplished educator, and a minister of our church. Green Farm High School is the name of the new institution.

We quote from the circular as follows:

The locality of this property is in the upper portion of Jones' Valley, famed for its beauty and fertility, ten miles north of Birmingham, Alabama. It is in the southern extremity of the Alleghanies, and in the midst of the great coal and iron deposits of Jefferson county. Extended forests, fruitful valleys, limpid waters, abundant orchards and good society characterize the vicinity, which has recently become accessible by the intersection of two great lines of railway from Montgomery and Meridian.

Having purchased this property with immediate reference to its adaptability to the purposes of a select boarding school, the subscriber will receive for the ensuing term of twenty weeks, from August 1, 1872, thirty boarders and no more, at the uniform rate of $100, or $20 per month for board and tuition.

The course of instruction will be adapted to the aims and wishes of the patron. For boys who intend going to college it will consist of Latin, Greek and mathematics, as far as the junior year. For those who desire to qualify themselves for a profession such training will be given as will facilitate the study of law or medicine. But as the large majority of boys sent to school desire only a business education, special attention will be paid to English branches and mathematics. Boys will be admitted of any age not under ten years, and in view of peculiar arrangements the younger boys will be included in the principal's family. The elder pupils are expected to have rooms by themselves and to wait on themselves.

THE endowment of Trinity parish, New York, is most munificent. The Rev. Dr. DePuy, of the New York Christian Advocate, in a paper on the "Religious Denominations in New York," read at the New York State Methodist Convention, December 5, says the endowment arose in this way: "Queen Anne, of England, early presented the corporation with a farm, formerly owned by a Dutch woman named Anneke Jans, and which covered that portion of the land extending from Vesey street (beginning near the lower corner of the Astor House) to Christopher street. The land was chiefly leased on long time, and is said now to be worth from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000. With the annuities from the annual rentals, Trinity has done an immense work in the building, or aiding in building, of other Episcopal churches."

DR. POISAL makes the following announcement in the last number of the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist:

We have the pleasure of announcing to our readers that we have associated with us the Rev. William S. Baird, of the Baltimore Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South. On the first instant he became a joint partner with the senior publisher and proprietor, and from this date the Episcopal Methodist will be conducted under the style and firm of Poisal & Baird.

IF you have been tempted to evil, flee from it; it is not falling into the water, but lying in it, that drowns.

LETTER FROM EAST TENNESSEE.

MR. EDITOR: I have scarcely fulfilled my promise to correspond with your paper; but what can a teacher find in the monotony of the school-room to interest the majority of readers? It has been said that a literary life, though one of little interest to the world, is nevertheless a life of intense excitement to the person himself; but the same may be said of the life of a farmer or of a merchant. East Tennessee is the most quiet corner of the United States, and this is the most quiet little nook in East Tennessee. True, we have one great thoroughfare within a few miles of us, but no one ever stops off, and what is it to us? If it were not for our daily mail we would be as effectually shut out from the world as if we were sealed up in a bag.

Our session is drawing to a close, and our Southern boys are getting impatient to get back to a sunnier clime. They will all go home stronger in body and in mind than when they came here, and, thank God, most of them with renewed hearts and affections. On last Sunday we recommended one of our students as a candidate for the ministry, and to-day another is to read his trial sermon before the presbytery of a neighboring church. Several others will make teachers or preachers, and we feel that this year the school has produced a good crop of young men.

This brings up the subject now agitating the public mind in Tennessee in reference to theological schools. The Baptists are about to move theirs from South Carolina to Tennessee, and Memphis, Nashville and Chattanooga are all bidding for it. So far Chattanooga is ahead, having made larger offers of land and money. Nashville unquestionably offers greater advantages in other respects, and it is fairly presumed that it will be the location of the Central University of our church. The discussion of the subject, now going on in the columns of the Christian Advocate between two of our Bishops, is exciting great interest, and, it is to be hoped, will finally settle the question in favor of a theological school. In my opinion the argument of Bishop Pierce necessarily leads to a reductio ad absurdum. If previous training is not required for the exercise of the ministry, why should it be for the practice of law or medicine, or any other profession? But if it is assumed that we already have the best school for ministerial training in the itinerancy, we reply that war is likewise the best field for the study of the military science, and the sick-bed for learning medicine, and the court room for the acquisition of a knowledge of the law; therefore that we should abolish all the law and medical and military schools on the continent, and trust our lives and property to the hazardous experiment of self-education in the various professions that have been created for our protection. Let it not be assumed that our argument would require a thorough education for all preachers, any more than it would for all in the other professions; but it does require that preachers should have at least an equal chance with the others. But few comparatively can avail themselves of these advantages, but let all be induced to do so who can, and the general body will be the gainer by them.

It is certain that the acquisition of knowledge increases the thirst for knowledge; and how can we encourage young men to study at all, without seeking to set the highest inducements before them? Unless we throw Christianity back on the uncertain sea of oral tradition, we cannot divorce the profession of teaching it from the use of letters. "These things are written for our instruction," and whoso does not master the text of his discourse can scarcely give any valuable instruction in connection therewith. But the discussion is in abler hands, and would not have been touched here but from the fact that it seems hitherto to have been neglected by your correspondents. One of the best articles on the subject, however, was furnished by a Mississippi man—Bro. Hunnicutt. One of my former pupils, a member of the Louisiana Conference, is one of the board of directors—on which I congratulate him.

Yours most respectfully,

F. M. GRACE.

THURSDAY, MAY 9, 1872.

THE FIRST SUNRISE.

There was no sun, but there was light,
The bonds of darkness rending;
There was no earth, but shores of night
With seas of day were blending;
And o'er the world, without a sound,
In grand, eternal silence bound,
The dim-lit flood extending.

God spake the word—up rose the earth,
The waters round it clinging;
And with glad wonder at its birth
The highest heavens were ringing:
Through all the world a sound went out,
The sons of God for joy did shout,
The morning stars were singing.

There fell a silence from on high,
And hush'd the wondrous story;
God spake; and sunrise drenched the sky,
And smote the mountains hoary.
Then burst from heaven a mighty song;
The sons of God, so bright and strong,
Gave unto him the glory!

Importance of Consistency in the Conduct of Ministers.

Mr. Editor: The position of a minister of the gospel is a fearfully responsible one—the most responsible, doubtless, ever filled by man. Other men have to do with the things of time, mainly, in their vocations, but a minister with eternal things. Because of the position he occupies his conduct is more closely watched by the world than that of other men, and less allowance is made for his imperfections and shortcomings than for those of others. Consequently an impropriety on the part of a minister does more harm to the cause of religion than the same thing done by a private member of the church. The church and the world expect—as they have a right to do—that a minister exhibit in his own every-day life the transforming, saving power of that religion which he recommends to others in his preaching. They expect his conduct out of the pulpit to conform to his preaching in the pulpit. A man may preach an excellent sermon, by which many good impressions are made, and then spoil it all by some impropriety in his conduct or conversation. Now, it cannot be expected that ministers will be able at all times to satisfy all parties. Some men are unreasonable—they require too much. They seem to forget that ministers are "men of like passions with themselves," and not angels. Besides, what satisfies one will not satisfy another. But though we are men, and, after we have done our best, cannot possibly expect to come up to the standard of piety and of duty set up for us by many, yet it is our duty to exert ourselves to the utmost to reach the highest possible degree of excellence in spirit, conduct and conversation.

Some injure their usefulness by a spirit of levity and an unguarded manner of talking. They preach a good sermon, which, perhaps, fastens conviction upon some heart, but in the presence of the person thus seriously impressed, it may be, they soon afterward conduct themselves in such an unbecoming manner as to drive away all serious impressions, and in some cases, perhaps, make infidels of the very persons who, by their preaching, were brought so near the kingdom. I remember reading of a case of this kind. I do not think it is necessary for a minister to put on a long face, and look sad and gloomy, just because he is a minister. He has as much right as anybody to be cheerful, but his cheerfulness should be a serious, Christian cheerfulness, and not be allowed to run into levity. I have often thought that we sometimes allow ourselves to go too far in this direction when several of us get together, as when on the way to and from Conference, and while there. If ministers only were present, it would not matter so much; but frequently wicked men are present, and I am satisfied that what may not be particularly injurious to us does cause others to stumble. Sometimes too, I fear, some, in consequence of their peculiar temperament, and of not having sufficiently freed themselves from the power of old habits, allow themselves to go a little further than mere levity.

There is another thing, which may or may not be wrong per se—I will give no opinion as to that—but which may possibly do harm under some circumstances; I mean smoking. Whether this is wrong or not, some think it wrong, and they dislike to see ministers indulging in it, especially on the streets. I have heard remarks made about this practice. Quite a gifted minister was assisting the pastor of a city church in carrying on a revival meeting. He would preach to the delight and edification of many of the congregation, but then he would be seen on the streets, in the intervals, with a pipe or cigar in his mouth, to the disgust of some. Is there not "a more excellent way?" If ministers must smoke, would it not be better to do it more privately? Perhaps it might be as well not to smoke at all; then no harm could possibly result to others or to religion from this source.

Again, I have a few times heard men speak of having seen ministers publicly drinking ardent spirits. I would fain hope this is a mistake, or at least that, if all the circumstances were known, the accused parties would be found to be somewhat excusable—were sick, and were only taking the article as a medicine. But I do not know that there is any mistake, or that in some cases there are any palliating circumstances. I fear that some are not as careful as they should be. We certainly should never drink ardent spirits, publicly or privately, as a beverage; and if it is necessary to use it as a medicine, let it be done privately. The use of spirituous liquors is becoming such a terrible evil in our land that we as ministers should discountenance and oppose it in every proper way in our power. In this and in everything we should "abstain from all appearance of evil."

EFFICIENCY AND INEFFICIENCY.

Mr. Editor: Much is being said of late respecting the proposed great Central University—the want of the church, in relation to the status of the ministry, compared with the advanced age. Many good things have been said for and against the University. Bishop Pierce strikes some healthy blows in the right direction in his articles in the Nashville Advocate. Perhaps a middle ground would be nearer correct, however. I wish, heartily, that all your preachers could have a first-class university education, without destroying the spirit's unction—the power and demonstration of the spirit.

But I am not going to write about a university, but something of more general interest and utility, at least for the present. We have many very efficient pastors and preachers; others who are not so much so. Why are not all alike efficient? Is the difference in their educational advantages the cause? I think not. I think the history of the church shows this cannot be the cause. Now, in my judgment, one of the most sensible articles I have seen published is by the pen of J. M. Boland, of the North Alabama Conference, in the Nashville Advocate of March 23. I wish that article could be read and digested by every member in our connection. The great cause of inefficiency and want of qualification is clearly set forth. Under the present law of discipline no man can get into the pastorate who is not prepared to advance himself in literary and scientific attainments indefinitely, if the means to procure the necessary outfit for study is furnished him. The trouble is, most of us are poor, and our charges do not pay us enough to supply ourselves with the books and periodicals. We cannot prepare ourselves to meet the demands of the advanced age for want of these indispensable sources of information, and not because we have not the capacity or educational advantages. As evidence, take those charges that pay their pastors liberal salaries. It is a rare thing they complain of inefficiency or want of qualification. But those charges that stint their pastor have, or imagine they have, cause for complaint. This is natural. If a horse be stinted till he becomes very lean his strength fails. He would have carried the plow deep through the soil, or the well-loaded cart up the hill; but the muscular fiber is dry and stiff; his strength is gone; he cannot. Give him plenty of food, and rub him well, and strength and elasticity will return. Then he will not fail ordinarily to do the desired service. So the preacher can no more overcome the difficulty of contending with gaunt poverty, and assume that cheerful elasticity of spirits so necessary for his efficiency, if unsupported, than the horse can maintain his strength without food. No man can help depression who has to support himself and family upon a precarious credit—a credit dependent upon a most uncertain promise of money to pay with in the fall, when he has had to endure so many failures of such promises. When cares are oppressing heart and mind, how can he solve those questions and digest those thoughts upon which his qualification for the pulpit depends? How can he bring them out clearly and attractively before his people? He may be patient, may suffer long, endure hardness, but if he feels no corroding solicitude that disqualifies him in a measure, he must be more than most of us. Much depends upon his visits among the people. But does a man want to visit—does he, can he feel his visits are appreciated—when he is really in want—the people know it—are able, but will not relieve him? Ah! but he must go, whether he feels like it or not! Very true. The preacher must go any way. But if he is fit to preach he cannot divest himself of self-respect. Often, when his duty as pastor impels him, self-respect restrains him.

Now there are two things always coupled with a proper appreciation of the ministry—liberality, and what we will call cordiality. The one is manifested in the proportion of pay to means; the other may be expressed perchance, in part, by the hearty shake of the hand, and words of cheer and welcome, with which we are greeted. But the soul, speaking through the eye, often reveals a state of feeling different from the external signs. If, as is often the case, the pastor fails to receive either, he must be possessed of rare tact, indeed, if he succeeds very well. He soon learns to know his people, and to measure their appreciation of the ministry; so that when he appears before his congregation, under such circumstances, his heart and mind are trammeled. Should it be expected his effort there would be very winning when he feels he has not the sympathy of his hearers? His sermons must necessarily be stale thought—dry and insipid.

Many a preacher, whose soul is athirst for knowledge, is kept a novice for life, perhaps, for want of means to procure the implements of study, when, if he had it, he would become, if not a star of splendid magnitude, at least respectable. Besides, want of means compels him to dig, carry wood and water, when he ought to be at his studies. I have known cases where they have had, in case of a wife's sickness, to do their own cooking and washing. Of course he is inefficient and disqualified.

Now, let me say to your readers, if they would have efficient preachers and pastors, let them learn to show a high appreciation of their services. Do not compel them to feel the burden of poverty always oppressing them, so as to hamper the heart's and mind's action. Do not force them to be always begging you for the pittance you pay them as quarterage. Meet them with a heart, and they will give you in return the very best service they are capable of performing, and you will see them improving constantly. But let the heart show itself in right actions, not in words. Ah! if you knew the burden of sorrow that neglect inflicts upon the heart of your pastor you would not wonder at his failures in the pulpit and in the family circle. Pay your preacher, and he will pay you.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

SALLIE M. WHITE.

Directly after the death of this dear lady, May 9, 1871, I was requested to write some notice of her life, and should have done so, but delayed in order to obtain the facts necessary to an estimate of her religious and literary character.

Sallie Malone Wynn was born in Limestone county, Alabama, October 5, 1834, the daughter of Hon. John J. Wynn. She was converted and joined the Methodist Church when but six years of age. In 1854 she became the wife of the Rev. B. F. White, and soon after came with him to Louisiana, where she remained, excepting a year spent in Europe, until the time of her death. She was the mother of six children, of whom only two survive, a daughter and a son. It was at her own home, near Opelousas, during the war, that I first began to know her. She was then at the head of a school for young ladies, which she had successfully established, and was in the full beauty of womanhood. In conversation she gave evidence of her literary taste and quenchless thirst for knowledge; yet one scarcely could have supposed that she was so laborious a writer and frequent contributor to the periodicals of the South, religious and other. That she was working daily at legends, poems, ballads and the lighter style of poetical composition I have now the evidence in a folio of three hundred pages, which lies before me, filled with original pieces. The variety of her themes is only less surprising than the number of lines written. She excelled in poetic legends, one or two of which—"Zurich," "Einsiedeln"—appeared in the Weekly Times of this city, while she was in Switzerland. Her residence on Lake Leman, and in sight of the Alps, and her visit to Paris at the time of the Exposition, doubtless added rich stores to a mind of such poetic susceptibility, and the trip to Europe and back must have greatly enlarged her experience in the domain of nature and art. But, alas! on the way home she contracted a consumption which put a period to a life which was only but just fairly entering upon the full possession of its powers.

It is impossible to read this folio manuscript which she has left us without admiring the manner in which this child of Genius steadily struggled during her life to realize a high ideal of poetic sentiment and expression. Had she had the advantage, in early years, of severe mental training, she would have greatly excelled as a poet. It seems to have been the dream of her childhood and the romance of her youth to see the world and tell it all in verse. In a piece of eighteen stanzas, on "Westminster Abbey," there is this one:

"And I, who was once a thoughtless child,
Beneath the beech tree's drooping bough,
Listening to woodland streamlet wild,
With summer's soft breath on my brow,
Sat reading of this sacred pile—
Have crossed the wide, wide sea the while,
And, roaming through the Abbey aisle,
Have walked with slow and reverend tread
Where Newton rests his honored head—
I, who was once a thoughtless child."

She was a devoted wife and mother. Of a cheerful, uniform disposition, she was beloved of all who knew her. An estimate of her religious character I give in the words of her pastor, the Rev. John Wilkinson, who knew her intimately, and often visited her after her return from abroad, until just before her death:

"I made the acquaintance of Sister White about the time that the disease which terminated in her death first manifested itself in her—three years ago. For two years of this time I visited her frequently as her pastor, and always derived profit therefrom. Though generally downcast throughout her sickness, and troubled with doubts respecting her meetness for heaven, there were times when she was full of hope, and enjoyed the prospect of eternal rest. One thing, however, was always noticeable in her: she relished religious conversation and devotional services. The lovely qualities of patience and meekness and quietness developed in her very fully under the sacred molding of affliction, and gave a sweet mellowness to the closing chapter of her life. In her religious character I would say she was distinguished for tenderness of conscience more than for ripeness of faith; she was one of the "poor in spirit" rather than of those who "rejoice always."—Taking her all in all, she was one of the choicest Christian women I ever visited. To me her memory is precious as one of the sainted dead."

A few weeks before she died she went on a visit to her brother, Robert Wynn, in Benton county, Mississippi. There she sleeps. When she knew that she was really dying, she raised her hands and exclaimed: "Thank the Lord!" Her last words were: "Give my dying love to husband and Brother John."

I close this imperfect tribute to one whose memory is precious to many friends in her own words—an extract from "Lines on Mrs. Hemans":

"I've pictured to myself thine earnest eye,
Gazing at sunset hour far, far away
On clouds that floated in the distant sky,
Above the colors of departing day.

"I've pictured thee, with woman's trusting heart,
'Watching the stars out' by the bed of pain;
When hope beamed brightly only to depart,
And wrung the soul with agony again.

"And thou art gone to claim thy meed of love,
Where care and sorrow come not evermore.
With kindred spirits in a world above
Thou art immortal on a happier shore."

OUR EXAMPLE.

What is its tendency? Either good or evil. St. Paul says: "For none of us liveth to himself." We are, therefore, responsible to a higher source for the blessings of life, whether used for a good or an evil purpose. There is no thought more subtle, none which so readily and effectually takes possession of the mind and heart, none which so unwittingly deludes and leads astray, as that idea which causes us to estimate the tenure of our natural life, with its attendant blessings, as something at our own option, under our own control, or as the result of human skill and ingenuity. Is it not strange that we should be so loth to recognize the legitimacy of God's claims upon our time, our talent, and to a portion, at least, of life's earnings? Does not each day, yea hour, come to us with renewed tokens of his love? Are not his blessings, in every conceivable shape, lavished upon us? What has he withheld which would conduce to our happiness or minister to our necessities? How beautifully was this principle of faith exemplified in the life and character of the Apostle Paul! His faith met no denial, his tongue faltered not in the acknowledgment of that homage due his Maker; hence he admonishes us in language not only pointed and explicit, but forcible and unequivocal: "For none of us liveth to himself." Possessing a heart deeply imbued with the Spirit of his God, he stood up as an avenger of his rights, a vindicator of that pure and elevated principle of faith and Christian meekness which defies the effrontery of worldly pride and caprice, and by the preventing grace of God overrides temptation. The influence of example had doubtless been felt and appreciated by him, and he too often, perhaps too plainly, saw the tendency and influence wrought upon others by it. Nor can it be said that he was either ignorant or unmindful of the relative duties of man to his fellow-man. He understood the great diversity of constitutional temperaments, the endless and indescribable phases of human character; he had doubtless carefully weighed and estimated the tendency of an evil thought, or of an idle word or gesture. Reader, do you not to-day feel the strength and power of his example? Indeed, is not a life so pure, a character so exalted, worthy of our emulation? Is then not to-day, at this moment, some untold, unheeded influence for evil or good exerted upon your life? Can you not turn, with either shame or pride, to many incidents in your early life when your course was decided, often too quickly, by an inadvertent look or gesture which, to your mind, indicated the approbation of either parent or friend? How very susceptible is childhood or youth! How little encouragement is needed to bias their minds! Is it not too often the logic of inclination which stimulates them to action? They, however, as well as persons of mature years, look for practical results. When not sustained by a good example, it may be said there is neither virtue nor wisdom in precept. Who has not seen the genius and pathos of eloquence fail to reach the end which is often quickly met by a practical illustration? Who has not felt the strength and influence of an upright walk and a godly conversation? Is it not the consistency of our walk which gives tone to character, fortifies life, and gives beauty and spiritual power to example. But, upon the other hand, is it not a want of Christian integrity which deteriorates moral worth, lowers the standard of spiritual piety, makes a stumbling block of our example, and too often shipwreck of our faith?

Preachers and Advocates as Advertising Mediums.

Mr. Editor: Your pardon, and that of all whom it may concern, if I chance to offend in word or doctrine. I like your paper, and there are some who, with me, regard it as the best family paper of all the Advocates. We like it for both what it contains, and what it does not contain—in excess. These excesses consist chiefly in advertisements and fulsome compliments. Some Advocates I know of are more than half taken up with these two articles, which seem to have become staples. Now these have not grown so important with you as yet, and I believe they will not. You mean to maintain its Christian feature pre-eminent—not its advertising feature. There are some that hold out inducements to advertisers, some who urge Methodists to patronize them because they are the best advertisers. The plan adopted to obtain advertisements is to tell how largely they circulate; and to obtain the circulation by telling how largely they advertise. Now I have known preachers to become walking advertisements for several dry goods houses. One house would put the latest style of hat on his head. (A merchant once offered me a hat, saying: "Just take it to give the style the go.") Another gives him a coat, another a pair of boots, and so on until at Conference the unknowing one imagine he gets the largest salary that is paid; but there are others who at a glance see that the suit is made up from several stocks—i. e., the preacher is their walking advertisement. There is currying of favor in both directions here. The merchant sends word to Conference that the preacher is immensely popular, and he grows in the estimation of the dignitaries whom he invites to his station. These prove, like Sheba's queen, that the half was not told of those merchants on the person of the clerical drummer. They go away, and write flaming letters to the editor, who has asked them to "say a word for the paper;" whereupon the editor "says a word" for them, adding, sotto voce: "He sends us ten new subscribers, and the business cards of the four most substantial and obliging firms. See his letter and their cards, which we take pleasure in inserting." On reading his letter you will find that Joseph's coat of many colors isn't a circumstance in the way of variety. There is a mock humility couched in the first sentence, "Having at the urgent solicitation," etc., and a mock zeal, "and for the cause of God," etc. Then follows the account of such power in pulpit eloquence; such a blessed revival, conducted with such decorum that the best citizens were taken in! (We are never told that the vilest sinners are subjects of these manifestations of power.) Their names are given, and this and that prominent merchant or doctor or lawyer or planter appears in the list, so that character is given to the church there! Now I pause, in the name of my Master and religion, to ask: Is not such language simply a scandal and reproach to Christ? Sir, I thought religion gave character to men, and not men to religion.

But I did not begin this article to write a philippic or a satire. I don't object to Christian Advocates advertising to a reasonable extent, and, as I said, I don't think your paper has yet transgressed the limits of reason. But when a paper is more than half advertisements and complimentary notices, whatever name it hoists, I call it an advertising sheet. There is no sin in publishing an advertising sheet; but I do think it wrong to call it a Christian Advocate, and endeavor to bring it under the broad wing of church patronage. If a merchant gives a preacher a suit of clothes he is not necessarily a walking advertisement. If the merchant expects only the preacher's thanks and good will, the preacher may and often ought to accept his offer. But I will invariably decline the offer of a man who whispers to me: "Just take it to give it the go." My object in writing is to enter a caveat against a growing evil, and I was called to take up the pen last evening by contrasting a religious and a secular paper which came together. The secular paper had fifty-six closely printed columns, and not an advertisement. The religious paper had twenty-two columns out of forty-eight occupied by advertisements, six by obituaries, two in urging the claims of the paper, two to letter-writers, dealing in small wit at each other's expense, and the balance made up of indifferent or borrowed matter, except four columns of original "copy" on an important topic. I submit the question: "Is that paper a Christian Advocate?"

SENIORS AND JUNIORS.

Mr. Editor: An invidious distinction is sometimes, in some quarters, sought to be drawn between these two classes of our ministers. The request often comes up from circuits and stations: "Send us a young man." In securing accommodations for our recent District Conference, one gentleman said to me: "I will accommodate two; but send me the latest editions." I was stationed in Yazoo City when but twenty-three years of age, but a report reached there before me that I was an old man and had six children, and they were about to dismiss me in a summary manner till the true state of the case became known. But is this distinction founded in wisdom and truth? We do not make it in any other calling of life. An old farmer is supposed to know more about his business than one just beginning in agricultural life. The services of an old physician are generally more sought after than those of one inexperienced in the practice of medicine. A lawyer generally increases in popularity as such as long as he continues in the practice of his profession. Why should not the same be the case with the minister of the gospel, especially if he continues his studies and keeps abreast with the times?

It occurs to me that a sickly sentiment has developed on this subject. And this, I am sorry to say, is sometimes fostered by juniors. See the articles in the Nashville Christian Advocate from "Junior" last year. See also a resolution that was offered in an Annual Conference last fall, censuring an old man because he preferred complaints against the official administration of a young minister. Now I am a junior, but I have no sympathy with this sentiment, for the following reasons:

1. These old men whom we are disposed to push aside or lay on the shelf were, many of them, pioneers in this country. They have labored, and we have entered into their labors. The churches we serve, the parsonages we live in, and the salaries we receive are the results of their self-sacrificing toil.

2. We who are now young will get old by and by; and a younger class of ministers will appear on the stage, when the very sentiment that we are now fostering will circumscribe us, and make way for our juniors.

3. These old veterans of the cross are dear to the great Head of the Church, and he cannot look with indifference upon our conduct when we needlessly afflict their feelings by thus pushing them aside for a younger and less worthy class of men.

In all candor, therefore, do I protest against this growing evil among us. Let us cherish the seniors, sit at their feet and learn of them, and appropriate the mellowing influence of their mature piety.

Junior.

We fail to compare justly the life of the man who does much with the life of the man who does little—greatly to the disparagement of the former one. The man who does much, in whose life there is much living, must commit considerable errors, and must run a much greater chance of some errors being discovered and made known.—Arthur Helps.

THURSDAY, MAY 9, 1872.

THE TURN OF THE YEAR.

BY GEORGE MACDONALD.

I.

A gentle wind of western birth,
From some far summer sea.
Wakes daisies in the wintry earth,
Wakes thoughts of hope in me.

The sun is low; the paths are wet,
And dance with frolic hail;
The trees, whose spring-time is not yet,
Swing sighing in the gale.

Young gleams of sunshine peep and play;
Thick vapors crowd between;
'Tis strange that on a coming day
The earth will all be green.

The north wind blows, and blasts and raves,
And flaps his snowy wing:
Back I toss thy bergs on arctic waves,
Thou canst not stay our spring.

II.

Up comes the primrose, wondering;
The snowdrop droopeth by;
The holy spirit of the spring
Is working silently.

Sweet-breathing odors gently wile
Earth's other children out;
On Nature's face a hopeful smile
Is flickering about.

When earth lay hard, unlovely, dull,
And life within her slept,
Above her heaven grew beautiful,
And forth her beauty crept;

And though tears fall, as fall they will,
Smiles wander into sighs,
Yet if the sun keep shining still,
Her perfect day will rise.

III.

The sky is smiling over me,
Hath smiled away the frost,
Clothed with young green the patient lea,
With buds the woods embossed.

The trees yet shut not out the sky,
It sees down to the flowers;
They lift their beauty fearlessly,
They hide in leafy bowers.

This day is yours, sweet birds—sing on;
The cold is all forgot;
Ye had a dream, but it is gone:
Pain that is past, is not.

Joy that was past, is come again;
And if the summer brings
New care, it is a loving pain,
That broods instead of sings.

IV.

Blow on me, wind, from west and south;
Sweet summer-spirit, blow!
Come like a kiss from dear child's mouth,
Who knows not what I know.

The earth's perfection cometh soon;
Ours lingereth alway—
We have a spring-time, have a moon,
No sunny summer-day.

Rose-sprinkled eve, gold-branched morn,
May still poor Nature's sighs;
To us a higher hope is born—
We rest in that we rise.

But at the last a sapphire day
All over us will bow;
And man's heart, full of sunlight, say:
"Lord, 'tis thy summer now."

Sympathy With Human Nature.

"Ma, were you ever a boy?" His ma had not thought of that when she sat him in the corner to wriggle and twist and almost suffocate with the noise he was not permitted to make. What mischief parents sometimes brew for themselves, and their children too, by not making home pleasant, and giving their nature a chance to caper. It is the law of all life to express itself. The birds twitter and sing, and the lambs frisk and skip, just because they cannot help it. God himself, the head of all being, blessed forevermore, finds his bliss in the expression of his nature—the free flow of his infinite fullness. Exuberance is better than dullness. A humdrum household, with older folks always squelching the fun, has driven many a boy out to find a worse type in worse places. The best and happiest families, after all, are not always the most proper and sedate; but those where the parents retain enough of their youth to mingle with the children in their glee, as Luther did—lubricating the wheels of their own life occasionally with the oil of gladness from these God-giving wells. The best doctor's stuff for headache, overwork and dyspepsia—mental, moral and physical—is a little house music of the children's composing, just after tea; or a spoonful of sunshine, skimmed and swallowed fresh from their brimming faces. But—I have seen a whole herd of cattle, on a bridge, jump right over a streak of light which lay invitingly across their path, instead of tickling their sides with its warmth, as they might.

Young Christians often excite fears in older ones by what seems a manner too light and trifling. Perhaps it is such. And yet I have a great deal of sympathy with human nature. That tree will shed many of its spring buds before it settles down to its summer work; but after the fleecy shower will come the fruit. The leap and play of the fountain, that sometimes sends it over the brim, is better infinitely than the stagnancy of the standing pool. We know a good woman whose natural vivacity has all her life been a source of regret to her, and been mourned over as an infirmity; and yet it has only been a charming vail thrown over her piety, rendering it more graceful and attractive. We cannot tell what these young Christians may become who are as yet untutored by Providence and grace, or how much wheat will be found in the bottom of the bushel after the chaff is blown away. Dr. Payson trained all his converts to a most strict and serious piety; but very many of them fell away. His successor found better results from more genial methods. The fact is, piety is not a Dutch garden, where all natures can or must be trimmed into the same shape. To be beautiful they must grow in variety. Abraham and Sarah laughed when the angel told them his pleasant message, and were not rebuked for it. It was just a play of nature that they could not help; in fact, of which Sarah was unconscious. One of the best elders now in the church of Christ is, and always has been, a man of great vivacity and playfulness. Sorrow has plowed his forehead, but it has destroyed none of the genial springs of his nature. Open and large-hearted as a barn door through which loaded teams may pass, the very type of his piety is the cause of its wide influence. How much better such a spirit in its perennial freshness than those dry, hard specimens, with not a drop of native juice about them; or those faces, such as we sometimes see, looped up at all the corners like Peter's sheet, as if for fear something inconsistent or improper should slip out.

A change has taken place in the religious thought of the age, and not for the worse. Some things in the life of Jesus have made a new impression; his boyhood, his humanity, and mode of dealing with humanity. We want, it is true, even foremost, more of Jesus than this human side. We want the divine and blessed Savior, heading the procession of humanity down to the grave and up into his Father's presence a ransomed host, and ever living to make intercession for us. It is this deep and ineradicable want that has brought Hepworth and others out from Unitarianism into the orthodox ranks. But we want also the sweetening influences of his life, and that text: "We have not an High Priest that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities." These infirmities, they may be just a weakness of stem that makes the head of the grain bend before the little winds of life, without injuring its real growth. They may become, perchance, a keen sickle, cutting all down, as in Peter's case. But Christ has a tender feeling for human nature, and that side of it, its infirmities. The Forgiver of sins may certainly be expected to do so. And surely it is for a lesson, and not for nothing, that we have the lives of such men as David and Peter spread out, with all their spots and blurs, upon the sacred page. After all, there was nothing of the Judas make about them. And the divine tenderness for them, how striking! If there is one desirable lesson more than another yet to be learned from the life of Christ and the minutiæ of the gospel, is it not sympathy for human nature? Outside of the kingdom, tenderness; inside of the kingdom, tenderness. Let that young apple tree and that young pear tree grow, and grow freely, as God made them, and be careful how you trim. Let Martha and Mary live as sisters, but go their own way. Mr. Episcopalian, let your Methodist brother alone if he wants to shout. Seek to constrain no one to be other than he really is, sin excepted; and let the one growing, pervading spirit be sympathy, charity, love.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE BIRTH OF AN ICEBERG.

I can imagine no more grand and imposing spectacle than the birth of an iceberg; and we have now, I think, gone far enough in the examination of glaciers and their movements to contemplate such a spectacle, which, whatever it may seem to the reader, was to me most thrilling. It did not happen in connection with the Panther, and may at first, therefore, seem to be a little out of place; but as it serves my purpose, I make free to use it, by way of illustration.

The scene was in a fiord ten times wider than that of Sermitsialik, though not much longer. Unlike that of Sermitsialik, it was studded with islands and shoal places. The glacier which terminated it was twenty miles across, although not quite uniformly; for the ice had poured down into the sea, and, while having blotted out some of the islands, it had barely touched others; otherwise the coast-line of ice was perfect and continuous. The islands and shoal places in the fiord arrest the icebergs; and within ten miles or more of the glacier it is almost impossible to go. With great difficulty I came within five, in a boat. Farther I could not force my way by any possibility; and accordingly we made the land and climbed a lofty hill for a view.

The fiord which I thus describe is known as the fiord of Ankpadlartok, a native word signifying "the place of the red rocks." I had gone up the fiord from Uperuavik to the hut of a hunter, who was the bestyrere of a small settlement of that name belonging to the Upernavik district.

It was a grand spectacle that met my eye as I stood upon the hill-top overlooking the fiord, with its thousands of icebergs; its dark rocky islands, and the immense quantity of loose ice which filled up the space between the bergs and islands, until there was scarcely a patch of water to be seen anywhere as large as a good-sized duck-pond. Very different from the fiord of Sermitsialik, where there were no islands nor shoals to arrest the ice in its progress down the fiord.

I was accompanied by the bestyrere of Aukpadlartok, whose name was Philip. We stood together looking at the glacier and the great sea of ice which stretched away into the interior, blending mountains and valleys into a vast plain, when Philip said, "Listen! the glacier is going to 'calve;'" for that is the name by which they distinguish the breaking off of a fragment.

I heard a loud report, but I could not at once distinguish the source of it. An instant afterward it was repeated, now louder than before. It resembled the first warning sound of a coming earthquake.

Philip had detected the spot whence the sound proceeded, and said: "Look! it is rising."

I could now see that a portion of the glacier was being lifted by the water. A great wave was rolled back with this upward movement, and dashed fiercely against the icebergs that lay farther down the fiord. Another instant, and the sound, which was before so deep and loud, broke through the air with a crash that was like the discharge of heavy artillery near at hand. I knew now that a crack had opened in the ice-stream, and that a mass had been disengaged.

The position of the crack was quickly apparent, and we could see that a fragment of enormous proportions had been set at liberty. It first reared itself aloft as if it were some huge leviathan of the deep induced with life, and was sporting its unwieldy bulk in the hitherto undisturbed waters. The crack had now opened wide. The detached fragment plunged forward; the front, which had been rising, then sunk down, while the inner side rose up, and volumes of water that had been lifted with the sudden motion poured from its sides, hissing, into the foaming and agitated sea.

Thus an iceberg had been born.

It would be impossible with mere words alone to convey any adequate idea of the action of this new-born child of the Arctic frosts. Think of a solid lump of ice, a third of a mile deep, and more than half a mile in lateral diameter, hurled like a mere toy away into the water, and set to rolling to and fro by the impetus of the act—as if it were Nature's merest foot-ball—now down one side, until the huge bulk was nearly capsized; then back again; then down the other side once more, with the same unresisting force; and so on, up and down, and down and up, swashing to and fro for hours before it comes finally to rest. Picture this, and you will have an image of power not to be seen by the action of any other forces upon the earth.

The disturbance of the water was inconceivably fine. Waves of enormous magnitude were rolled up with great violence against the glacier, covering it with spray; and billows came tearing down the fiord, their progress marked by the crackling and crumbling ice, which was everywhere in a state of wildest agitation for the space of several miles. Over the smaller icebergs the water broke completely, as if a tempest were piling up the seas and heaving them fiercely against the shore. Then, to add still further to the commotion thus occasioned, the great wallowing iceberg, which was the cause of it all, was dropping fragments from its sides with each oscillation, the reports of the rupture reaching the ear above the general din and clamor. Other bergs were set in motion by the waves, and these also dropped pieces from their sides; and at last, as if it were the grand finale of the piece—the clash of cymbals and the big bass-drum of nature's grand orchestra—a monstrous berg near the middle of the fiord split in two, and, above the sound of breaking waters and falling ice, this last disruption filled the air with a peal that rang among the bergs and crags, and, echoing from hill to hill, died away only in the void beyond the mountain tops; while to the noisy tune the icebergs of the fiord danced their wild, ungainly dance upon the waters.

It was many hours before this state of wild unrest was succeeded by the calm which had preceded the commencement of it; and when at length the iceberg that had been born came quietly to rest, and the other icebergs had ceased their dance upon the troubled sea, and the waves had ceased their lashings, it seemed to me that, in beholding this birth of an iceberg, I had beheld one of the most sublime exhibitions of the great forces of nature. It was in truth a convulsion. The Land of Desolation, by Isaac I. Hayes, M. D.

Ignorance of the Rising Generation.

I sat by, as silently as a woman could be expected to do, in the circumstances, the other evening, and heard a talk on church and Sabbath school work, between two persons who are zealous laborers in both. The marvel to an unsophisticated listener was how, with such varied and magnificent appliances for the achievement of the purpose at which they aimed; such accuracy and strength of machinery; such skill and fidelity on the part of those who guided it, the coming of the millennium could be postponed beyond a decade at most, and that only to allow the few incorrigible and hoary sinners who have slipped through mesh and wheel to fill up the measure of their obduracy, and round off their unprofitable lives. Missions, districts, colporteurs and Bible readers; ragged and industrial schools; "homes" for the homeless, and all who are ever likely to be; asylums for the vicious, as well as for the afflicted; reformatories for men, women and children; "infant bands," and classes—there was sublimity in the sweep of the million-twigged besom, which, to the unpracticed eye, seemed to be clearing the filth and cobwebs from the dear old earth that has waited groaningly from Adam's last day in Eden until now, "for the manifestation of the sons of God."

I tried, by and by, to say as much; stammering under the weight of the thought.

"And yet," said the senior of the co-workers—a gray-haired but a "progressive" man; one fully alive to the needs of the hour, and ready to avail himself of the most efficient means for supplying them—"it is my deliberate conviction that the rising generation, the vast band of youths manipulated by this faultless machinery, will be found, upon examination, to be not only less firmly rooted and grounded in faith than were their forefathers, but absolutely more ignorant of scriptural history and teachings. I am as loth to believe this as you are," as one auditor exclaimed incredulously, "but I have made the subject a study for years. In my capacity as superintendent of a Sabbath school, and a teacher of more than one large Bible class, I have put the matter fairly to the test, besides comparing notes with my fellow-workmen. Let me cite a few examples out of many to show what I mean.

"I have a young lady of eighteen in my class. She is sprightly, well educated, (speaking after the manner of men,) an accomplished musician, and has been for two years a communicant in our church. The subject of the lesson last Sabbath was the Crucifixion.

"I asked her: 'What words did the Savior utter upon the cross?'

"'Really, I do not remember at this moment,' she said, politely apologetic.

"Can you recall nothing which the Redeemer said in that awful hour when he paid the penalty of our sins—of yours and mine! I persisted.

"She looked embarrassed—regretful—always courteous.

"'I am ashamed to say, sir, that the exact language has entirely escaped my memory!'

"Without comment I passed the question on. It was stopped by the fourth girl below her in the line, who inquired, diffidently: 'Didn't he say: "I thirst?"'

"Three years ago I had a class of twelve young ladies committed to my care in the absence of their teacher, whom I knew to be capable and faithful. Six out of the twelve did not know that the 'New Jerusalem' meant heaven; could not recollect having read of it in Revelation; ten out of the dozen were ignorant that there was any difference between Apocrypha and Apocalypse, and but one could repeat, or owned that she had ever heard the text: 'Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion,' etc. This one pleased me from the beginning of the lesson by the correctness and grace of her replies, and when she had repeated the verse at my request, a pert miss at the other end of the class cried out: 'She ought to know! she is the minister's daughter!'

"'Neglected!' did you say? Every one of them has attended Sabbath school from the time she could walk and talk; been put, in regular succession, through the hopper of infant department, Scripture lessons and Bible class; had heard the words of God faithfully expounded from the pulpit."

"And been prayerfully instructed by Christian parents at home?" interrogated I, more eagerly than politely.

"You have touched the core of the evil," was the answer. Yet the parents of the most of these girls were professing Christians—maintaining a creditable position in church and society. The mistake of this age is undue trust in machinery. I am persuaded that the canker is far more deeply seated than we are willing to believe—even those of us who have taken the alarm. Some examples of this which have come under my observation would be amusing were they not lamentable. Marion Harland.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE LEAVEN SPREADING.—There has recently been a secession of one hundred and ninety-two members of the Roman Catholic congregation of Konigsberg, with their families, to Old Catholicism.

THE Jews of Birmingham have formed an anti-Jewish Conversion Society. They complain that poor Jews are bribed. If the formation of this society leads to public discussion, it will perhaps further the cause it is intended to retard.

A PRESBYTERIAN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY has been established on the Pacific coast. The directors met lately, and elected Rev. Dr. W. A. Scott professor of theology, the Rev. Dr. Poor professor of church history, and the Rev. Dr. Alexander professor of biblical literature.

WEEDING OUT THE TROUBLERS.—The Prussian government has ordered that French and Italian monks and all ecclesiastics belonging to other nationalities shall be banished from the Prussian provinces. Another order is anticipated prohibiting the Order of Jesuits entirely in the whole German empire.

TWO WEEKS AGO we chronicled the victory of the evangelical wing of the Reformed Church in Paris, in electing six out of seven of its candidates for the approaching synod. There being no choice of a seventh member, at the supplementary election M. Guizot, the celebrated historian, was chosen by a majority of thirty over his "Liberal" competitor.

SAVING THE OUTCAST.—Mrs. Cushing, of the Baptist Mission to Burmah, is about to make a Christian home for several children who have been abandoned by their fathers, who are officers of the English army. Before she left this country she was engaged in the "Little Wanderers' Home" in Boston, and now in a heathen country takes up a similar work.

THE Episcopalian Evangelical Knowledge Society (Low Church) reports its receipts for three years, $139,933.27. The year's receipts of the Evangelical Educational Society, $36,141.58, considerably exceed those of last year. The Church Missionary Society's receipts for the year were $64,635.20. Fifty-two missionaries were commissioned during the year.

THE FIRST SPANISH PROTESTANT CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES.—Thirty-eight converts from Romanism, all Cubans, were recently confirmed by Bishop Potter in the Episcopal church, on Twenty-second street, New York. This church is the first Spanish Protestant organization in the United States. The prayer book, translated into Spanish, is read at each service.

DURING the session of the Israelite Order of Bnai Brith at St. Louis, resolutions were offered by J. Wolff, of Connecticut, and signed by every member of the convention, deprecating in strong terms the introduction of theological matters into the Constitution of the United States, or interference in any manner with the unlimited exercise of the right of religious liberty in America.

IN DAMASCUS not less than three thousand Mohammedans have expressed a desire to become Christians. They have regular prayer meetings, and pray to the Lord Jesus Christ that he will reveal himself as their Savior, and lead them into truth and light. There is also a movement among the Jews. The Druses are now looking for their Savior's coming from China. In Persia also a great spiritual movement, in looking forward to the coming Savior, is evident.

MISSIONS PAY.—The Sandwich Islands "Friend" says that the missionaries of Micronesia have performed and published the results of more explorations in the Pacific ocean than have been made by the British navy since the days of Captain Cooke and Vancouver, and by the United States navy since the days of Commodore Wilkes. And yet the entire expense of the Micronesia mission, including the running of the missionary ship, the Morning Star, up to 1870, would not exceed $150,000.

THE Palestine Exploring Company has dispatched its autumn expedition to the Holy Land, to make a complete and minute survey of the whole country west of the Jordan, from north to south of the Holy Land proper, of the same nature with the Ordnance Survey of England and Wales. Not only the natural features of the country, but every town and village, saint's tomb, sacred tree or heap of stones—every spot, in short, to which a name is attached—will be faithfully plotted in the map, and its name written down in Arabic. The survey is estimated to take four years, at an annual cost of $15,000.

REV. DR. C. P. BUSH, at a recent missionary meeting in Brooklyn, in answer to the question whether any progress was being made in the cause of missions, said we had only to look around the world. Asia and Africa, a few years ago, were benighted countries; they were now and decided features.

lighted up in various parts. There are now 6,000 members of Christian churches in China. There are 40,000 in India, 20,000 in Burmah, 30,000 in Turkey, and 50,000 in the Western seas. There is no success of this modern time like it. The railroad and the cable telegraph were nothing to it by comparison. The gospel was planted on every meridian.

WE ARE very glad to learn, says the Independent, on the authority of the Japan Weekly Mail of February 17, that by a special order from the Mikado and his ministers the sixty-five native Christians who, as announced in this column of a month ago, were deported, last December, from their homes in the neighborhood of Nagasaki to a remote part of the empire have been returned to their respective villages and set at liberty, without having suffered any punishment or hardship beyond the trial of their brief exile. We rejoice that this act of arrest and banishment, which seemed so inexplicable at the time, and wholly at variance with its professed policy of liberty in the matter of religious belief, has been thus taken back by the Japanese government. Because it was a step to be taken back it was the harder to do, and therefore does the authorities of the land the greater honor. We are happy again to believe that the Japanese rulers really desire to receive from us the blessings of Christianity for their people, and hope they will be wise enough to see that they cannot take the fruit without the tree.

THE Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, M. P., has written a letter to Dr. D'Aubigne, proposing united prayer throughout Christendom, during the month of May, for "the conversion of the souls of Roman Catholics, especially of their ecclesiastics and dignitaries;" "for particular countries," especially for France, Spain, Italy, Germany, America, England and Ireland; and "for mission fields." Dr. D'Aubigne replies, agreeing with the proposition, and suggesting other subjects of intercession, more general in their character. This union in prayer is similar to that which took place in December, 1869, at the time of the holding of the Ecumenical Council in Rome, and is suggested by the recent overturnings in papal countries. The journal of the Evangelical Alliance thinks the movement is a good one; but wonders at the temerity of individuals who have initiated it, without consulting the authorities of an organization "which has on many occasions proved so efficient in touching the springs of universal prayer." No doubt the venerable Alliance has been very efficient in touching the springs aforesaid; but if the Christian world (not the newspaper) can be moved to pray by the suggestion of two eminent individuals, we can see no possible objection. The Evangelical Alliance has no monopoly of this business.—Independent.

THE earnestness of the recent movements in England for the separation of Church and State have thoroughly aroused the Anglican churchmen. It has become clear to them that something must be done about it, and the line of action at present proposed is "reform, not disestablishment." A crowded meeting has been held in St. James' Hall, London, by a combination of Low Churchmen and Broad Churchmen, which adopted the above watchword. Speeches were made by Lord Lyttleton, Dean Stanley, Canon Barry, Mr. Thomas Hughes, the Bishop of Exeter, and others; and, though the elements were a little discordant, it was pretty fairly agreed that this church reform must include the adoption of the changes in the Prayer Book heretofore proposed, the concession of some kind of representation to the laity in parishes, as well as the expurgation from the ritual of the Athanasian Creed. It was also urged that the matter of church patronage must be looked into, and that there might be some occasion to reform convocation itself. The Pall Mall Gazette points out the great difficulties in the way of carrying out the programme which these reformers have adopted, and thinks that it is not easy "to suggest any kind of reform which does not lead by a direct and natural road to disestablishment." That is very true; and therefore we hope some kind of reform will be instituted speedily.—Independent.

THE FALLEN RAISED.—There are earnest efforts made in London for the recovery of degraded women. One of the institutions engaged in this charitable work reports three hundred and sixty unhappy young women who the past year became subjects of moral and religious teaching in their Homes. At a Night Reception Home seven hundred and fifty-one of the most degraded attended morning and evening prayers.

PHOTOGRAPHERS assert that the only time they succeed in taking a really good likeness is when they come across a face entirely destitute of expression, and with large, heavy features.

UNFAVORABLE CONTRASTS.

A correspondont, who has heen lately reading about the early Methodist preachers, says that "the contrast with the Methodist ministry of to-day is so great that one would scarcely recognize them as members of the same holy class." He speaks of "the preacher's room" in his father's house, and how often it was occupied hy the zealous itinerants of an early day, and also of a recent period of three years' affliction, in which time he has had hut one visit from a minister of the gospel. We sympathize with our hrother in his sufferings heartily, and to some extent in his views. We hope, however, that there are circumstances which somewhat relieve the caso of the pastoral neglect of which he complains; and if not, we wish to believe that such instances are comparatively rare. This neglect of pastoral visiting is a serions defect with somo of our preachers, and onght by all means to be corrected. Many charges suffer grievously on account of it, and the wandering sheep especially are lost to us hecause they are not searched out at their homes, and brought into intimate personal contact with the preacher. To leave an sfflicted member for three years—one whose infirmities preclnde the possibility of attendance at church—without a pastoral visit, is, we imagine, a rare and extreme case. Possibly this might be explained so as to exculpate the pastor, hut there is strong presumption of inexcusable oversight and carelessness.

Our preachers, owing to frequent chsnges, have some difficnlty in finding persons situated as onr correspondent seems to be, and, if advised by messago or otherwise, they would be only too happy to minister to them in their sufferings. It does not apply to the instance in hand, probably, but we sometimes see people stand much upon their dignity when tho new preacher comes among them, and are highly offended if he does not promptly and intuitively find them ont. In affliction people are ready to censnre their pastor becanse he is not at their bedsides at once, when the good man has never received a hint that they were in trouble. Of those who complain most, it is sometimes their own fault that they are not visited. The sick, the afflicted, and those that are out of the way should be visited often and by preference, and other classes as much as time permits. But no preacher who preaches and stndies can give all his time to visiting. If he does he will develop his legs at the expense of his brain; and while he becomes popular in the social circle, his sermons will become exceedingly dull and commonplace. There is a golden mean in this thing, and it is an nnreasonably exacting clamor which wonld impose pastoral visiting upon the preacher as his solo employment.

Times have changed, and we have perhaps changed with them. The early preachers were much of their time in the saddle; their circuits and districts were as large as Conferences are now, and in their rounds they had their favorite stopping-places and temporary homes; hut we question whether their pastoral visiting was anything like as thorough and universal as that of our pastors of the present day. It could not well he otherwise, with the amonnt of traveling and preaching which the fathers had to do. In the days of Asbnry and McKendree traveling preachers usually located when they married, and these who continued in the regular work had no other homes than such as they found in the families of the people. However self-denying they were, many of the most devoted located, lived at home, and served the church as they could in that relation. In contrasting their endurance of hardships, bodily snfferings, and indifference to pecuniary support, these things are to bo considered. The state of the country was such that peculiar perils and hardships were inseparable from the ministerial calling. It is a matter of thankfulness that preschers now have not so many nor always the same kind of hinderances to encounter, but we have no doubt that they meet such obstacles as they have as faithfully and as heroically as the fathers met those which encompassed their path. Besides, we must remember that only the record of the greatest, the most devoted and the most heroic has come down to us. Beside these towering forms we may be snre there were many crooked and stunted trunks, and a vast deal of scrub growth.

The average ability of our present race of preachers is not less than that of the olden time. It may not seem so, for the reason that mediocrity and inefficiency do not survive the waste of time. As for piety, we believe the comparison is not altogether unfavorable to the present generation. The social atmosphere is different, and many of the circumstances which test ministerial devotion are changed; but the old spirit still lives in the hearts of onr preachers, and they are very much the same sort of men that the fathers would have been had they lived in these times. We know nothing, however, more helpful and inspiring than the perusal of the history of the early Methodist preachers. A noble race they were, and we have much to learn of them in the art of saving souls, and in the maintenance of the power and anthority of the pulpit. They were mighty in the Scriptures, mighty in prayer, and irresistible in their appeals to the conscience. And let us not forget that they owed much of their success to their sufferings. Their poverty enriched the church; their destitution and afflictions carried conviction, and crowned their eloquence with overwhelming effect. They were full of faith and the Holy Ghost. So must be the preacher of this day, and so he is. There are exceptions of unfaithfulness, of low spirituality, of feebleness; but there is much of toil, sacrifice and suffering now. The horse and saddlebags have largely given place to station work and to the railroad; hut the brain work, the wear and tear of nervos, and the exhaustion of the consecrated man are probably greater than in the olden time. We verily think that the Methodist preacher of to-day has to meet a heavier demand upon his strength than he who was in the harness from half to three-quarters of a century ago.

THE OLD ARM CHAIR.

The veritable chair occupied by John Adams when he signed the Declaration of Independence was also occupied hy the prosident of the Cincinnati Convention. As for the chair itself, it is described as "a small arm chair, plain hlack, with a gilt decoration, and upholstered in snnff-colored reps." It was, of course, put up with great care, and handled in a most reverential manner. When it reached the platform, after its long journey from the East, we suppose the assembled politicians did obeisance to the ancient relic, and that the president felt a new glow of patriotism as he sat down in it. Whether the other great nominating conventions will secure the services of the chair we do not know, hut we hope they may if there is any virtne in it.

This is a desperate and rather singular measure to be resorted to by those who hoast of having coerced a whole section into snhmission, and as having put down a most gigantic rebellion. Strange it mnst have seemed to the old chair, steeped, as it was, in the principles of rebellion against the best government in its day, to hear what it has lately heard about the sin of rebellion. The old-time doctrine of civil liberty, the consent of the governed, resistance to oppression, and the like, are seen in a different light now. After pulling down the pillars of freedom, and doing what England tried to do, they talk about the spirit of '76, and the pnrpose to return to the practices and principles of the signers of that most rebellious document, the Declaration of Independence. Their interest was with one rebellion and against the other, and this is a difference which an old arm chair can easily see.

But in saving the country in one sense they have nearly lost it in another. All constitutional morality, all sense of political obligation, all reverence for principles and compacts went down with the war, and the rights of States and of individuals were sacrificed to the necessities of a military despotism. Jupiter and the frogs over again. The King is no log, hut a living, voracions, all-devouring centralization. The sword has a sharp edge for the North as well as the South, and if rebels have no rights, the position is easily enough reached that nobody has any. The old chair saw the instrument signed, felt the glow and nerve of one of the chief rebels who pnt his name to the immortal paper, and has doubtless been a thousand times astonished at the perversions of the sacred text. Full of the memories of the old Continental Congress, its eloquence, honesty and love of liberty, we can only imagine the surprise excited by the occurrences of the hour.

And then to find its humble and modest self drawn forth from its long retirement to be gazed at by the multitude, and to be set in by the president of a political convention, nearly a hnndred years from the day it was made immortal! It doubtless remembers the weight, proportions and temper of the occupant who first gave it honor and renown, and is institnting comparisons between him who pledged his life, his fortune and his sacred honor, and those who now attempt to sit in the seat of this political Moses. The saddest of satires, and the sorriest burlesque upon the condition of the country is this appeal to the principles and noble traditions of the past. If the military President were to put on the old clothes of Washington, and if our Congressmen were to hunt up and put on the vestments of the patriots of the Revolntion, we fear they would nndergo no change of character. They would only expose themselves to condemnation and ridicule by affecting virtues which they never possessed.

This is the sublimest hypocrisy to worship the chair of a patriot and statesman after they have trodden his principles under foot. And yet this appeal to the doctrines of the fathers of American liberty is not without significance. It might be regarded as the partial return of reason and conscience, provided there is even an element of sincerity in it. To get back to the habits of a pnrer political life is at least conceded as desirable. But the thing itself is gone. The words of freedom, the vocahnlary of patriotism still exist, but the truth and life which were in them are lost. An empty chair is all that is left of '76 in these days of unblushing corruption and of almost universal political rottenness.

Let every minister, while he is preaching, remember that God makes one of his hearers.

MISSIONS TO THE MEXICANS.

BY BISHOP MARVIN.

Onr Mexican mission might employ twenty missionaries profitably in Texas, to say nothing of the opening in Mexico itself. If the troubles in Mexico continue, there will be many immigrants to Texas of those who are in the midst of the confusion, and who have had enough of revolution to satisfy them.

I would like to get the ear of the church on this subject. The Mexican work falls naturally to us, as a church. The field is open. We have access to the people beyond what we could have hoped for. The little labor already bestowed has yielded fruit sooner and in more generous quantity than we believed. There is much land to possess. Going into all the world, we have come to this part of it, and must move on or be recreant. The Son of God, who has placed us here in such suggestive contact with this work, will hold us to account for it. Matters are ripe for us. Every hour's delay is a loss.

And the church is able now to go up and possess this land. We can plead poverty no longer. We are becoming rich and increased with goods again, even now. God has given us money, and alas! we are slow to use it for his glory. When he so strangely converted and called our brother Hernandez to this work, and yet more strangely sent him to our church, a poorly-paid presiding elder of the West Texas Conference had to provide almost entirely for his expenses out of his own pocket for several months. When he came to Conference, and the time had fully come to set the mission on foot on something like a permanent basis, there was not a dollar in the treasury. I had absolutely to traverse the country, here in this frontier Conference, and raise in driblets so much as would meet the present emergency. The missionary is economical. He does not require a great deal of money, but must have some little to meet imperative demands. I have done this work in prayer and faith. And now let me say to all who love the kingdom of Christ above as their chief joy, a few words in the great name of the Master.

1. It is high time for us to wake up to our obligations as a missionary church. I say to wake up, for we have been asleep. We are dozing over a small mission in China. This, besides the work in the Indian Mission Conference, is all we are doing that can be called foreign missionary work proper. Our people spend millions in sumptuous living and the vain ornamentation of their dying bodies, while we are doing next to nothing for the conversion of the world beyond our own domain. Verily we are guilty concerning our brother. His blood is upon our skirts. We have been dosing our consciences with the plea of poverty ever since the war. We have gone too far with this. We are not so poor as we have pretended. We waste millions on our pride every year. Other millions we hoard. Many of us are ambitions to be rich. What will the end be? Just when the rich fool began to chuckle over his accumulated treasures his soul was required of him. That very night he died, and the Lord said: "So is every one that layeth up treasure for himself and is not rich toward God."

2. A new era of enlightenment must begin with the preachers. Even we, brethren, many of us, who are set apart to this very thing, do not see the truth of God in a clear light. We are not stirred with a great sanctified ambition to become participants in the conquest of the whole world for Christ. We do small things in a small way. If we get through the year, and "get a support;" if the work does not actually run down on our hands, and we pass in the examination of character at Conference, and get another "good circuit," we are content. There is no restless, consuming zeal. We communicate no high sentiments to the church where we go. We do not drill the militant host for invasion and conquest. We are scarcely fit even for garrison duty. If we were what we ought to be, the Lord's people under our pastorate would soon be ready for the "sacrifice and service of Christ," and never satisfied except when doing something toward the grand consummation—the planting of the banner of the cross in the heart of the enemy's domains.

3. We are in danger of losing a just apprehension of the import of the great commission: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." We are so accustomed, in religious matters, to nothing more than doing our duties in a dull way, and looking to results only in a selfish light, fostering no generous purpose nor holy aims for the rescue of endangered souls, that we can lay no claim to any participation of the spirit of Christ. He has made his church the organ of his mercies to the world. What a gracious privilege it is to be partaker with Christ in the salvation of men, yet how stupidly do we decline the glorious opportunity! We eat and drink to-day and die to-morrow, with no works to follow us; whereas we might be preparing ourselves to become partakers of the joy of Christ when "he became poor for our sakes, that we might be made rich." Have we this "mind that was in Christ," leading us to impoverish ourselves for the spiritual enrichment of others?

4. There are some who say, We have more than we can do at home, and have nothing to spare for distant fields. This betrays the most deplorable ignorance of the fundamental conditions of spiritual prosperity. The churches that are most active in aggressive labors are those that thrive most at home. The spirit of Evangelical enterprise is the very power by which the church is developed. A church that is carrying on large enterprises of salvation among the nations that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, every one of whose members, men, women and children, are imbued with holy interest in the work of the distant missionary, can never stagnate in its home work. Where the spirit of Christ abounds it will propagate itself. Our home resources are so stinted because we are not more alive to the great purpose of grace that brought the Savior down from heaven. If we did only abound in missionary zeal, home labor would multiply by an inevitable law of vital forces.

5. Let every preacher in the church lay himself out this year for the cause of missions. Let him read about it, and think about it, and pray about it, and talk about it, until he shall become filled with a holy enthusiasm for the spread of the glorious gospel of Christ over the whole earth. Let him become ambitious to see the heathen given to Christ for his inheritance and the earth for his possession. Let him preach about it, and lecture in the Sunday schools upon it. Let him devise plans with his members, men and women, for raising money to enable his church to take her place in the front ranks of those who wage war against Satan. Let him be consumed by the zeal of the Lord's house.

6. Let every Quarterly Conference take the matter in hand, and determine to double the amount of any former year's contribution for the cause of missions. Many charges might raise four times, yea ten times, any former amount, and then not reach the measure of duty. On some circuits not one in ten of the members of the church contributes any amount, however small. The preacher ought to bring home the obligation to every individual.

7. Let it be the subject of earnest consideration in every church conference. If every church in the connection could only be brought to consider this matter seriously and earnestly in conference, surely there would spring up a new and far deeper interest.

8. Let every man and woman and child in the church ask himself, herself: "Am I doing my duty?" If you have heretofore given twenty-five or thirty cents, carelessly in a bat collection, ask yourself if you ought not now to give five or ten dollars. Go and talk with your preacher about it. If you have considered yourself too poor to give anything, resolve now that you will save up, from some source, a mite for the treasury of the Lord. Let not the poorest think that the little sum they may be able to pay will be despised. The greater part of the money on which the Mexican mission has been set on foot was collected in small sums from poor people. In eternity, when they have forgotten all the money they ever spent for coffee, yea even for bread, they will see the marvelous increase of this. God gives a great blessing upon the contributions of his poor. And he looks greatly to the poor to carry on his kingdom. There are not a great many rich people in the world; still fewer in the church. Poor people have the greatest part of the work to do. God honors them greatly in this. But, my brother, if you are rich, ask yourself if you ought not to pay fifty or one hundred dollars, or even more than that, this year, into the treasury of the church for her missionary work. Consider the question as you would do if you were going to the bar of God within this hour.

Finally, let every one in private prayer, every morning and every evening, offer this petition—that God, for the sake of his Son, who gave his life for us, may follow with his blessing what he has enabled us to contribute to his cause. It is not only money that the church needs. It is that all may be done in the spirit of prayer. May all our hearts unite with unutterable agony of labor and prayer, and concentrate all the resources of labor and supplication in the petition: "Thy kingdom come!"—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

We have received the catalogue of Emory and Henry College, for the session of 1871-72. The total number of students is one hundred and eighty-three.

The A. M. E. Zion Church is likely to jilt our Northern friends after all their wooing. If all the wayward children return to mother church after this fashion, there is yet a long spell of billing and cooing before a united Methodism shall surprise and bless the world. We find the shortest statement of the matter in the Methodist:

A dissension has broken out in the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church in reference to the contemplated union with our church. The commissioners appointed by the General Conferences of the two churches were to have met here on May 1, concurrently with the meeting of our General Conference in Brooklyn and of the Zion General Conference in New York. The majority of the Zion bishops have set themselves against the consummation of union, and to prevent it have changed the time and place of the meeting of their General Conference, appointing Charlotte, North Carolina, and the third Wednesday in June. Bishop Jones, adhering to the plan agreed upon, called the General Conference to meet in New York according to the original appointment. The New York Annual Conference, which recently met here, disapproved this act, so that it is not likely that the call will be heeded. Thus the movement for union bids fair to be defeated.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church opened its session in Brooklyn, on Wednesday, May 1. The first business was to concur with the action of the Annual Conferences in the adoption of lay representation, and the lay delegates were invited to take their seats as members of the Conference. The Conference, including bishops and laymen, embraces four hundred and twenty-six members. The Book Concern troubles, which have agitated the Northern Church for some time, have been brought before the Conference, and Dr. Lanahan has presented his report with numerous charges and allegations. Up to this date no important measures have been definitely acted on, except the prompt completion of the plan of lay delegation.

Rev. M. S. Andrews forwards a list of new subscribers from Selma, Alabama, and says: "I brought the paper before the Church Conference with the inclosed result. I shall urge my members generally to take it, and hope to be able to send other subscribers soon. We are moving on quietly here; congregations good. Occasionally we take in one on profession, and frequently by letter. I have a very interesting class among the young men, and shall organize others soon. Accounts from the work around here are encouraging."

The Nominations.—Our readers are already advised of the nominations recently made by the Cincinnati Convention. Horace Greeley is the candidate for President, and B. Gratz Brown for Vice President. Nothing which has lately happened in political circles has produced so great a sensation as the meeting of the convention and the nominations made by it. The great political contest which culminates in November has thus been earnestly begun. The Democratic and the Republican Conventions are yet to meet and make out their platforms and designate their candidates.

Mark This.—We are receiving communications every week without the names of the writers. Articles sent must always be accompanied by the writer's name and address. They need not appear in the paper, but they must be in the editor's possession. It is the law, invariable and inexorable, with all newspapers to require the name and address.

The Rev. Charles Betts, of the South Carolina Conference, died recently near Marion, South Carolina. His name has been on the Conference roll for fifty-four years. He was born in 1800, entered the ministry in 1818, and was seventy-two years of age.

The General Assemblies of various churches will meet this month—the Northern Presbyterian, at Detroit, Michigan, May 16; the Cumberland Presbyterian, at Evansville, Indiana, May 16; the Southern Presbyterian, at Richmond, Virginia; the Southern Baptist Convention, at Raleigh, North Carolina, May 9.

CAMP MEETING.

A camp meeting will be held on the camp ground purchased by the New Orleans District Conference, commencing on Friday, June 21, and continuing to Friday, June 28, to which brethren, clerical and lay, of adjacent cities and country are invited.

The camp ground is eligibly situated directly upon the Gulf coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Mississippi, and within a quarter of a mile of the New Orleans and Mobile railroad.

The trustees will meet on the grounds on Tuesday, the twenty-first of May, to determine and fix the position and place of each particular tent, at which time all persons desiring to tent are invited to be present.

Persons desiring further information are requested to correspond with the secretary.

Further particulars of manner of transportation, entertainment, etc., will be announced at an early date.

On the twenty-fourth of April, 1872, by the Rev. Robert Smille, at the Baptist church in Bellville, Mr. E. K. SAMPEY to Miss M. ALICE FINCH, all of Conecuh county, Alabama.

Obituaries.

MRS. SARAH E., wife of Joseph E. Wilson, died at Millford, Ellis county, Texas, April 18, 1872. She was the daughter Colonel Henry C. and Christiana Robinson, of Lauderdale county, Mississippi; was three happily married to her now deeply-afflicted husband on the fourteenth of March, 1871. Possessed of a strong, abiding faith in the word of God, coupled with a constant performance of Christian duty, as early trained by her now sainted mother, we have the consoling hope that her rest is that of a child of God. Earth may well mourn the loss of souls so pure. Truly sad is this melancholy fate of man. Yet, hereaved husband, trust in God, though now with you an aching void that earth may never fill. Still, thank God, Heaven can restore.

"Hope looks beyond the bounds of time,
When what we now deplore
Shall rise in full, immortal prime,
And bloom to fade no more."

JOSEPH F. HINES.

MY DEAR MOTHER, MRS. EMMA HANTZ, was born in Rhode Island, April 20, 1790, and departed this life in Texas parish, Louisiana, December 11, 1871, aged eighty-one years. She removed with her father, Mr. Chin, first to Mobile, and then to Natchez, and finally settled in the village of Washington, Adams county, Mississippi. She became a member of the Methodist Church on the first formation of one in the Mississippi Territory, which was early in this century, under the pious labors of Tobias Gibson, the first missionary to the Natchez country. Her house was the home of the Itinerant, and her religion was kept alive by constant attendance on the ministry of the good men who from year to year administered in Washington. This village became the nucleus of Methodism of all the Southwestern country, and was the seat of government of the Mississippi Territory, and high officers and politicians had their residence there. Several Annual Conferences were held there, presided over by Bishops George Roberts and Soule, who preached to large and admiring audiences. Lorenzo Dow would occasionally preach for them, and his family lived for a few years in an adjacent county. I have heard my mother speak of a great sermon, delivered by Dr. Winans to the soldiers just before their departure for New Orleans to engage in the battle of 1815. This great man, with Lane and Harper and Drake and John C. Burruss, now rest from their labors in heaven.

My mother's experience and life demonstrated the truth of God's promise: "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." She lived through many changes, political and temporal, and found that God was true to his promise in taking care of her who had trusted in him. Her last sickness was very sudden. The day before she was taken was a bright and beautiful Sabbath, and she was engaged all day in reading the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and good books. In the morning she was taken with a severe chill, which, aggravating other diseases to which she was subject, soon brought her life to a close. She professed her readiness to meet death, sent farewells to her children and grandchildren who were far away, and then slept sweetly in Jesus.

H. B. PRICE.

DIED, at her home in Big Cane, parish of St. Landry, Louisiana, on Wednesday, January 24, 1872, MRS. CAROLINE MORRIS, aged forty years, wife of Jonathan L. Morris, Esq., a well-known and prominent merchant of this place for the last eighteen or twenty years.

The subject of this notice was a lady of high and influential position in society, and remarkable alike for her many enviable qualities and commendable virtues. Her brief illness, followed by her death in a few hours, caused a sudden shock and a deep gloom to be spread like a pall over this entire community, establishing that scriptural admonition: "In the midst of life we are in death." It has been our good fortune to share the acquaintance and enjoy the society of this family for a number of years past, and we frankly acknowledge ourselves benefitted and improved by this association, more especially by the universal courtesies and kindnesses of Mrs. Morris, whose extended attainments, veiled in her usual unreserved manner, with her cheerful disposition, secured for her the universal admiration and esteem of all who shared her acquaintance. As a wife she certainly was among the first. As a friend and associate her numerous acquaintances will unite in saying: "She had few equals;" as a mother devoted and affectionate. Her watchful care and unerring rule for the government of her children was remarkable, and plainly to be seen in every act of her eventful life. Her death was truly a calamity to her family, her friends and society; but the stern and solemn decree of the Supreme Architect of the universe has ordered it. The will of him "in whom we live, move and have our being" took in facts and circumstances which mortals cannot fathom, and suffered the departure of this amiable lady from among us for reasons man cannot unfold. While we all deeply deplore her untimely death, it is evidently more keenly felt, and best known and revered in the bosom of her large and interesting family. May God in his infinite wisdom and goodness guide and protect them through life's devious way. Sister Morris was an exemplary member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and she is now at rest in heaven.

"Her friends in tears a last sad requiem gave,
As all her errors, if any, slumber in the grave."

THE HOWE SEWING MACHINE has recently carried off many prizes at the Louisiana State Fair, just closed. Everybody who has either used or examined critically this machine is fully cognizant of the fact that it is easy of operation, facile in management, simple in construction, economic in use, and capable of tucking, hemming, braiding, quilting and cording with the same effectiveness and dispatch. Strangers visiting the city should not fail to call on Mr. D. P. Perry, the popular and efficient general Southern agent, 183 Canal street. It is bright with the records of repeated victory, the gleam of its gold medals, the glory of the "Cross of the Legion of Honor," and the flash of its blue ribbons flaunted to the breeze. We do not know but that its medallion imprint shines out with the cumulated luster of all, presenting, as it does, the image of "Elias Howe, Jr.," the inventor of the instrument, which is at once a blessing and a benefaction to the human family.

A Card.—Having opened a business at 157 Poydras street, for the purpose of supplying Families and Hotels with Fancy GROCERIES, and every variety of Domestic and Imported Fruits, and having such facilities as will enable us to compete successfully with any other establishment of the kind in the country, we respectfully solicit the patronage of our friends and the public generally, assuring them that we are determined to give perfect satisfaction.

Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills.—As a purgative medicine stands unrivaled. Their action is uniform, certain and safe. They are entirely vegetable, and do not cause those griping pains that most pills do.

AUGUSTA, November 0, 1869.

DR. WILLIAM H. TUTT—Dear Sir: I have long been a sufferer of torpor of the Liver and Dyspepsia, and in search of relief I have tried almost every medicine recommended for those diseases, but have never derived half the benefit from any of them as I have from your Vegetable Liver Pills. They are invaluable, and I would recommend them to all with Dyspepsia, Sick Headache or Biliousness. Yours truly, W. J. BLAIR,

A Warning.—Dr. Abernethy once affirmed that his mistakes would fill a graveyard; and if this confession sprung from so eminent an authority as this distinguished English Esculapius, how many graveyards could be filled by those of less repute, who recommend noxious nostrums for tonics, and administer ineffective compositions for stimulants? It almost seems like a blind infatuation in persons afflicted with indigestion, dyspepsia, nervous debility, or similar functional derangements, to swallow the wretched admixtures that glut the market, when Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters are so accessible. Prepared from vegetables that embody the purest and most valuable medicinal virtues, Price's Bitters are at once a grateful cordial and most invigorating adjuvant. Imparting a healthy tone to the organs, regulating the system of circulation, sending an exhilirating glow through all the "natural gates and alleys of the body," they not only repair the shattered nerves, but simultaneously recuperate the wasted energies. In short, wherever there exists any gastric disorder, Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters will infallibly ferret out the disease, and by their active principles apply the remedy.

A CHILD'S THOUGHTS AT SUNSET.

"After the sun went to bed, I guess the angels must have left the door open, for the light shone out."

"See, father, how the light shines out,
Just as it did before!
The angels, when the sun went in,
Forgot to shut the door.
And now it shines up there so bright,
While here 'tis getting dark;
And see! the angels in the light!
They're singing, father; hark!

"O if I were an angel, pa,
Each night I'd spread my wings
And fly, and fill my apron full
Of stars—those pretty things;
I wish I had enough to make
A wreath around my head,
To light us when we stay awake
After the sun's abed.

"See how they open all around,
And shining, smile on me!
If on the wrong side 'tis so bright,
Oh what must heaven be!
I wish so much that I could have
That bright cloud for a seat,
And the warm, happy sun, to shine
So soft upon my feet.

"Do let me go there, dear papa,
And help the angels sing—
They're standing in the doorway now,
A joyous, happy ring;
And see! oh see! the light shines yet,
Bright as it did before!
I guess the angels did forget
Papa, to shut the door."

New York Evangelist.

THE LIGHTNING-TAMERS.

There were not only a good many superstitious boys and girls, but grown people in olden time who believed thunder and lightning to be God's wrath; and it is not so much a matter of wonder to us when we think that its strokes killed men and animals, and destroyed buildings, and tore up trees, and no one knew what it was or how to defend himself against its terrors.

Benjamin Franklin, of whom you have all heard and read all your lives, a Boston and afterward a Philadelphia printer, first evolved the principle by study and experiment that lightning and electricity are one; but the idea was laughed at by the London Royal Society, before which his account was read. That the snapping and sparkling from a small glass bottle, and ground out of a small glass cylinder, turned by a hand crank, could possibly be the same as lightning seemed too frivolous to these philosophers to think of for a moment.

But Franklin bethought him of a simple way to test his deductions. And one day in June, 1752, he watched with interest a mass of threatening clouds gather, and, retiring to a little hill just outside of Philadelphia, he sent up his kite with sharp-pointed wire projecting eight or ten inches beyond it, and attached to a silken cord with a steel key at the end which he held in his hand. Not long did he wait before the lightning came down, emitting electric sparks from the key. The truth that made Franklin the greatest philosopher of his age was proven beyond a doubt.

In the meantime his report before the London Society set a few others thinking, and they resolved to test the principle by following out Franklin's directions. One, a French philosopher in Paris, set up his rod forty feet in height outside the city, and received from the clouds a spark in answer. Another, from the roof of his house, with a rod ninety feet above its base, felt a shock. One inquirer, Prof. Richman, while making the bold experiment at St. Petersburg, Russia, through some carelessness was killed by an unexpected discharge from his rod.

The beauty of Franklin as a philosopher was, he always put his theory into practice; so he was not long in making a useful application of his discovery by inventing the lightning-rod, which disarms the thunder-cloud of its terror by silently drawing its electricity from it to such an extent as to prevent an explosion, and yet in case of an explosion it conducts the formidable element safely to the ground.

Mr. Hume, of England, said to Franklin: "America has sent us many good things, gold, silver, sugar, indigo, but you are the first philosopher, and indeed the first great man of letters for whom we are indebted to her." Mr. Hume thought, with Solomon, that wisdom is above gold.

Eighty years after Franklin taught the lightning submission, Prof. Morse was on board the packet ship Sully, on the way from Havre to New York, and while in conversation with one of the passengers about a late experiment in Paris, by which electricity had been conveyed through a coil of wire, the thought, "Why may not messages be transmitted by electricity?" suddenly flashed through his brain, and this thought was the seed of the telegraph, which grew forthwith to its present length and breadth, but not, however, without overcoming many obstacles.

He appealed to Congress for aid to complete the invention, but to little purpose, except to be ridiculed as a visionary dreamer and to have his petition offset by another for money to build a telegraph to the moon. He went to Europe, but England and France gave him no better encouragement. He besought Congress a second time, and on the last night of the session $30,000 was voted him, by only half-dozen majority, to build a telegraph between Washington and Baltimore. Prof. Morse, like Franklin with his kite, had tested his scheme by constructing a rude apparatus and stretching a wire round and round his room, forming a telegraph in actual operation of half a mile in length.

Franklin caught the lightning and told it how to carry itself harmlessly. Morse took it up and taught it how to talk, and its first words, "What hath God wrought!" were heard from Washington to Baltimore, May 27, 1844. He lived to receive honors as the "father of the telegraph" from every quarter of the globe, and only the other day, amid a nation's tears and deep regrets, he was carried to Greenwood for his last resting place.—Christian Weekly.

THE CROWS AND THE WOODPECKER.—When will wonders cease among these wonderful creatures—the birds? Perhaps the California birds are brighter than those of the same kind elsewhere, but if you can tell a bird story to beat this, I should like to hear it.

On our way to the Yosemito valley we noticed the immense trunks of what we should call "Big Trees" in New England, but the ordinary pine growth of the Sierra Nevadas, filled from top to bottom with holes bored with the accuracy and precision of the truest auger, and within each hole, closely fitted to a considerable depth, an acorn which none of our skill or strength could extract. We asked our driver what this meant. Smiling at our ignorance, he told us this was the work of the woodpeckers. They bore these hole. They insert the nuts and thus provide for the time to come, so that the sluggard may be sent not only to the ant and the stork and the "busy bee" to learn wisdom and work, but to the woodpecker. It is said the acorn breeds a worm which is the special delight of the woodpecker.

And now, for the rest of our story, which is in keeping with the mischief-making, mirth-loving character of the crow.

We noticed stones inserted in some of the holes instead of nuts.

We asked what this meant. Our driver was a clever man, who was never troubled by our many questions.

"This," said he, "is what the crows do. They like to fool the woodpeckers; so by immense labor they extract the acorn, and in its stead insert a stone!"

I suppose they stay by and enjoy the joke when the woodpecker pecks away at the stone.

HAZEL HOLLOW.

Once there was a little girl named Mabel; and one Saturday afternoon in autumn she asked her mother if she might go with some of the school girls to pick hazelnuts.

Mabel was such a good little girl that her mother did not like to refuse her anything, and so told her she might go if she would take care not to get separated from her friends in the woods.

"Do not fear for me, mother mine," said Mabel; and off the little girl tripped, and joined her friends, Susan Lane, Lucy Manning, and I know not how many more school girls—all ready for a frolic.

They walked two miles before they came to the place where the hazelnuts grew in plenty; and then they all went into a low dell, or hollow, where the nuts grew thick, though the sunshine could hardly send one of its rays into the close bushes.

Mabel was so delighted at the sight that she began to pick up the nuts, and fill her apron with them; for in her hurry she had forgotten to take a basket.

She was so intent on picking the nuts that she did not notice that the buzz of the voices of her friends was no longer heard. But all at once she looked, and saw that she was all alone. No trace of one of her friends could she see. She called "Susan! Lucy!" but no one answered.

"You are trying to frighten me!" cried Mabel. "Susan! Mary! answer me! You have kept up the joke long enough." But no sound could Mabel hear, except the song of a distant thrush and the tapping of a woodpecker on the trunk of a tree near by.

She now began to get distressed; for Hazel Hollow was a dark and lonely place, and far from any house. Then, holding her nuts still in her apron, she climbed up out of the hollow, and found herself in a wood. She did not know which path to take.

She walked a few steps, when she heard a loud rattling noise. "Ah! that must be a rattlesnake," thought poor Mabel; and off she ran in another direction, and sat down on a rock.

But she had not sat there long when she heard a growl that seemed to come from behind a bush. "What can that be?" thought Mabel. "I'll not be afraid, if I can help it." Then came a loud hissing noise, and then another growl.

"I'm not afraid of any wild beast that dwells in these woods," thought Mabel; "for my mother told me that there were none here but rabbits and squirrels, and I'm sure they would run from me if they were to see me."

So Mabel picked up a stick, and was running round by the bush, when she stumbled over something that was alive, and that seized hold of her, and began to growl. It acted as if it wanted to scratch and bite her; but it did no harm.

"Oh, you needn't try to scare me!" cried Mabel. "If you can't growl better than that, you had better not try to play the wild beast again. I know you, Lucy Manning! And there are the rest of you hiding there behind the trunks of trees. Oh, you ought to be ashamed of yourselves!"

Yes, there were all the girls; and I think they ought to have known better than to try to frighten a little girl like Mabel. They all came up and began to laugh, when they found that she was not to be fooled. It is not a good plan to play such jokes on children; for, if Mabel had been a timid child, she might have been seriously harmed.—Anna Livingstone.

ENVY PUNISHED.—A Burmese potter, it is said, became envious of the prosperity of a washerman, and, to ruin him, induced the King to order him to wash one of his black elephants white, that he might be "lord of the white elephant," which in the East is a great distinction. The washerman replied that, by the rules of his art, he must have a vessel large enough to wash him in. The King ordered the potter to make him such a vessel. When made, it was crushed by the first step of the elephant in it. Many times was this repeated; and the potter was ruined by the very scheme he had intended should crush his enemy.

IF THE disposition is good, the acts will be so too, though we may not be able to do all we desire.

Little hands can pluck the weeds,
Sins of heart and hand and tongue,
Choking down the pleasant plants,
That they grow so rank among.
Little hands can gather in,
When the harvest-time is come,
God will garner all the sheaves,
Till we sing the harvest home.

The Farm and Garden.

For the Advocate.

THE ORCHARD AND FRUIT GARDEN FOR MAY.

The principal work in the orchard now is to destroy the insects which prey upon it, and to check superfluous growth and fruit. It requires some nerve to thin a heavy crop of fine peaches, pears, plums, etc., especially where the frosts in past years have nipped them in the bud. But if we would have fine fruit we must not allow it to remain too thickly set. We must have the courage to thin freely, often pulling off more than half the young crop. It is also well now to remove straggling shoots. Examine the grapevines also. Do not spare the grape bunches if they are too thick. Keep the strawberry beds free from grass and weeds, and cut off all runners as fast as they appear. You cannot have runners and fruit. Water copiously at least three times a week in the evening, during dry weather, through the bearing season. This is troublesome, but it must be done if we would have an abundance of strawberries. The following is a good way to raise strawberries: Take two planks, each about six inches wide, and of any length you desire. Place them on the ground edgewise, and confine them in that position by driving stubs, one at each end and one in the middle; the beds may be four feet wide. Fill up between these planks with rich earth mixed with manure, and the beds are made. Plant your strawberries on these beds, and then they can be easily cultivated. Protect young pear and apple trees from the powerful rays of the sun. Two planks nailed together, and placed on the southwest side of the trunk, will be a good protection. There is no better time to prune fruit trees than now; prune apple and pear trees to form low heads; wounds that are made with the knife at this season soon heal. Watch for the appearance of blight on pear trees; as soon as the leaf begins to curl cut the limb off and burn it, or the disease will spread from the amputated limb. In localities where the frost has cut the fruit off, the tree will be growing luxuriantly, making great quantities of wood; cut judiciously now, to form many spurs in place of one long limb; fruit buds in abundance will form on the spurs, and next season great crops of fruit will be the reward. Old fruit trees will be greatly benefited now by rubbing their trunks with a weak solution of soft country soap or potash. Where trees are heavily loaded with fruit it should be thinned out, which will greatly improve the remaining fruit. The horticulturist's time is never better employed than when thinning out fruit and vegetables.—Soil of Sunny South.

MILDEW ON GRAPES.—Powdered sulphur is the best thing to remedy all diseases of the grape-vine. It should be sprinkled on with a dredging box or from a syringe.

FOR CANKER IN FRUIT TREES.—Canker in apple, pear and plum trees should be watered with a decoction of aloes, ground well drained, and trees manured.

A VALUABLE COMPOST.—Near every dwelling, but a little out of the way, there should be a place, vat or cistern prepared, where all the scrapings from the door-yard and litter from the garden can be conveniently deposited; where, likewise, should be thrown all the woolen rags and other refuse stuff, such as old boots and shoes, bones, etc., usually committed to the flames by the neat housewife upon every return of that ever-to-be-dreaded festival, commonly denominated house-cleaning.—Into this receptacle also throw all your corn-cobs, old brine and soap suds on washing days, and ashes and lime rubbish where lenches are emptied, and occasionally a wheelbarrow full of muck or stable manure, or loam or turf, and you will find at the end of the year that you have a quantity of excellent manure, far more valuable for many purposes than barnyard manure.

HOW TO RAISE GIANT ASPARAGUS.—About the first of November, or as soon as the frost has well blackened the asparagus tops, take a scythe and mow all down close to the surface of the bed; let it lie a day or two, then set fire to the heap of stalks, burn it to ashes, and spread the ashes over the bed. Then go to your barnyard, take a load of clean, fresh stable manure, and add thereto half a bushel of hen-dung, turning over and mixing the whole together throughout. This makes a pretty powerful compost. Apply one such load to every twenty feet of your asparagus beds, which should be six feet wide. With a strong three-pronged spud or fork dig this dressing under. The whole is now left for the winter. In the spring, as early as possible, turn the top of the bed over lightly once more. Now, as the asparagus grows naturally on the side of the ocean, and loves salt water, you should give it a good supply of its favorite condiment. Cover the surface of the bed about a quarter of an inch thick with fine packing salt; it is not too much. As the spring rains come down it gradually dissolves. Not a weed will appear during the whole season. Everything else, pig-weed, purslain, all refuse to grow on the top of the asparagus beds. But if would do your eyes good to see the stout, tender stalks of the plant itself push up through the surface early in the season. By this treatment it may be grown as large around as a hoe-handle, and as tender and succulent as any ever was. The same round of treatment should be given to the bed every year.—Hortus.

THINGS TO REMEMBER.—A surveyor's chain is 4 poles or 76 feet, divided into 100 links or 792 inches. A square chain is 16 square poles, and 10 square chains is an acre. 4 roods are an acre, each containing 1,240 square yards or 34,787 feet, or 24 yards 28 inches on each side. A pole is 5½ yards each way. An acre is 4,840 square yards, or 69 yards, 1 foot, 7½ inches each way; and 3 acres are 120½ yards each way. A square mile, 1,760 yards each way, is 640 acres; half a mile, or 880 yards each way, is 160 acres; a quarter of a mile, or 440 yards each way, is a park or farm of 40 acres, and a furlong, or 220 yards each way, is 10 acres. AGRICOLA.

THE JERSEY CATTLE.

The great claim of the Jersey, says the Prairie Farmer, is as a cream-producing animal. Where milk is to be disposed of by the gallon, as it is in a city market or at a cheese factory, the Jersey is an unprofitable cow to keep. But where quality and richness, and not quantity, is desired, as in furnishing milk and cream for the family, or for producing butter of beautiful rich color and fine flavor, it has no peer among all the improved breeds of cattle. There is both pleasure and profit in keeping a few of these cows on every farm. They are pets to be loved and tenderly cared for. Their yield of cream is surprising, in both quantity and quality. There is no greater dainty for the table than Jersey cream. The butter made from it is of surpassing excellence, and often commands twice the price of ordinary butter in the market. Even a few of these cows in a herd will cause the peculiar color and flavor of Jersey butter to be observed in that made from the entire quantity of milk. It is also observed that the milk of half-breeds has the characteristics of full-blooded animals in an eminent degree, to such an extent is the influence of the male exerted on the progeny of the short-horn, Devon or native cow.

POULTRY HOUSES should be warm, light and well ventilated, and yet a majority of them are dark, close and uncomfortable. As a natural consequence the fowls confined in them are generally weak, drooping and diseased.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

MRS. BARBER'S GINGER COOKIES.—One cup of molasses, half a cup of butter, half a cup of water, two teaspoonfuls of soda, a pinch of salt, ginger to suit the taste. Bake rather quick.

GERMAN PICKLES.—Take sound, ripe cucumbers, peel and remove the seeds, cut lengthways into strips an inch wide. To three quarts of the pieces add three cups of vinegar and four of water; soak twenty-four hours, stirring once or twice. Put one quart of vinegar on the fire, add one pint of sugar, a little stick cinnamon and a teaspoonful of pimento tied in a bit of cloth; scald all together; add the cucumber and boil till soft.

SURE REMEDY FOR CATARRH.—A subscriber informs us that a sure remedy for catarrh is salt and water. Take half a teacup of blood-warm water and dissolve sufficient salt in it so that it can be plainly tasted. Then pour it in the palm of the hand and snuff it into the nostrils. Two applications a day will soon produce good results. He has cured himself, and the remedy has been applied in some twenty instances in this town, with the most gratifying results. Surely such a simple remedy is worth trying.

MOCK VENISON.—Cut a nice piece of corned beef in thin slices, and soak three or four hours in tepid water, changing the water often. Do sure and have plenty of water to soak it in. When sufficiently freshened, drain, wipe dry, put on a hot gridiron, and broil quickly—turning often—only enough to be fully hot through. Make a gravy of drawn butter; add a little pepper; taste before adding salt; add the yolk of an egg, boiled hard and chopped fine, and if agreeable a little boiled onion and pour over it; or simply butter, pepper and a little salt, as for beefsteak. This is an excellent dish, when so situated as to have little opportunity for fresh meat; but a fresh beefsteak thus seasoned is better.

NEW USE FOR FLAX-SEED.

The following statement, copied from an English paper, is of great interest to the American farmers, as it seems to open a new use for flax-seed, and may greatly enhance the price, so as to make flax-growing profitable. The new use is in the manufacture of an article called linoleum, deriving the name from linum and oleum. It is said that it will be a rival of caoutchouc, or, as it is commonly called, India rubber. The new article is manufactured of linseed oil by oxidizing it until it is solidified into a resinous substance, as we frequently find it when it has been exposed to the atmosphere. It is stated that "in this state it is combined with resinous gums and other ingredients, wherenpon it assumes the appearance and most of the properties of India rubber. Like India rubber, it can be dissolved into a cement and used in the manufacture of the material for water-proof clothing. It can be used as varnish for the protection of iron or wood, or for coating ships' bottoms. It is as good as a commen cement, having properties similar to the marine glue made from India rubber and shellac. It is easily vulcanized by exposure to heat, and by this means becomes as hard as the hardest wood, and capable of the finest polish. The great variety of uses to which it can be applied in this form will at once suggest themselves to the reader. The manufacture of linoleum has thus far been made to produce floor-cloth, for which it has proved itself well adapted. Combined with ground cork, it is spread on a stout canvas, the back of which is afterward water-proofed with oxidized oil. The fabric is then printed by means of blocks in the ordinary way. The floor-cloth thus produced is pliable, noiseless to walk upon, washes well, preserves its color, and rolls up like an ordinary carpet. It is very durable, and its component parts will not decompose by heat or exposure to the sun or air, as will India rubber.—New York Tribune.

LIGHT AND SOUND.—It is now generally the accepted doctrine that both light and sound are produced by vibration, in the former case, of a highly attennated, elastic medium, called ether (not yet positively demonstrated to exist,) and in the latter case, of the air or some other vibrating body. It must be borne in mind, however, that the vibrations of light are different in character, as well as in medium, from those of sound. This difference can be easily illustrated. If a number of ivory and glass balls are suspended side by side, in contact, and a blow is given to the first ball, in the direction of the line of balls, the impact is conveyed through all the balls, until the last one flies off. What takes place here is the alternate compression and elastic recovery of form of each ball; and this is exactly the way in which sound is propagated, by longitudinal vibration. The propagation of light, on the other hand, is like the advance of a wave in water, or in a long cord, lying on the ground, and jerked up and down at one end, or in a carpet or table-cloth, when shaken or spread. Something appears to advance; but when motion has ceased, the water, cord or carpet is just where it was before. It was the motion or wave that advanced, and if we examine the path of each part of the body affected, we find that it has merely risen and fallen, in a line perpendicular to the progress of the wave. This is the nature of the propagation of light, by transverse vibrations. It is well, therefore, to distinguish between light and sound, by speaking of the undulations of the former, and the pulses of the latter.

JELLY FISH.—Agassiz observes that "to form an idea of his true appearance, one must meet him as he swims along at midday, rather lazily withal, his huge semi-transparent disk, with its flexible lobed margin, glittering in the sun, and his tentacles floating a distance of many yards behind him. Encountering one of these huge jelly fishes, when out in a row-boat, we attempted to make a rough measurement of his dimensions upon the spot. He was lying quietly near the surface, and did not seem in the least disturbed by the proceeding, but allowed the oar, eight feet in length, to be laid across the disk, which proved to be seven feet in diameter. Backing the boat slowly along the line of the tentacles, which were floating at their utmost extension behind him, we measured those in the same manner, and found them to be rather more than fourteen times the length of the oar, thus covering a space of some hundred and twelve feet. This huge mass is produced by a hydroid, measuring not more than half an inch in length when full grown.

FATHER WOLF has reported to the Ecuador government on the geology of the Manabi coast, and has discovered bones of ancient horses mixed with those of the Andes mastodon.

MEDICAL.

TO THE AFFLICTED.
The most salutary and efficient remedy against all affections of the breast, lungs and throat is decidedly
Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Syrup.
Many medicines of doubtful virtue have been pressed upon the public, and kept up for a while by persistent advertising and humbuggery; but Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Syrup is an old friend to the invalid. It has now been in use for the last forty years, and its popularity is still increasing.
It is sovereign in colds, coughs, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, inflammation of the throat, laryngitis, spitting of blood, whooping cough, etc.; rheumatism, diarrhea or dysentery.
For sale by all respectable druggists.

The New Louisiana Remedy

and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. SWINTON'S CONDENSED
SCHOOL HISTORY.
(From the Virginia Educational Journal.)
Mr. Swinton's reputation led us to examine this book. What is of most importance in the work is its extreme fairness. It is vastly superior, in this respect, to any history issued at the North that we have seen. Where accuracy seems almost impossible, he comes nearer to the truth than the others.

THE "DOMESTIC"
IS THE "KING"
Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.
ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems beyond calculation. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."
All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Willcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.
You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

We have no material change to notice in the general market since our last issue. The receipts of sugar have been moderate, and met a fair demand at prices showing some irregularity, but without any quotable change.

The weather has been clear and pleasant, and decidedly favorable to the growing crops. We do not, however, hear anything from the country to support the common impression at the North and abroad that there has been any very great extension of the area planted. Upon this point further developments will be looked for with more than ordinary interest.—The reports to the Cotton Exchange will no doubt give authentic information on the subject. Our accounts from the sugar crop are still discouraging.

The river is 3 feet below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the third instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	4,511
Lake.....	6
Mobile.....	78
Texas.....	47
Total.....	4,672

On Saturday there appeared to be rather more irregularity in average lists, but even-running and the higher grades generally were firm at previous rates. The sales embraced 1,450 bales. On Monday the market was strengthened by a material advance in foreign exchange, which was only partially counteracted by a decline of 1-16d. in uplands at Liverpool, but its effect was mainly confined to the better qualities, which were firm without any quotable improvement, while the lower grades were offered more freely. The business was again of moderate extent, summing up 1,800 bales. On Tuesday the demand was limited, and in the face of a decline of ⅛c. at New York and 1-16d. at Liverpool, the few buyers who came forward claimed concessions of about ⅛c. Most factors, however, adhered to their previous pretensions, and the sales were consequently confined to barely 750 bales. We put our outside figures for strict good ordinary at 21⅝c., but it sold as high as 21¾c. and also at 21½c. Low middling sold at 22c. for loose classification and 22¼c. for good style, and strict middling as low as 23¼c.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 916,567 bales, against 1,305,415 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,037,514 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 114,166 to France, and a decrease of 724,752 to Great Britain, and of 276,317 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Ordinary.....	19¼ @ 20¼
Good ordinary.....	21 @ 21⅛
Low middling.....	22 @ 22½
Middling.....	23 @ —
Strict middling.....	23¼ @ 23⅜
Good middling.....	— @ 23⅝

LARD.—On Monday 117 kegs country kettle-rendered sold at 10c., and 150 kegs city kettle-rendered at 10⅝c. ₱ lb. Kegs are now held and are jobbing at 10½@10¾c. for kettle-rendered, and 11½c. for refined; tierces are quoted at 9¼c. for packers' and 9¾@10c. ₱ lb. for refined.

BEEF.—Texas commands $11@$12, Western $16.50 ₱ bbl. Western is scarce. The market is bare of Northern.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request. It opened on Tuesday at 113⅜@113⅝, (against 114⅛ at New York,) and closed at 113@113¼, (against 113⅝ at New York.)

The sales of silver embraced $1,500 in American half dollars on Monday at 109½, and $500 on Tuesday at the same.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

PHILADELPHIA, May 8.—At to-day's session of the American Medical Association a report was read by Dr. Weatherly, from the Committee on Medical Education, suggesting that no more charters be granted for medical colleges which do not adopt a plan for education indorsed by this association, and the Legislatures of the various States be asked to revoke all charters for colleges not adopting the plan of the association, and that no delegates be admitted from institutions refusing to adopt such plan.

The report alluded to the rivalry between colleges, inducing some to lower their charges and give degrees to men totally unfit for the duties of physicians.

Dr. Findlay offered a resolution that physicians attending families by contract or by the year, or who bid for practice at less rates than regular graduates, were to be classed among irregular practitioners.—Adopted.

SELMA, ALA., May 8.—A fire occurred here at two o'clock this morning, destroying four stores. Loss, $75,000. Partial insurance.

NEW YORK, May 9.—Twenty-one Mormon missionaries sailed for Europe to-day.

Numerous memorials were read to-day at General Conference on secret societies, against the invidious distinction of race or color in electing officers, and various other subjects. Judge Caldwell proposed a delegation of six to carry fraternal greetings to the Methodist Episcopal Church of the South, which is to meet in 1874, and endeavor to effect an organization with that body. The latter clause was withdrawn and the motion carried.

The anniversary meeting of the American Tract Society to-day was largely attended, including Father Gavazzi. The annual report shows receipts for the year: From donations and legacies, $126,833; from sales, $410,903; expenditures, $537,174; balance in the treasury, $938.

A resolution was adopted providing for the prosecution of publishers and venders of obscene books and pictures.

SAG HARBOR, L. I., May 10.—The woods on the shore of Shelter Island are on fire. The conflagration extends for three miles east and west on the south side of the island.

ATLANTA, May 10.—To-day the citizens turned out en masse to decorate the graves of the Confederate soldiers. Business houses were all closed. Many strangers assisted in the ceremonies.

MEMPHIS, May 10.—The Sunday school celebration of the Protestant churches, observed here to-day, was participated in by six thousand Sunday school children.

HOUSTON, May 11.—A heavy rain storm prevailed here all Friday, yesterday afternoon extending one hundred miles radius. Bridges were swept away on the Great Northern and Central railroads by floods of water. All travel has been temporarily stopped over these roads. Large gangs of workmen have been dispatched to repair the damages.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., May 11.—The mountain fires in Chichester and Ulster counties are three miles in length. On Friday all day the smoke was so dense that the sun was obscured. The efforts of one hundred and fifty men alone saved the village of Chichester.

DETROIT, May 12.—Fifteen hundred men, employed at the Hecla, Calumet and School Craft mines, are on a strike. Troops are demanded by the sheriff and circuit judge. Sheridan replies that he has no available troops, but General Cook has sent a company of infantry. A spread of the disorders to other mines is apprehended.

NEW YORK, May 13.—The anniversary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions was held to-night at Madison Square church. The Rev. Dr. Ellinwood, the president, reported the receipts of the year at $455,000, against $320,000 the preceding year. There was a debt remaining of $50,000 until a few days ago, when a legacy of $38,000 was received. Dr. Hall gave a gratifying account of the progress made. Remarks were also made by Dr. Adams.

BALTIMORE, May 14.—In the Superior Court, this morning, counsel for the Rev. L. D. Huston filed a declaration in the libel suit brought by Huston against the proprietors of the Baltimore American, laying damages at $100,000.

The committee appointed by the church authorities are about commencing their official investigation of the charges against Dr. Huston.

BROOKLYN, May 14.—In the Methodist Conference, to-day, Rev. Dr. Wild, delegate from Canada, addressed the Conference, saying: The Canadian Methodist Episcopal Church would prefer a union with the Episcopal Church of the United States rather than with other Methodist bodies in Canada under their present relations with England. He said the Methodist Episcopal Church in Canada is growing more and more favorable to independence of Church and State, for the non-interference of Europe with this Continent, and was politically and religiously growing tired of the interference of England. (Applause.)

The address of Dr. Wild, and that of his colleague, Dr. Benson, were, on motion of Dr. Haven, referred to a committee of nine.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, May 9.—Marshal Serrano shoots all insurrectionists he captures who deserted from the Spanish army to the cause of Don Carlos. He spares the lives of all other prisoners. Government troops attacked a band of Carlists under Palacios, and completely defeated them. Twelve of the insurgents were killed.

MADRID, May 12.—The Carlists continue to give in their submission to the government.

Serrano will concentrate his forces in the province of Biscay to-morrow.

LONDON, May 12.—The Observer says communications have been passing between the cabinets of Washington and London all the past week. The United States has made no definite proposition of a favorable character.

It is hoped, however, that President Grant may recommend, and the Senate approve, a modification of the treaty. The course of the British government before Parliament to-morrow depends on the reply of the Washington cabinet.

Public opinion in England is averse to any action which will close negotiations for a settlement.

HAVANA, May 13.—The acting captain general has received orders from the King to pardon the students charged with the desecration of Castanon's grave last November. The students were released from prison this morning, the prison garb taken off of them, and they were placed on board the ironclad Saragossa, where they will remain at complete liberty until an opportunity arrives for them to go to Spain. The students are well treated; their families are with them on board the Saragossa. The city is tranquil.

MADRID, May 14.—Fifteen thousand government troops are now concentrated in the department of Biscay. Opposed to them are seven thousand Carlists, who adopt the Fabian policy. The Carlist leaders who escaped into France have been arrested and returned by the French authorities.

COPENHAGEN, May 14.—A schooner which arrived to-day, from Iceland, reports a series of violent earthquake shocks at Hasvick, on the sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth of April. Twenty houses were destroyed, and several persons injured, but no lives lost.

THE M. E. CHURCH BOOK CONCERN.

The quadrennial report of the agent of the Methodist Book Concern, New York, shows that it owns $717,904 in the Book Concern building and fittings, or three-fourths of the value, the other fourth belonging to the Missionary Society, making the total cost $950,356. A portion of the building rented for $72,700 annually, which pays interest at seven per cent. upon the whole cost of the property, and leaves a balance of $6,175 toward paying the taxes and insurance.

The bonds of the Concern to the amount of half a million, toward the cost of the property, payable after three years, and due in fifteen years from June 1, 1869, were all taken at par and accrued interest, without brokerage or advertising.

The sales of books for the last four years amount to $2,426,840, and the profits to $362,094, of which $105,413 have been paid under General Conference appropriations, and a balance of $256,681 was added to the capital, which, November 13 last, amounted to $1,055,179.

The total assets, including real estate, were $1,850,315, and the liabilities $795,136.

There was at the same time cash amounting to $75,159 on hand, and there was due from the Missionary Society $63,351, and from other parties $241,220, which total, or $384,740, may be applied to liquidate the indebtedness of the Concern without interfering materially with its regular business, leaving the liabilities at $410,396, which can in a few years, by annual reductions, be entirely paid. Considerable space has been devoted to accounts of newspaper publications, all of which are flourishing.

Depositories at Boston, Pittsburg and Buffalo are doing well and in good hands, and the Concern was never in as good a condition for the transaction of business as at present.

SIXTO CARRASCO writes to the Eglise Libre a vivid account of the success which has attended the preaching of the gospel in Saragossa, in the north of Spain. Some time since the committee at Madrid opened a church there, which has been sustained in great part by the Evangelical Continental Society of London. The Aragonese are a rude, energetic, heroic race, but extremely bigoted and intolerant. At Saragossa the "Virgin of the Pillar" is adored as the idol of the city; whose pictures in the cathedral are always brilliantly lighted, while those of Christ are left in the shade; on whose altar mass is never said, but on another at its side, for the disregard of which custom a venturesome priest once forfeited his life.

In the face of such fanaticism it was no easy undertaking to open a chapel for evangelical worship. In the choice for a leader of the movement the lot, without doubt by divine direction, fell on a Spanish Christian, already aged, a man of faith and prayer, whose character in gentleness and prudence was just adapted to meet the rudeness and passion of the people. In the words of Carrasco: "The waves of an angry sea broke in fury against the rock which opposed them, then softly died on the shore which offered them no resistance. Such is the history of Don Eximeno at Saragossa!"

An announcement of evangelical preaching produced the greatest excitement throughout the city. The priests declared that the Virgin was insulted. The hall chosen could hold a thousand persons, yet it was filled to overflowing in a moment. An immense crowd gathered around outside, partly favorable, partly hostile, in which loud cries, blows, injuries were freely exchanged. The governor of the city then appeared on the scene, with force to disperse the crowd, and send off to prison the most seditious, among whom were several cures. He then went into the chapel, and publicly invited the preacher to continue his sermon, announcing to the assembly that a Protestant pastor and the Bishop of Saragossa were equals before the law, and that he as governor should see that the law was faithfully carried out.

From that time the chapel has been constantly filled—at first by the curious, afterward by those in sympathy with the gospel, and lately by many who have been reached and convicted by the truth. A number who do not dare to attend by day repair to the evening service, for instruction in the word of God and the way of eternal life. Perfect order and impressive silence characterize the assemblies. A church has been formed of zealous Christians, well organized and self-sustaining, having deacons and elders over its many divisions, throughout whose members a remarkable spirit of faith and love prevails. A reaction favorable to the gospel, too, has taken place among the people of Saragossa. Protestants are no longer looked upon with suspicion or disrespect, but are by all classes treated with esteem and honor. By the grace of God the strongest enemies of the gospel thus seem to be transformed into its best friends; and there is good ground for hope that it will triumph yet more widely among the Aragonese.—Independent.

FEAST DAYS IN PERU.—Not less than five hundred thousand people in Peru, it is estimated, observe as many as fifty feast days annually. Fifty times five hundred thousand are twenty-five million. This, then, is the number of days actually subtracted from the labor value of the country in one year in this way. If one of these days represents but the value of a single real in labor, the loss in the aggregate for one year alone to the material wealth of the country amounts to the large sum of two million five hundred thousand soles! But when we consider that the above computation tells but half the story—that probably more than three times that number of days are wasted upon unnecessary and oftentimes unmeaning feast days—the truth becomes imposing. Enough of time is yearly expended in feast days in Peru to build a first-class railway every five years.

FROM THE WORK.

Carthage Circuit, Jackson District, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: When I took charge of this circuit, a year ago last January, we had six appointments, one hundred members and one local elder. Through the blessings of God our number was increased one hundred per cent. Since my return this year the Lord has been with us, and the good work has been going on. We have now eleven appointments, two local elders, one local preacher, three exhorters and about two hundred and fifty members. We have an excellent young brother who expects to join the Conference next fall. Dr. O. H. P. Davis, who recently joined our church from the Congregational Methodist Church, is a good preacher, and is doing a good work on this circuit. Much of our success is due, under God, to the untiring energy and unquestioned ability of our good presiding elder, Bro. H. H. Montgomery, who has never missed a Quarterly Conference. Though our membership is tolerably large, it is scattered over such an area of country that we are forced to have union schools. We have seven of these, and some of them are partially using our uniform lessons, and are much pleased with them. We will organize one Methodist school next Sabbath, and they will use the uniform lessons.

We have no houses of worship, but we are now trying to build five good frame churches and one camp ground, and I doubt not that through the blessings of God we will succeed. The building committee of this place met, and resolved on renewed efforts to raise the subscription for the church here to $1,500. Yours in Christ,

J. M. WEEMS.

Vicksburg District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Vicksburg District Conference was held at Fayette, April 19 and 20. Bishop Kavanaugh was present, in fine health, and certainly never more in the spirit of his great work. W. A. Gunning made us an efficient secretary. The conference was well attended, and all the business properly supervised by it received careful attention. Evidently the work of God in the district is in a condition to cheer our hearts. A year ago the District Conference recommended the establishment of a "Warren county mission." At our late meeting the indefatigable F. M. Featherstun stood before us asking that his mission should be organized into a separate charge in the city of Vicksburg. Thus in half a year the mission has grown into a station. The conference recommended the appointment of a missionary or missionaries in the destitute portions of Adams, Jefferson and Claiborne counties. D. L. Rivers, R. D. Howe, W. J. Lum and E. R. Jones were elected delegates to the Annual Conference; G. W. Baynard, William Crutcher, E. S. Drake and J. G. Guice, alternates.

Centenary College and Port Gibson Collegiate Academy were justly commended to the confidence and support of those who have sons or daughters to educate.

Port Gibson was chosen as the place for holding the next session of the conference.

A word about the congregations and the religious services. The opening service on Thursday night was conducted by our venerable brother, J. G. Jones. The discourse was mainly historic, and no man is so well posted in the history of the church in this country as Bro. Jones. "What hath God wrought!" Bishop Kavanaugh preached, may I say, two glorious sermons—full of thought and full of divine unction. The congregations were uniformly large and deeply interested. The whole community seemed to be impressed for good, and some six or eight persons joined the church.

These District Conferences will yet grow to be a power in the church.

SUNNYSIDE, May 1, 1872.

East Pascagoula Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: With your consent I will write a few lines in reference to East Pascagoula circuit. As it has been but recently attached to the Mississippi Conference, it is almost unknown to most of her preachers.

Forty years ago the preacher did not fare as sumptuously as now. Many were his hardships and unbounded his field of labor to fill his appointments. Minus guide or compass, he traversed parts of two States, consisting of the counties of southwestern Alabama, from Mobile far up the Bigbee river, and the southeastern counties of Mississippi, often having for his couch the earth, and for his covering the starry sky, for his lullaby the chirping of the "Katy-did," with an occasional scream of the owl, or the growl of some supperless wolf. The rivers then had no ferries, the creeks no bridges; yet these men of brave hearts and willing minds subjected themselves to the powers that were, and went willingly to proclaim the tidings of salvation. Several of the pioneers of Pascagoula circuit still linger upon the shores of time. War-worn and battle-scarred, they with words of wisdom inspire us with new zeal as they bid us onward. Some of them, with harness on and glittering steel, still meet the foe of King Immanuel, and their trumpets give no uncertain sound. We refer to Fathers Garrett, Riley, Abernathy and Moody. Many years have elapsed since these veterans labored and prayed for sinners on the banks of the Pascagoula, Leaf and Chickasawha rivers. Many changes have come upon preacher and people. Time and toil have dampened the fires of youth, and put their marks of decay upon the brow of these ministers. Infants that were held in their arms and dedicated to God by baptism are now past the meridian of life, and many the honored officers of the churches they established. We would say of these brethren that their names are still remembered, and their labors of love and sacrifice have not been in vain. Frequently we are questioned by fathers and mothers in Israel—trembling with age close beside the dark river—concerning their welfare, telling us, at the same time, that they were converted and joined the church under their ministry.

Pascagoula circuit has kept pace with the march of time in the way of intelligence, comfort and sustenance for the preachers. Several circuits have been formed from her territory. The frightful creeks have been spanned by bridges, her rivers are measured by the track of the iron horse, the growl of the wolf is hushed, and the wilderness has been peopled and blossoms as the rose. The uninviting log cabins, that sheltered, without partition, both sire and son, mother, daughter, and preacher, have been swept away, and comfortable mansions, with prophets' chambers attached, reared in their stead. Schools have been patronized, and intelligence has uprooted the repose of ignorance and superstition. Churches, large and comfortable, have been erected, and Sabbath schools are crowded with happy children, learning more and more of Christ and his mission. Bishops and doctors of divinity, with now and then a Bible agent or temperance lecturer, have learned that time can be profitably employed by visiting us. And last, but not least, Pascagoula circuit has a beautiful and comfortable parsonage—to which the writer has just moved—built and paid for within the last three months, at a cost of about $1,500. For this home of comfort many thanks are due to two estimable ladies of our church, Mrs. Emma V. Vaughn and Miss Kate Griffin. The zeal manifested by them while collecting the money, during the inclement months of January and February, deserves public notice. Facing wind and storm, they suffered none to pass without a fleece from their purse. Heaven bless them for their labor of love! What would become of the itinerant were there no ladies in sympathy with him in his mission? How many of our preachers would go stockingless and suspenderless? But, thank God, there are those who first anticipate the wants of their preacher, and first relieve them. These are the ladies of our Zion.

IT IS A HOPEFUL and encouraging sign of the times that the consciences of Catholics, not a few, in various parts of Europe are being awakened to a sense of sinfulness of idolatry as practiced, in some of their chapels, seeing that Scripture so repeatedly and expressly forbids worship offered to any but to God only (Deut. iv, 15, 16; Lev. xxvi, 1; Hab. ii, 18, 19; Acts. x, 26; Rev. xix, 10.) Prayer is earnestly asked that the understandings and consciences of Catholics everywhere may be enlightened to perceive the exceeding sinfulness of "bowing down to graven images," in direct opposition to the Second Commandment, which in many of the catechisms has been entirely omitted, the last being divided into two in order to make up the number ten.

CAMP MEETING.

A camp meeting will be held on the camp ground purchased by the New Orleans District Conference, commencing on Friday, June 21, and continuing to Friday, June 28, to which brethren, clerical and lay, of adjacent cities and country are invited.

SUNDAY IN NASHVILLE.

The venerable Dr. Levick Pierce preached on Sunday morning, May 5, in the First Presbyterian church, and Dr. Rush at night. Dr. Sargent preached at McKendree in the morning, and Bishop Kavanaugh at night. Dr. Rush preached at Elm Street in the morning, and Bishop Marvin at night. Bishop Kavanaugh preached at Claiborne's in the morning, and B. F. White at night. C. D. Donaldson preached at North Nashville in the morning, and Bishop Keener at night, and at Tulip Street in the morning, and S. S. Sweet at night. Bishop Pierce preached at Hobson in the morning, and at North Edgefield at night. Bishop Marvin preached at Trinity in the morning, Dr. Green preached at the Nashville and Chattanooga Depot (Round House,) in the afternoon—a good movement, which we hope will be followed up. Other appointments were filled by resident ministers. The communion was administered at several of the churches, and there were seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Nashville Christian Advocate, May 10.

NOTICE.

Delegates and visitors to the Selma District Conference, to convene at Orrville, May 29, are notified that carriages will await them at White's Bluff, Alabama river, and at Orrville station, Selma and N. O. railroad, on Wednesday and Thursday, the twenty-ninth and thirtieth of May.

SABBATH SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY.—On Sunday afternoon, the twelfth instant, the Presbyterian Sabbath schools of our city gathered at Rev. Dr. Palmer's church to celebrate their fifth anniversary. Several clergymen were present, and hundreds of gentlemen and ladies connected with the church and the schools. The assemblage of children and their teachers was very large. The children were over 1,500 in number. The picture presented by so many bright young faces, the sweet music arising from so many fresh voices joining in songs of praise to the Most High, were most delightful, indeed, to the hundreds of older people who listened and looked on, carried back, as it were, to their own childish days.

From the report of Mr. W. O. Raymond these schools are evidently in a flourishing condition. There are thirteen schools, of which five are mission. The teachers number 232; the roll-call shows 2,732 scholars, and the average attendance 1,845.—Picayune.

THE ANGEL OF PATIENCE.

Beside the tollsome way,
Lonely and dark, by fruits and flowers unbless,
Which my worn feet tread sadly, day by day,
Longing in vain for rest,

An angel softly walks,
With pale, sweet face, and eyes cast meekly down,
The while, from withered leaves and flowerless stalks,
She weaves my fitting crown.

A sweet and patient grace,
A look of firm endurance, true and tried,
Of suffering meekly borne, rests on her face—
So pure, so glorified.

And when my fainting heart
Desponds and murmurs at its adverse fate,
Then quietly the angel's bright lips part,
Whispering softly: "Wait!"

"Patience!" she sweetly saith;
"The Father's mercies never come too late;
Gird thee with patient strength and trusting faith,
And firm endurance—wait!"

Angel, behold I wait!
Wearing the thorny crown through all life's hours,
Wait till thy hand shall ope the eternal gate,
And change the thorns to flowers.

THE LITTLE PEOPLE.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

A dreary place would be this earth,
Were there no little people in it;
The song of life would lose its mirth,
Were there no children to begin it;

No little forms, like buds to grow,
And make the admiring heart surrender;
No little hands on breast and brow,
To keep the thrilling life-chords tender.

The sterner souls would grow more stern,
Unfeeling nature more inhuman,
And man to stoic coldness turn,
And woman would be less than woman.

Life's song, indeed, would lose its charm,
Were there no babies to begin it;
A doleful place this world would be,
Were there no little people in it.

REMARKS ON BISHOP PIERCE'S THIRD LETTER.

The Bishop complains of my style—my first remarks were too sharp, and the last too diffuse. I find no fault with his style; it is always racy and elegant. It reminds me of an incident: I met a thoughtful man, just come from church, where he had heard a popular divine, and was in doubt whether to be pleased or not. "What was the text?" I asked. "It was First Corinthians, ii, 1-4, and," said he, "the doctor preached from those words an eloquent sermon against eloquent preaching."

We make some progress. Bishop Pierce relinquishes his opposition to the University, except the theological department. I expected as much from his candor after my explanations. Evidently he assailed the entire scheme hastily, and under a misapprehension of its bearings toward other church colleges. The proposed Central University covers territory otherwise unappropriated, and aims to do a work similar to that of other educational institutions—and better, if it can. The co-operating Conferences may now go on to build it, upon the surest basis, and under church auspices to make literary men, scholars, schoolmasters, engineers, lawyers and physicians; but they must not furnish a specific education and training for preachers.

It is well to eliminate so many elements, and narrow the controversy to a single issue. The Bishop confines his last letter to the theological department, and deals his earnest blows against that "head and front of the scheme." Such it is, and ought to be. When the church, in any capacity, goes about the work of education, is it preposterous to entertain principally its theological aspect? First of all, let her make provision for the furniture and training of her own teachers. Lay the Bible as the foundation, and prepare for its interpretation and its defense. Who will attend to this work, if the church does not? Lawyers and doctors and scholars may wait, or be made elsewhere; but religious teachers, well qualified, the church must have. The order which places the theological department at the head and front of a church university scheme seems so proper and reasonable, the wonder is that anybody ever questioned it.

I am not without a feeble hope of coming to an agreement with my honored colleague even on this department, at least so far as this—that if he cannot conscientiously help it forward, he will not feel that he is therefore obliged to hinder it. Let me assure him, then:

1. It is no part of any such "school of the prophets" to make attendance upon it, in whole or in part, a sine qua non of entrance into the ministry or the Conference, or the highest office of the church. Here we hold that some churches, in stressing an educated ministry, are greatly in error.

2. "Aping and imitation" is not designed, and would not be accomplished by our theological school. With one or many of them in full operation, our ministry, in its mode and operation, and its range of adaptation, would be differentiated widely from the Presbyterians, the Protestant Episcopalians and others, after whom the Bishop more than intimates we are taking pattern. We are Methodists, and mean to be; but cannot admit that others have a monopoly of learning, or that Methodism is not entitled to, and may not use, its highest subsidiary aid in her great work.

3. We do not call preachers.

4. We do not engage to make those who are called, but to help them make themselves—to aid them, by judiciously directed studies, to show themselves approved unto God, workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. If, in this process, any of them happen to become sound biblical critics, no great harm will be done. We hold that exhorting is good, and all the better for having an accurate exegetical basis.

5. We would not set aside the present Course of Study for undergraduates in our itinerant ranks; but in addition, and conformity thereto, provide larger and equally legitimate facilities for a successful ministry, to which they may resort who have time and taste and talent for it.

6. Our aim is not to train a ministry for any one class of society, but to compass all classes. Those who claim for us, as Bishop Pierce does, a "mission to the masses," and not to "the favored class, a select few," narrow our commission, and reduce our preachers to hewers of wood and drawers of water among God's laborers. We cannot accept the situation. The church that excludes itself from any one class, high, middle or low, has a firm hold on none. To conserve the fruits of our own ministry we must be prepared to follow our people into the higher range of mental culture to which the age, and the church itself, is elevating them, or into the poverty to which misfortune returns them, as well as to take them in the condition in which a rude civilization presents them. There is no danger, hardly a possibility, in the proposed plan of ministerial improvement, of isolating ourselves from what Bishop Pierce is pleased to call "the common people." The greater includes the less—he who can instruct the wise can instruct the simple. Moreover, do what you may for the learning of preachers, you must always have, on our plan, a large proportion who think the thought and speak the language of the unlearned.

7. Finally, after our best efforts to equip the workmen, we hold that the work can be done only in prayerful dependence upon the presence and assistance of the Holy Ghost.

The apology for these self-evident averments is that their opposites seem to be taken for granted by some. It is humiliating to be under the necessity of repeating them so often.

Notwithstanding his horror of "aping and imitation," the Bishop seems to like the Baptist plan. Hear him:

"I know the Methodists and Baptists are regarded by 'certain' as a plebeian set, but to these common people the whole country is largely indebted for the gospel. The Episcopal sect is too delicate for country fare. It must dwell in town. The Presbyterian training is too slow and stiff to meet the urgent and diversified calls of a promiscuous population. The Methodists and the Baptists have a ministry right out from the people—understanding their thoughts, feelings and language; and however despised and berated, they are the instruments which God has honored for the evangelization of the people. Saying no more of our Baptist brethren—they can defend themselves—the secret of our strength and progress, of popular approval and almost universal acceptance under God, has been our mode of inducting men into the ministry. Let God call, the church indorse, the Conference receive, and the Bishop send forth—urging them to study, pray," etc.

Our plan for an average instruction of pastors is better than that of the Baptists, and above theirs; but for higher theological education they have a policy that will put them above us, unless there is a movement on our part in that direction. Already they have two theological schools in the South—one of them very ably officered—and they are doing more than we are for the specific training of their rising ministry.

Last January, in Florence, Alabama, this question was propounded to a company of preachers and laymen: "We are more like the Baptists than any other church in the manner of inducting men into the ministry. How is it, then, that they can meet in convention and discuss the endowment and location of a theological seminary, and nobody opposes? Their unlearned preachers and congregations raise collections for ministerial education. Their most provincial papers advocate the cause. Whereas, if a plan of ministerial education among Methodists is started—a theological school talked of—there is a great prejudice at once got up against the project and the projectors, and we hear of caste among preachers, and all that. How is this?"

An ingenious presiding elder present offered this solution: "Many years ago the Baptists divided on that and other subjects, and all the opposition element went off to itself, and is commonly known as the Hardshell. With the liberal wing it is a question of orthodoxy to stand up squarely on those subjects; but if you want to raise a fuss just stir the question of educating the ministry among the Hardshells. You will hear Old Hundred."

When the Bishop refers us to "our Baptist brethren" for an example of "a ministry right out from the people," he will please tell us which wing he means, and which side he takes. It is a cardinal tenet with the Hardshells that "the Lord will call all the educated ministers he wants," and that critics are a great evil; and they all agree that the best preachers are those "who have never been to college at all—hardly to school."

It is a noteworthy fact that at the division of the Baptists the Hardshells were in the majority—they claim to be, and of right are, the Primitives; but all that makes the Baptist name respectable to-day is due to what the other party has accomplished. This has increased—that decreased. The Hardshells have gone on fighting missions and an educated ministry and organs and choirs until they have fought well nigh out of every city and town and enlightened neighborhood, and have consigned themselves where Bishop Pierce wishes this theological scheme—"to the shades of oblivion."

The two forces, once separated in the Baptist Church, followed their tendencies. Let him that readeth understand. Of course there is to be no separation among us. The two forces will exist side by side in Methodism, and the question is: Which of them shall control the policy of the church?

The Bishop scouts the idea of "a training" school for young preachers:

"Training! by 'tutors, lectures and library;' the professor himself, perhaps, never led a class or traveled a circuit or conducted a revival, and knows as little of the details of an itinerant's life and duty as those book men who, in counsel with their own peculiar tastes and habitudes, advise my colleague of the wants of the church!"

The reader will not fail to note that the force of this alarming sentence turns upon one little word—perhaps.

Let me give, as nearly as possible, in his own words, what was said to me by an old preacher, when Bishop Pierce's first letter appeared. He read it with grief, and some surprise. He is one of the people, eminently—one of those men "who have understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do." Without advantages in his youth, he has risen, by rare natural gifts, to an eminence of influence and usefulness that few educated men may equal. He was at the convention in Memphis, and no member so earnestly advocated its measures or did more to shape them. Opposers said he was the last person to favor a theological school, for he was himself the best argument against it. But his clear mind and broad observation dictated another course. He went for the "training" school, and, on reading the Bishop's strictures, said:

"After all said and done, there is a difference between the old times when I began, and these times of colleges and schools; and the advantage is in favor of the old times in one marked particular. We had a chance to learn, though we set out knowing but little, and it was a pretty good chance. The awkward, timid, ignorant young preacher was worked in harness with an old, seasoned, tried one. The old preacher encouraged him, taught him how to preach, and even how to pray, how to be a pastor, how to administer discipline, how to organize and guide a church, how to behave himself; sometimes he scolded him sharply, and the youngster took it, for he was a sub, and felt it—took it better than any of them will take reproof now, when they feel their importance as principals. So the senior helped the junior in his studies, his manners, and brought him along by degrees. More than that—the circuits were large, and the young man could preach an old sermon till he made up a new one. I was as unlapped a youth as ever set out at nineteen, when I was taken on trial by the Conference; but the first year I was put on a big circuit as second preacher, and so the next year, and the next and the next; and then I was put in command of a ship by myself. Not so now. Railroads and turnpikes and telegraphs, and what not, have cut up the work. The people demand Sunday preaching, and the pastor to live among them. The times, the age, lead to stations and small circuits. I have seen Bishops and Conferences trying to stem the tide, but it can't be turned, though it may be checked. The list of appointments in a large Conference may not have half a dozen preachers in couples; what used to be the rule is now the exception. Young men, raw, untried, at their first appearance, are sent to circuits and stations as preachers in charge. May be, with not half a dozen subjects worked up into sermons to begin on, they must preach to the same people twice every Sunday for a year, right straight on. Sometimes the preacher breaks down under it; but oftener the congregation. The strain is too great. Then he must not only teach, but govern the church, and he knows little of the principles of church government. The fact is, we had a better chance to become pastors and preachers than the young men of to-day. The old plan of bringing in workers is gone; I saw it going out years ago. You can't fetch it back—no use trying. We must fall upon something that will do what the old plan did for us. I was once opposed to theological seminaries, and talked against preacher-factories as big as anybody, and I am opposed to them yet on the cast-iron plan of some folks; but we must have something to take the place of the old plan, and a theological school, guarded and checked and Methodized, is the best, and to me it seems the only substitute."

I was impressed by that talk, and turned to the minutes and verified the story. I find, in 1826, on Jackson circuit, George W. Morris, preacher in charge, and this man the junior under him. Next year he is junior or second preacher on Madison circuit—A. Driskill, preacher in charge. Next year he is on the Limestone circuit, under Joshua Boucher; next year he is second preacher in Nashville—James Gwin being preacher in charge; and next year, in same city, he is under John M. Holland. Then he is put in charge of a work, and goes on. Look at that faculty—Holland, Gwin, Boucher, Driskill. Dull indeed was the pupil who could pass through that training school without being fitted for the pastor's care. In 1831 a list of eleven young men was admitted on trial in the Georgia Conference. G. F. Pierce was one—a prophet, and the son of a prophet, also a graduate of his State University. The appointments read: Alcovi circuit, Jer. Freeman, G. F. Pierce. Next year—Augusta, J. O. Andrew, G. F. Pierce. And next year—Savannah, G. F. Pierce. Even Stephen Olin, great from the beginning, on being admitted on trial into the South Carolina Conference, in 1824, was not put in charge of Charleston, but appointed there under Samuel Dunwody and J. Howard. How these old records demonstrate the fact, startling though it be, that the average itinerant pastor of thirty and forty years ago entered upon his responsibilities better prepared than the young pastor of to-day!

Perhaps the Bishop will say: "Let us, in spite of times and changes, get back to the old plan." He will please set us the example. In the Conferences presided over by him in 1870, the minutes show forty admitted on trial, and twenty-nine of these recruits were straightway put in charge of circuits, stations—made pastors of a membership varying from fifty to four hundred souls. The Conferences over which he presided in 1871 admitted forty-four; and I think if he will look over his lists he will find that he put nearly forty of them in charge of churches at the beginning.

I do not blame him for this—his colleagues do the same—necessity is laid on them; but it is strange that with these facts before him, he does not see that the old "mode of inducting men into the ministry," which he eulogizes and relies on, has passed away, and we must have something in its stead. In view of these things the older Bishops said, in 1866: "We specially bring to your attention the importance of an institute for the proper training of young preachers. That we should make some proper arrangements for the more thorough training of our young men before they are received into the Conference, and sent forth to minister in the church of Christ, appears to us to be so obvious as to need no argument to prove it."

I can think of nothing so calculated to make a young man smother convictions as the course proposed for him. Without preparation, to be thrust into the thick of the fight; to be placed where more sermons and services are called for than he can render; the church crying to the Bishop, "Send us an educated minister," and yet doing nothing to provide an educated ministry.

On the whole, we are advancing. We have done well—can do better. Admit that our ministry is superior to any other, the question still remains: Are we supplying a pastorate equal to the demand upon us? The fathers won positions which, my observation assures me, we are barely holding, and some we are not holding.

The Bishop gives me notice of strong supports in reserve:

"If I were alone, I should stand firmly to the position I have taken, but I am thankful to say that I have received letters from leading men in well-nigh all the Conferences sustaining my views, and assuring me of the hearty sympathy and support of preachers and people."

I, too, have received encouraging letters, but as these Quaker guns are not to be brought into action, we will not count them. Doubtless his letters of commendation outnumber mine, for he has the popular side of this question. I knew it before. A proposition to increase knowledge was never popular at first. It is an up-hill grade, and one man can pull back stronger than two can push forward. Let not the friends and patrons of biblical chairs and schools applaud too soon; for all the Bishop's appeals against a theological institute bear with equal force against that modified form of it. Then, the scheme costs something, and persuasion is more easy that saves money. Some are needlessly offended at a suggested improvement, as a reflection upon themselves. More than all, prejudice is against the cause I advocate. To glorify Methodism is more acceptable than pointing out its wants. On this subject I feel as I did some years ago, when writing in favor of lay delegation. It was dubbed an innovation, an "aping and imitation" of others, etc.; but that came, and so will this come. Our people fear God and love the church, and their prejudices are not invincible.

It is with unspeakable reluctance that I have appeared in the church press controverting the position of Bishop Pierce; but I could not do otherwise. The issue involved is vital to the welfare of Methodism, and I venture to lift my own, even against his more powerful voice. Conscience is in it, and convictions deepen. And I am not alone. Would that our people and preachers, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, could be aroused on this subject. We have delayed too long already. Hear it, O ye Southern Methodists—this is the mired wheel; put your shoulders to it and PUSH.

TO YOUNG MEN.

MR. EDITOR: By close observation and some reflection we learn a great deal in this world. Changes are being constantly wrought. Every observer has marked the instability of man, the inconstancy of man, in every age of the world. It is a lamentable fact that man is not satisfied to "let well enough alone." This is an age of great mental excitement. The literary world is astir, the political world is in a dreadful commotion, and the actors in all departments of temporal affairs are aspiring to higher spheres, to loftier positions, and the consequence is that we are running into an endless vortex of misery. Men are striving, with the wildest enthusiasm, to get into high positions, in many instances entirely regardless of honor—for the sake of the rewards promised by those positions, caring nothing for the welfare of those who placed them there.

What are the young men of the South struggling for in the present day? Are they not, multitudes of them, exerting every nerve to get into a situation in which true honor and strict veracity are both utterly ignored? Why is it that so few young men of the South turn their attention to agricultural affairs? The appalling fact is that the country is going to be completely impoverished by men who are striving for positions of affluence and luxury. Look at the deplorable condition of the South to-day, compared with that of which it so proudly boasted twelve years ago! And doubtless some will ask why this is so. The reason is obvious, the cause is evident. We, the people of the South, have hurled our fair sunny South into its present crippled and dependent condition. During the last desperate war in which we were engaged, instead of every man who felt an interest in the South putting his shoulder to the wheel as honest, industrious freemen should do, there arose an egregious aspiration in the minds of all to seek position, to shun the perils of battle, to speculate by taking advantage of the position into which they had contrived to get themselves. And what was the awful consequence? An entire demoralization of the government, and a perfect crush of the liberties of the South.

It does seem that the bitter experience of the past would teach us an important lesson.

We have said that this is "a fast age." It is an age that calls forth all the energies of youth. Every nerve, every exertion is brought into requisition to keep abreast with the progress of the times. There is no mercy shown to the sluggard, no sympathy exercised toward the fogies of the present day. It is indeed an age of progression, a period of improvement, an epoch in which all are trying to inscribe their names on the loftiest pinnacles of fame and grandeur. But are we not fanatic in our attempts to ascend to fame? Are we not enthusiastic in our desperate efforts to become opulent? Are we not in many instances trampling down those virtues which we are so imperatively commanded to cultivate? Do we not sacrifice that tranquillity of conscience, that peacefulness of mind which it is the privilege of every freeman to enjoy, in our eagerness to amass the riches of this world? Are we not neglecting to give the honor to our Maker, which his word so lucidly shows is our duty, by turning our attention too much to the accumulation of wealth? Why do men thus blast their happiness, how themselves beneath the frowns of an enraged God, and at last lose their souls?

Let me say a word to you, young men: Cease aspiring for high positions, in which integrity and honor are reduced to such stipulated degrees, and endeavor to fill a position in life that will be both happy and honorable. There is more pleasure in farming, more enjoyment in tilling the earth, more health in sowing the seed, more honor in reaping "the golden harvest," than in any political office that is now offered to office-seekers. Go, plow the field, reap the harvest, and live as God has said we must—"by the sweat of the brow."

GREEN FARM HIGH SCHOOL.

MR. EDITOR: We understand that our old friend and former tutor, the Rev. F. M. Grace, who was formerly a professor in East Tennessee University, but recently president of Hiwassee College, will, on the first of August next, open a school near Birmingham, Alabama, to be called Green Farm High School.

Prof. Grace is an excellent man, a sincere Christian gentleman, and as as a teacher is surpassed by few. He has come nearer giving general satisfaction, and is more universally loved and respected by his pupils than any other teacher we ever knew.

Persons wishing to have their boys well educated, at the least possible cost and time, will do well to patronize him. A better family cannot be found with whom to board than his own. The greater part of his life, which has not been spent in educating souls, has been spent in educating the young.

AN OLD STUDENT.

MR. SPURGEON ON LONG SERMONS.—In the course of an address delivered recently to workmen, Mr. Spurgeon commented on the excuses people made for not going to church. Some persons, said Mr. Spurgeon, complain that they cannot understand the sermons they hear. The reason was that the ministers would use big words. He (Mr. Spurgeon) always endeavored to get rid of all the big words out of his sermons, and was as particular as their wives were to get the stones out of the plum-pudding. They would get in somehow, but the main thing was to preach as simply as possible. Long sermons also were a great evil. If a person preached a long sermon it was because he had nothing to say. It might appear odd, but it was nevertheless a fact that when people had nothing to say they took a long time about it; but when they had something worth telling they out with it at once. Therefore, he repeated, when a man makes a long sermon he sets out with a very little, and begins to spin, spin, spin. He was of the same opinion as Dr. Chalmers, who was once asked how long it took to make a sermon. That, he replied, depended upon how long you wanted it. If your sermon is to be half an hour long, it will take you three days. If it is three-quarters of an hour, it may take you two days, or perhaps only one; but if you are going to preach for an hour, why there is not much occasion to think a great deal about it. It may be done in an hour.

OPEN COMMUNION.—The Baptist Union says:

We are constantly receiving letters from ministers and laymen in all parts of the country, who have embraced the original Baptist doctrine of open communion. There are many more of this class of persons than we supposed.

It further observes, there are at least one hundred and fifty thousand free-communion Baptists in the United States, outside of the larger Baptist denomination, in at least a half-dozen different organizations, and known by as many different names. There are also large numbers of liberal Baptists in the larger Baptist body who ought to stand up more boldly for liberal principles, protest against intolerance, and extend the hand of fellowship to and co-operate with evangelical Baptist churches which close communionists disown; and they will do so if the case is fairly laid before them.

CASUAL THOUGHTS are sometimes of great value. One of these may prove the key to open for us a yet unknown apartment in the palace of truth, or a yet unexplored tract in the paradise of sentiment that environs it.

THIS SAYING is ascribed to John Brown: "It is a mighty big thing for a man to do all he can."

THE CARPENTER.

BY GEORGE MACDONALD.

Oh Lord, at Joseph's humble bench,
Thy hands did handle saw and plane;
Thy hammer nails did drive and clench,
Avoiding knot and humoring grain.

That thou didst seem, thou wast indeed;
In sport thy tools thou didst not use;
Nor, helping hind's* or fisher's need,
The laborer's hire, too nice, refuse.

Lord, might I be but as a saw,
A plane, a chisel, in thy hand!
No, Lord! I take it back in awe—
Such prayer for me is far too grand.

I pray, oh Master, let me lie
As on thy bench, the favored wood;
Thy saw, thy plane, thy chisel ply,
And work me into something good.

No, no; ambition, holy-high,
Urges for more than both to pray:
Come in, oh gracious force, I cry—
Oh workman, share my shed of clay.

Then I, at bench or desk or oar,
With last or needle, net or pen,
As thou in Nazareth of yore,
Shall do the Father's will again.

AN AUTO DE FE, OR ACT OF FAITH.

BY JOHN S. C. ABBOTT.

Charles the Fifth, the partially crazed son of a thoroughly crazed mother, upon abdicating the throne, enjoined it upon his son and heir, Philip the Second, to watch over the interests of the Catholic Church by punishing any deviation from its doctrines with unrelenting severity. The Pope issued a decree to the Spanish inquisitor-general, ordering him to inflict the most rigorous punishment upon all, of whatever rank or profession, who were suspected of heresy. Philip the Second followed this edict by issuing another, which condemned all to be burned alive who bought, sold or read those prohibited books which advocated the principles of the Reformation.

On the first day after issuing this decree eight hundred were arrested in Seville alone. The accused were plunged into dungeons, whence they were dragged one by one alone, terrified, bewildered, before the terrible tribunal of the Inquisition, to be exposed to the horrible torture of the rack, in the attempt to extort from them a confession of guilt. The first act of burning under these decrees took place in Valladolid in May, 1559. The example was followed in twelve of the principal cities in Spain. In October of the same year there was another of these horrible acts of burning, in the city of Valladolid, upon a scale of appalling magnitude.

The Pope granted an indulgence of forty days to all who should be present at the spectacle. Thus two hundred thousand people were assembled. The tragedy took place on the great square of the city. A royal gallery was constructed for the King and his court. At six o'clock in the morning all the bells in the city commenced tolling a funeral knell. A body of troops led the procession as the victims were dragged from the dungeons of the Inquisition. There were two classes. The first consisted of those who were to be punished by confiscation of property and imprisonment; the second of those who were to suffer death. Those doomed to be burned were dressed in a loose gown of yellow cloth, and wore upon the head a paper cap of conical form, both being covered with pictures of flames fanned by demons. Two priests walked by the side of each one of the victims, urging him to abjure his errors. An immense concourse of dignitaries of state and of the common people closed the procession.

After a sermon by the Bishop of Zamora, the whole assembled multitude kneeled down and took a solemn oath to maintain the Catholic faith and to inform against any one whom they suspected of swerving from it. Some of the victims, their spirits crushed by torture and appalled by the terrors of the stake, recanted. This merely saved them from the flames. Their crime of heresy was deemed so great that they were still punished with the loss of property, and many of them with life-long imprisonment in the dungeons of the Inquisition. Their doom being publicly announced from the elevated platform where the inquisitors were seated, they were led back to prison.

And now all eyes were turned to the little band of thirty who were to attest their fidelity to their convictions of truth amid the flames of martyrdom. Many of these were men of illustrious rank, and still more renowned for their intelligence and virtues. Long imprisonment and the tortures of the rack had left their cruel imprint upon them. Their countenances were wan, their frames emaciate, and with feeble steps they tottered along, exposed to the insults and the pitiless jeers of the fanatic multitude, who regarded them as demons incarnate, richly meriting their doom.

Those who were willing to make what was called confession, were allowed the great privilege of being put to death by strangling before their bodies were exposed to the consuming flames. Thus they were saved from the agony of being burned alive; but their dead bodies were chained to the stake until reduced to ashes by the flames. Enfeebled by suffering, all but two thus purchased exemption from being burned alive.

One of these noble sufferers was a Florentine of illustrious birth, by the name of Don Carlos de Seso. He had taken up his residence in Spain as he had married a Spanish lady of high rank. Having adopted the principles of the Reformation, he was arrested, and for fifteen months he had been confined in one of the dungeons of the Inquisition. De Seso had been a favored member of the court of Charles the Fifth, and stood high in the regard of the Emperor. As he was passing the royal gallery to be chained to the stake, he looked up to Philip, whom he well knew, and said:

"Is it thus you allow your innocent subjects to be persecuted?"

The fanatic King replied: "If it were my own son I would fetch the wood to burn him were he such a wretch as thou art."

He was bound to the stake. The dry combustible fagots were piled up around him. The torch was applied. The hot and billowy flames enveloped him, and in that chariot of fire, whose momentary agony was succeeded by eternal bliss, the soul of the martyr was borne to the paradise of God.

Domingo de Rexas, son of the Marquis of Posa, was the fellow-sufferer of De Seso. As he had been a Dominican monk he was particularly exposed to the jeers of the mob. He was led to the stake in his sacerdotal robes. They were then removed and the grotesque and hideously painted vestments of the condemned were placed upon him. As he attempted to address the multitude Philip ordered him to be gagged. With violence and great cruelty a piece of cleft wood was thrust into his mouth. Thus he was bound to the stake. Amid volumes of smoke and flame his spirit was liberated from the convulsed body and ascended to the bosom of its Savior.

This cruel exhibition occupied eight hours, from six in the morning until two o'clock in the afternoon. The persecution thus commenced, raged year after year with ever-increasing fury over benighted Spain. Neither age, sex nor rank was spared. So fiercely was this persecution pushed that nearly every trace of the Protestant religion was eradicated from the kingdom. No freedom of conscience was allowed; education was discouraged; civil as well as ecclesiastical despotism trampled upon all human rights; and Spain became what we now see her to be, one of the most debased, impoverished and wretched nations of Europe.

It is for no purpose of charging these cruelties of a past age upon the modern papacy that we recall this story of horror that no one now would probably re-enact. Indeed, the best Roman Catholic writers disavow the terrible scenes of the Spanish Inquisition; which, despite the approval of one Pope, were openly condemned by his successors. But it cannot be useless to remember the martyrs of the past, or to reinvigorate our own faltering and too feeble faith, in times that seem to try them, by recollecting what testimony the Christian heroes of past ages have borne to the sustaining power of a gracious and ever-blessed Savior.—Christian Weekly.

DEATH OF "DR. DULCIS."

The room in which Dr. Dulcis lay dying was a large one, with its outlook toward the square, the trees of which were a strange pleasure to him as they waved to and fro outside his windows. He had asked them to raise the blind that he might look once more on the gay spring sky, and the familiar branches and the twinkling leaves. Kelso was there, and Mrs. Dulcis.

"Those leaves," he was saying, "on their background of glorious blue, remind me of man on the panel of eternity. That never passes or alters, though clouds may intervene to darken it; these die and fall, and are blown away. Whither?"

"Ah!" said Lord Bantam, as he and Sophronia silently saluted their friends, "whither, Dr. Dulcis? Who can answer that question?"

"Philosophy cannot, my dear young friend," cried the doctor. "Positivism declines to do it—Eclecticism strives to ignore the question—and all men lie down before it and wonder."

He paused a few minutes, gazing steadily into the outer light, and smiling to himself.

"I am looking out into the heavenly sunlight from the gloom of this room. This is a true emblem of our souls, prostrate, weak, helpless, hardly able to cry out, darkened in by the curtains of ignorance, folly and sin—and out there, there, the supernal sun-glow, immeasurable and everlasting!"

He turned to Lord and Lady Bantam.

"My young friends," said he, "it is well that you, in the zenith of life and prosperity, and intellectual activities, should look upon this scene. Here am I stretched upon the rack of the inevitable. There is no Eclectic formula for our conduct in the valley of the shadow of death, except obliviousness and resignation. For me there is more—there is life and hope and peace. Christ is here with help and promise. Christ goes before, and clears a shining way. I needed just now a friendly hand to draw you curtain, and let in the fullness of the sunlight. So we all need the loving hand of Christ to unvail for us the curtained abysm of God's shining infinity—Christ only!" These words he repeated several times: "Christ only."

Bantam, respecting the dying man's enthusiasm, replied with a whisper of sympathy.

Dr. Dulcis looked round for his children; the haze was dimming his eyes. They were called in. The fair-crowned child of former days was now a fine young woman, and the velvet-coated boy had developed into a jacketed stripling, with student paleness and melancholy eyes. As they all drew near his bedside he gave them one by one his blessing, and charged them to meet him in heaven, with a confidence as great as he would have shown in engaging to meet them at the house of a friend.

"Now," said he, "sing our Sabbath hymn, Virginia. I cannot blow the bellows for you now, but you need no music! I think I hear another organ playing, but it sounds far away. 'The sands of time are sinking.'"

As he folded his hands on his bosom, and lay back on his pillow, the children set up softly, to a plaintive air, the song he had asked for:

The sands of time are sinking,
The dawn of heaven breaks;
The summer morn I've sighed for,
The fair, sweet morn awakes.
Dark, dark hath been the midnight,
But dayspring is at hand,
And glory, glory dwelleth
In Immanuel's land.

* * * * * * *

Just then a brighter smile transfigured his pale features as sudden sunlight glints over a corn-field. Mrs. Dulcis clasped her hands, and hung over him, looking eagerly down into the face that was upturned toward her and heaven. * * * It was now only a Parian mask with a stony smile. * * * Dr. Dulcis was no longer there.

Not a word was said. The widowed woman was weeping in Sophronia's arms. Kelso had buried his face in the pillow near which he had been leaning, and his hard northern frame shook with emotion. The choristers, divining the awful mystery, broke into sobs subdued by their fear. Bantam restrained himself only by a powerful effort, and finally rushed from the room.

The Eclectic religion had its practical beauties, its brilliant esthetic attractions, its noble sentiments and principles, its healthy incredulities, but the young lord questioned in his soul that hour if it could ever make men face death as they would look upon sunshine and roses.

PHANTOM LIMBS.

It has long been known to surgeons that when a limb has been cut off the sufferer does not lose the consciousness of its existence. This has been found to be true in nearly every such case. Only about five per cent. of the men who have suffered amputation ever have any feeling of the part as being present. Of the rest, there are a few who in time come to forget the missing member; while the remainder seem to retain a sense of its existence so vivid as to be more definite and intrusive than is that of its truly living fellow-member.

A person in this condition is haunted, as it were, by a constant or inconstant fractional phantom of so much of himself as has been lopped away—an unseen ghost of the lost part, and sometimes a presence made sorely inconvenient by the fact that, while but faintly felt at times, it is at others acutely called to his attention by the pains of irritation which it appears to suffer from a blow on the stump or a change in the weather.

There is something almost tragical, something ghastly, in the notion of these thousands of spirit limbs hunting as many good soldiers, and now and then tormenting them with the disappointments which arise when the memory, being off guard for a moment, the keen sense of the limb's presence betrays the man into some effort, the failure of which of a sudden reminds him of his loss.

Many persons feel the lost limb as existing the moment they awaken from the merciful stupor of the ether given to destroy the torments of the knife; others come slowly to this consciousness in days or weeks, and when the wound has healed. But, as a rule, the more sound and serviceable the stump, especially if an artificial limb be worn, the more likely is the man to feel faintly the presence of his shorn member. Sometimes a blow on the stump will reawaken such consciousness; or, as happened in one case, a reamputation higher up the limb will summon it anew into seeming existence.

In many the limb may be recalled to the man by irritating the nerves in its stump. Every doctor knows that when any part of a nerve is excited by a pinch, a tap, or by electricity (which is an altogether harmless means,) the pan, if it be a nerve of feeling, is felt as if it were really caused in the part to which the nerve finally passes. A familiar illustration is met with when we hurt the "crazy-bone" behind the elbow. This crazy-bone is merely the ulnar nerve, which gives sensation to the third and fourth fingers, and in which latter parts we feel the numbing pain of a blow on the main nerve. If we were to divide this nerve below the elbow, the pain would still seem to be in the fingers; nor would it alter the case were the arm cut off. When, therefore, the current of a battery is turned upon the nerves of an arm-stump, the irritation caused in the divided nerves is carried to the brain, and there referred at once to all the regions of the lost limb from which, when entire, these nerves brought those impressions of touch or pain which the brain converts into sensations. As the electric current disturbs the nerves, the limb is sometimes called back to a sensory being with startling reality.

On one occasion the shoulder was thus electrized three inches above the point where the arm had been cut off. For two years the man had ceased to be conscious of the limb. As the current passed, although ignorant of its possible effects, he started up, crying aloud, "Oh, the hand, the hand!" and tried to seize it with the living grasp of the sound fingers. No resurrection of the dead, no answer of a summoned spirit, could have been more startling. As the current was broken the lost part faded again, only to be recalled by the same means. This man had ceased to feel his limb. With others it is a presence never absent save in sleep. "If," says one man, "I should say I am more sure of the leg which ain't than of the one that are, I guess I should be about correct."

Absurd mishaps sometimes remind men of the unreliability of these ghostly members, which seem to them so distinctly material. In one case a man believed for a moment that he had struck another with the absent hand. A very gallant fellow, who lost an arm at Shiloh, was always acutely conscious of the limb as still present. On one occasion, when riding, he used the lost hand to grasp the reins, while with the other he struck his horse. He paid for his blunder with a fall. Sensitive people are curiously moved by the mental shock which comes from such failures of purpose. In one case the poor fellow, at every meal for many months, would try to pick up his fork, and, failing, would be suddenly seized with nausea; so that at last his wife habitually warned him.

How remarkable must be the sense of the existence of the part lost is to be gathered from the fact that even after twenty or thirty years men are sometimes deceived by this sensation into acts which are founded on a moment of deception as to the real presence of the limb. Naturally enough, this is apt to be the case when first rallying the senses on awaking from sleep. "Indeed," says one sufferer, writing of this point, "every morning I have to learn anew that my leg is enriching a Virginia wheat crop or ornamenting some horrible museum."

But, while most men are thus conscious of a lost limb as still in place, the spirit member is never complete. The foot or hand is most distinctly felt, and then the ankle or wrist. The parts between these and the knee or elbow, as the case may be, are seemingly indistinct or absent, and any missing parts yet higher up are totally unfelt. In some cases half a hand is gone, and only a phantom finger or two remain somewhere in the air, with an utter abolition of every other portion of the arm. Probably some of these curious facts depend upon certain of the nerve-ends in the stump being kept irritated, while others are perfectly sound and undisturbed. In accordance with these facts, the pains referred to lost parts are usually left on the hand or foot, and very rarely elsewhere.—Lippincott's Magazine.

GENEROSITY during life is a very different thing from generosity in the hour of death; one proceeds from genuine liberality and benevolence; the other from pride or fear.

THE Canada census for 1871 shows the total population of the dominion at 3,484,924, an average increase of about twelve and a half per cent. since 1861.

MEN AND BRETHREN.—The Third Congregational church in San Francisco have voted to receive several Chinese converts to full membership.

A GRASP of the hand, a smile, a word even, is often enough in God's hand to change the entire course of life, to save a soul from death.

SINCE the fire there have been no cockroaches in Chicago. They did not return with the phœnix.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Free-Will Baptists of Maine have organized a State Mission Society, obtained a charter from the Legislature, and are ready to go to work aiding feeble and destitute churches and establishing new churches.

COMING INTO THE LIGHT.—Bishop Potter recently confirmed thirty-eight young Cuban ladies and gentlemen, in the French Protestant Episcopal church, all of whom had been converted from Romanism since their arrival here.

A NEW MOVEMENT.—In addition to strengthening their mission in Spain by sending the third man to that country, the American Board has appointed a commissioner to visit France, northern and western Austria, and Italy, and to report on the best points to establish missions in those countries, and upon the best methods of labor.

CHRISTIAN SCHOOLS are about to be opened by Mrs. Parry, of Mount Lebanon, in the district of Hauran, more commonly known by its biblical name of Bashan, comprising the country between Damascus and Gilead, on the east of the Jordan. The inhabitants of this region are Druses and Greeks, both equally ignorant of the Scriptures. No Protestant evangelist has ever gone among them. Many of the sheiks are desirous of having schools established in their villages.

CONVERTS TO PROTESTANTISM.—L'Aurore, a French Protestant paper published in Canada, announces the names of seventeen persons who have renounced Romanism, and informed Bishop Foley of their adhesion to the Evangelical religion. They assign as reasons for their ecclesiastical transition the following: 1. The doctrine that the priest can forgive sins. 2. That there is a purgatory. 3. That in the mass the sacrifice of Christ is renewed. 4 That the Pope is infallible. 5. That the Virgin Mary is immaculate. They reject these dogmas, and ground their faith on relevant passages of Scripture.

INTERESTING FROM JAPAN.—Rev. Edward W. Clark, professor in the Japanese College at Shidz-u-oo-ka, communicates to the Evangelist some interesting intelligence concerning the growth of "tolerance" among the people and government of that country. Though specially engaged in teaching natural science, Mr. Clark has a class in Wayland's "Political Economy," and he says that he should teach the Bible and Hopkins' "Evidences of Christianity" to anybody who desired to study them. He is popular with the Japanese, and is strongly supported by the high government officials. Mr. Clark mentions a Japanese friend of his who has translated into his own language "Mills on Liberty."

THE OHIO PRISON CHURCH.—The chaplain of the Ohio Penitentiary, Rev. O. H. Newton, reports that since the organization of the Young Men's Christian Association, or Prison Church, which was some eighteen months since, about three hundred and sixty have made a profession of religion; over one hundred of these have obtained their freedom, and are now mingling with the citizens of this and other States. Many of them have united with churches, and a very large portion of them are faithfully standing up for Jesus. The meetings for prayer and conference are of deep interest. Nearly five hundred are in attendance. The Sabbath school numbers about four hundred, and is divided into thirty-two classes.

STATISTICS OF RELIGION.—The statistics of religion for the United States, just completed at the Census Office, show the total number of church organizations upon the first of June, 1870, to be 72,451; the total number of church edifices to be 63,074; total church accommodations, 21,659,562; and the aggregate value of church property, $354,429,681. The church accommodations for the principal denominations are as follows:

Baptists, regular	3,997,116

The value of church property owned by these denominations is:

IN a letter which the Independent has been permitted to read, Mrs. Pruyn, at Yokohama, Japan, states that the missionaries and teachers there are constantly rejoiced by new tokens of the favor of God, and by fresh displays of his power among the people. The very evening of her writing two meetings had been held in her house—one for natives seeking the truth, and another for Christians desiring the quickening influences of the Holy Spirit and preparation for the Lord's service. Each of these meetings was attended by over forty persons. So many came that chairs could not be supplied for all, and natives seated themselves on the floor of the rooms. Mrs. Pruyn was convinced of the presence and power of God, and much encouraged by the varied kinds of work given them to do.

NOT LONG AGO, in London, an Indian prince, A. Jayram, Rajah of Mysore, stood up before a large and Christian audience at St. George's Hall, one Sunday evening, and declared: "Among the millions of India the number of educated natives who have become Christians would fall short of the number of one's fingers. The only persons whom the missionaries claim are the Pariahs, not one of whom could possibly state any point of divergence between the abandonment and the embraced faith. No instance has ever been known of a missionary even attempting to convert a learned man or Pundit." Such an act was worthy of a specimen of Indian royalty and a Brahmin of the highest caste, conscious of his superiority to all the rest of humanity, proud of his aristocratic rank above his own people, and conceited enough intentionally to affront a Christian assembly. Even the Brahmo Somaj movement of Babu Chunder Sen he would look down upon with contempt as a kind of Oriental dissent, very much as High Churchmen once looked down on Wesleyanism. But, looking at the facts, we find that Brahminism has sent its brightest ornaments to the Christian church, in the persons of Krishna Mohun Banerjea and Pundit Nilakantha Gore, who are now faithful and eloquent ministers of the gospel. It has given to Christianity such learned men as Gunga Ram and Prof. Ramchunder, of Delhi, who are now cultured teachers in the highest Evangelical colleges of the land. It has lost such distinguished university graduates as Kalee and Mohun Banerjea. Many eminent officials, like Behari Lal Singh, and magistrates, like Tarini Churn Mitter, have either made great sacrifices to preach Christ to their countrymen, or, as judges, merchants, physicians, are commending Christian truth by their lives, and are seeking to promote it by their wealth or their writings. Not less remarkable are the recent conversions in Upper India from Islamism. Of the Moulvies who conducted the controversy with the late Dr. Pfander, at Agra, three have yielded to the faith they opposed; and of these two are most learned men—Moulvie Safdar Ali, of Jubbulpore, and Imadud-deen, of whom the latter wrote an able work in behalf of the religion of Christ for his people, and shortly before his death became Bishop of Calcutta. Lately Babu Keshub has been obliged to acknowledge and announce in his Indian Mirror the first Parsee convert to Christianity.

Our missionaries have established and are to-day sustaining two thousand two hundred schools for the education of India's children, besides a number of colleges of high grade for her youth and people, six of which are found in Calcutta and its suburbs. At the present time the Protestant churches embrace no less than seventy-one thousand native members, and are attended by two hundred and seventy-five thousand worshipers besides; to which it is only fair to add the Roman Catholic claim of eight hundred and seventy-eight thousand six hundred "population." If Mr. A. Jayram, Rajah, of Mysore, pleases to sneer at these as "Pariahs," he is quite welcome to do so; but let him remember that the souls of these men are just as valuable in the sight of God as those of high-caste Hindus, Pundits, or princes. The wise, mighty and noble are not called or wanted as converts until they humble themselves and become as little children, willing also to recognize their fellows as brothers. Till then the weak, base, despised Pariahs shall enter the kingdom of heaven by thousands, before them.—Independent.

AN IRISHMAN took a contract to dig a well. When he had dug about twenty-five feet down, he came one morning and found it caved in—filled nearly to the top. Pat looked cautiously around and saw that nobody was near, then took off his hat and coat, hung them on the windlass, crawled into some bushes and awaited events. In a short time the citizens discovered that the well had caved in, and seeing Pat's hat and coat on the windlass, they supposed he was at the bottom of the excavation. Only a few hours of brisk digging from the well, and just as the eager citizens had reached bottom, and were wondering where the body was, Pat came out of the bushes and good naturedly thanked them for relieving him of a sorry job. Some of the tired diggers were disgusted; but the joke was too good to allow anything more than a hearty laugh that soon followed.

THE BIRTH OF THE SPIRIT.

One of the greatest hinderances to the realization of this experience lies in its supposed identity or connection with outward rites and ordinances. If once persuaded that it is no more than baptism, or that it is conferred by the imposition of hands or the reception of a sacrament, the matter is forestalled, and an actual, conscious change of heart is no longer thought of. If ordinances are the channels through which the Spirit is communicated, there is no need of any further trouble. This is a delusion which blocks the way to a genuine scriptural regeneration with many. They have been baptized, they have received the sacraments of the church, and in this they rest, persuaded that whatever is meant by the birth of the Spirit has been attained through the ordinances of the gospel. The very first step toward realizing the new birth is to get clear from this most fatal error, and to escape from this foolish entanglement. Whatever the birth of water may mean, the birth of the Spirit is something distinct from it. The Savior therefore declares: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." If the water necessarily involved the Spirit, or if its application secured the Spirit's operation, it was needless for the Savior to add, "and of the Spirit." The two births are as clearly separated and distinguished as it is possible. Water baptism is not enough; ordinances in themselves come short of the requirement; there must be beyond, and independent of it, the direct and transforming work of the Holy Spirit. John the Baptist exhibits the same doctrine substantially when he contrasts his baptism with water with that higher baptism of Christ: "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire." That Christ's purpose was to distinguish and separate the water from the Spirit is evident from the further fact that he contrasts the spiritual with the natural birth, and dwells with emphasis upon the necessity of being born of the Spirit.

If the inquirer is happily free from this confusion of ideas about the import of ordinances, he may find difficulty in distinguishing the birth of the Spirit from those conditions of mind and feeling which do not imply it. He is already leading a moral life, as blameless and upright as was Nicodemus. Possibly he is a member of the church, and instructed in the doctrines and practices of religion. Must such an one be born again, or is he already a subject of converting grace? Here, at least, was a good man and sincere who knew nothing about this birth from above. Nicodemus, with all his candor and simplicity of mind, had yet to experience it. Precisely how good a man may be in amiability of character, in the performance of religious duties, and in concern for salvation, without being converted, it is not easy to determine. A man may be not far from the kingdom of God, and not be in it. The kingdom may come nigh to us, without coming in and possessing the heart. Doubtless there are multitudes who need the enforcement of this "must" upon their consciences, who are resting in the mistaken persuasion that they are all that God requires them to be. Nicodemus was a religious, a moral, an upright man, but the birth of the Spirit was for him something yet to be felt. It is a subject, therefore, for moral and religious people to ponder—a text to be expounded to church members, as well as to others. That they are born again is hardly to be taken for granted, as there may be abundance of morality and religion without spirituality.

Then, again, the mystery connected with the direct operations of the Spirit is a hinderance in the way of some. This, however, is not so great a mystery as the supposed efficacy of baptism to regenerate, or that any moral change is effected by ordinances. The "how" is at least just as difficult and incomprehensible in the one case as in the other. But the direct operation of the Spirit is only one of countless mysteries. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." The supernatural is insisted upon, illustrated perhaps by the natural, but supernatural still. The fact is matter of experience—something recognized in its effects, to be perceived and felt in the spiritual nature, as clearly as we hear and feel the movements of the air we breathe. Beyond this we are not required to go. The supernatural and divine are in religion, and their manifestations are in the wonderful change wrought in the soul.

As there is no abatement of the mystery, so there is none of the necessity of this spiritual birth. It is a marvel, and yet we are not to marvel at it. We can neither see nor enter the kingdom without it. Beyond the natural birth, beyond all ordinances, is this inexorable necessity. The new creature in Christ must be realized. Nor is this insisted upon without reason. It is no arbitrary condition, but of essential fitness for heaven. It is the supplement to the doctrine of human depravity, and the complement of our pardon or justification through faith in the blood of Christ. Pardon simply places us in a new relation to God; the birth of the Spirit is the production of a new character and nature suited to this new relation. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh." This sinful nature must be renovated. The natural man must give place to the spiritual. The carnal mind, with its enmity to God, with its rebellion, and its earthly and sensual attributes, must be overcome and made pure. The necessity lies deep in our fallen nature, and in the utter corruption of the human heart. The Savior, in expounding the doctrine, sets it forth in its singleness and simplicity. He took down the old picture, stripped it of its framing, restored the coloring, and hung it out in the clear light of his own all-powerful rays. Divested of all types and symbols, the truth starts from the canvas: "Ye must be born again."

SIGNIFICANT.

In the report for 1871 the membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church is 1,421,323, and the increase for the year is 51,189. The statistics of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for the same period have not been officially declared, but we are reliably informed that with a membership of say about 600,000, the increase of the past year reaches 50,000—that is, with a membership of but little more than one-third that of the Northern Church, our increase is about the same. In a more limited territory, with not more than one-third as many preachers, and with resources every way vastly inferior, we have gathered as many souls as the Methodist Episcopal Church. This comparison speaks well for our impoverished church, and shows that she is the most vigorous and vital branch of Methodism in the country, and perhaps in the world. At the close of the war our Northern brethren predicted her speedy dissolution, and kindly offered our scattered sheep an asylum. Disintegration and absorption was a line of policy indicated and tried, but the figures do not look encouraging in that direction. With all of their boasted success in the South, and the lavish expenditure of missionary and church extension funds in our midst, their total net increase, North and South, is only a trifle greater than that of the Southern Church.

THE CAMP MEETING.

Ho for the camp meeting! It will be held directly on the Gulf coast, two miles west of Biloxi, and nearly midway between New Orleans and Mobile, by the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas railroad. The ground has been purchased by the contributions of Methodists of New Orleans and vicinity, and is held in fee simple by trustees for the New Orleans District Conference. The encampment will be reached, at the distance of a quarter of a mile from the railroad, by a straight road now being cut. It will lie on the Gulf side of the railroad. The preachers' stand will be erected at about one hundred yards from the shore. The grove, its surroundings, the location generally, and the "much water" on the spot, combine as many external advantages as camp meetings usually enjoy. Every effort will be made by the trustees to put the ground in such condition, and to afford such conveniences and facilities as will be agreeable and satisfactory to those who may desire to tent with us. They will erect the preachers' stand, the shelter and seats for the congregation, the preachers' tent, and provide all other public accommodations needful, except board and lodging. It is hoped that boarding and lodging tents will be provided by both the cities of New Orleans and Mobile; and, of course, any similar enterprise from the rural districts will be welcomed. Half-fare tickets will be furnished by the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas railroad during the meeting. Other railroad facilities are expected. Bishops and preachers are expected from various quarters, and are invited from all quarters.

The best way to enjoy the camp meeting is for families separately, or two or more uniting, to pitch a tent, of plank or canvas, and abide on the ground, as home for the time being. No private tents will be furnished; but the trustees will be on the ground on Tuesday, the twenty-first of May, to meet parties, and enable them to select by lot the sites for their tents. They hope to meet a large number from city and country, who, for their own and the good of their fellow-beings, and for the sake of God's cause and glory, will find it their duty and pleasure to sustain this meeting.

"To your tents, O Israel!" The best and happiest results for the prosperity of Methodism, and chiefly of Christ's kingdom, have often occurred from the labors and interest of a camp meeting. It is the solemn duty of all who "look for and love his appearing" to make sacrifices, and put forth every strenuous effort, if "by all means we may save some." Zion's walls need to be rebuilt all about where the camp meeting is to be held. Come, then, come, ye willing laborers, from town and country. Come to stay; come to pray, and come praying; come to labor; come to bless and to be blessed; come for your own soul's sake, and for others. Hear God's word of encouragement: "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." The camp meeting will begin on Friday, June 21.

We are indebted to the Nashville Advocate for advanced slips containing an account of the corner-stone services. The addresses of Bishops Pierce and Wightman are necessarily laid over till next week.

Laying of the Corner-Stone of the Publishing House.

On Wednesday, May 8, the corner-stone of the Publishing House, Nashville, Tennessee, was laid with appropriate ceremonies. There was an immense concourse in attendance, including visitants from several States, and a large number of ministers. All the Bishops were present, except the venerable Bishop Early, whose name was in the programme, but who was prevented from attendance by age and infirmities.

The choir of McKendree church, and other musical friends, were in attendance, and two organs were kindly lent by Mr. R. Dorman; they were well fingered by the organist of McKendree, Mrs. Blandner, and of Tulip street, Captain Thatcher. The large assemblage was composed by the excellent rendering of noble Old Denmark. Bishop Marvin then read Hymn 1026, "Father, into thy hands alone," which was sung in a plain tune, without interludes, so that all the people could join in singing this appropriate piece. The prayer that followed, by Bishop Kavanaugh, was admirably suited to the occasion, and offered with great devotional fervor. Bishop Keener then read Hymn 782, "Behold the sure foundation-stone," which was sung with fine effect. The sentences in the Order for Laying a Corner-stone, in the Ritual, were read by Bishop Doggett. Bishop Paine then deposited in the stone—which was set in the north-east angle of the building, just under the site of the editor's old office—the following articles: The Holy Bible, Hymn Book, Discipline, History of the Organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Friendly Talks on Church Union, copies of all the last issues of the papers of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, Primitive Methodist, Christian Guardian, organ of the Canada Wesleyan Methodist Church, Provincial Wesleyan, (Nova Scotia,) papers of the Methodist Protestant and other Methodist churches, and copies of the Nashville papers of May 8, and other papers, pamphlets and cards, kindly furnished for the purpose; also the Southern Review, the Northern Methodist Quarterly Review, and the London (Wesleyan) Quarterly Review for April, 1872; also a book containing the names of the Bishops, book agent, Book Committee, editor of books and of the Christian Advocate, Sunday school secretary and clerks of the Publishing House, with brief biographical notes; also a list of the employes of the Publishing House, and of the subscribers to its erection. The Bishop then said, with solemnity: "We lay this corner-stone of a house to be built for the dissemination of Christian literature, as the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen."

After appropriate addresses by Bishops Pierce and Wightman, the venerable Lovick Pierce commended the enterprise, thus auspiciously begun, to the blessing of Divine Providence, invoking benedictions upon all who are or shall be identified with its fortunes. Charles Wesley's sublime doxology, "Sing we to our God above," was then sung in jubilant tones, and the benediction was pronounced by Bishop Paine.

Thus closed the service and ceremonies, which will never fade from the memories of the thousands who witnessed them. The corner-stone was sealed by the builders. May they soon bring forth the head-stone with shouting: "Grace, grace unto it!"—Nashville Advocate.

Meeting of the Board of Missions at Nashville.

The Board of Missions convened in annual session May 7, 1872, at nine o'clock A. M. Present: Bishops Paine, Pierce, Kavanaugh, Wightman, Marvin, Doggett, McTyeire and Keener; Drs. Summers, Young, Haygood, Kelley, Rush, Cunnyngham, Redford; Rev. A. P. McFerrin, M. Hamilton and J. B. McFerrin. A number of visiting brethren were present, among whom were the Rev. T. B. Sargent, D. D., of Baltimore, the Rev. F. B. Rogers, of the Louisville Conference, Rev. W. C. Johnson, of Memphis, Dr. Garland, of Oxford, Mississippi, and many of the brethren of Tennessee. Through the entire meeting the board was favored with the presence of visiting brethren, adding great interest to the proceedings.

Bishop Paine took the chair, called the board to order, and invited the Rev. Dr. Rush, of Missouri, to open the meeting with prayer.

The secretary presented an abstract of the forthcoming annual report, which showed progress in the work under the supervision of the board.

The Domestic Missions have been very prosperous, in many places multitudes having been added to the church.

The China Mission, where we have had two missionaries, the Rev. Y. J. Allen and the Rev. J. W. Lambuth—with their families—has been prosperous the past year, and promises in future a rich harvest of souls.

The board recommended the Bishops to send an additional missionary to China. This, however, will not increase the expense, as Bro. Allen derives his support from the Chinese government, being connected with an institution of learning, and engaged in editing the Chinese Christian Advocate and other publications.

The work among the Germans in Texas, Louisiana, Virginia and Maryland was reviewed, and provision made for its enlargement. Help was afforded in the publication of a Sunday school paper in the German language.

The Indian Missions are doing well. There has been an encouraging increase among the four tribes served by our missionaries, viz.: The Cherokees, Creeks, Choctaws and Chickasaws. The work in the Pacific, Columbia, Los Angeles and Western Conferences was reviewed, and arrangements made for cultivating these fields more extensively. A new mission was established in Mexico, which promises much.

The receipts of the board will go beyond the year previous, but fall short of the urgent demands for help in many directions.

The following appropriations were made for the year beginning June 1, 1872:

To the China Mission	$7,000
German work in Texas	3,000
German work in Louisiana Conference	1,000
For publishing Sunday school paper in German	250
German work in Virginia and Maryland, in aid of the Virginia and Baltimore Conferences	1,200
Indian Mission Conference	12,000
Pacific Conference	3,000
Western Conference	6,500
$1,500 of this amount is to be applied to the work in Montana.
West Texas	600
To the new mission in Mexico for the present and ensuing year	900
Of this amount $124 has already been paid by contributions through Bishop Marvin.
Western Virginia	100
For translating and publishing the Discipline in the Spanish language	500
Incidentals	4,000
Total	$42,150

This, it will be remembered, is over and above the sixty per cent. appropriated by the Annual Conferences in support of domestic missions.

Thus it will be seen that the board calls for the sum of at least $105,375 as the contribution of the connection to the cause of foreign and domestic missions during the year beginning June 1, 1872. We hope in a very short time to double these figures.

After the opening session Dr. Summers presided, and each member of the board devoted himself assiduously to the work. Altogether the meeting was the most pleasant and harmonious witnessed for many years. All hearts were encouraged by the hope of the future and glorious success awaiting our missionary labors. The secretary will have more to say in a future communication.

J. B. McFerrin, Sec'y.

Death of Dr. Boyle.—Rev. Joseph Boyle, D. D., a prominent minister of our church in Missouri, died at Lexington, Missouri, on the second instant. Dr. Boyle sustained a superannuated relation at the time of his death, but was actively engaged in the work of the ministry, dying suddenly while in attendance at a revival meeting. We believe Dr. Boyle was about sixty years of age.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

Expose of Polygamy in Utah. A lady's life among the Mormons. By Mrs. T. B. H. Stenhouse. New York: American News Company, 1872.

This work purports to be a record of the personal experience of the writer as one of the wives of a Mormon elder during a period of more than twenty years. We are tired of hearing about the Mormons, and of reading about them. This book gives some fresh views and revelations, and is open to no special objections. It will be read. Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

The-To-Morrow of Death, or the Future Life According to Science. By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French by S. R. Crocker. Boston: Roberts Bros., 1872.

The author says that all religions are good, and will do until the religion of the future, the religion of nature and science, shall be established. The volume contains much speculation, curious, extravagant and absurd, and is without any taint or suspicion of Christian faith. Mr. Figuier writes like a pagan, and we can see no good in his work except to illustrate the folly of those who think themselves wiser than Scripture. For sale by R. J. Harp, New Orleans.

The Angel in the Cloud. By Edwin W. Fuller. New York: E. J. Hale & Son, publishers, 1872.

This is a poem of 119 duodecime pages of blank verse. We have sampled the style in places here and there, and have marked several passages of great descriptive power, and very rich in the word-coloring. It will well repay perusal, both as a work of poetical excellence and for the lessons its author aims to impart. For sale at the Depository, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

Creator and Creation, or the Knowledge in the Reason of God and His Work. By Laurens P. Hickok, D. D., LL. D. Boston: Lee & Shepard, publishers. New York: Lee, Shepard & Dillingham, 1872. Octavo, 360 pages.

A book for thinkers, students and all who have a taste for science and philosophy, and their study in connection with the character and attributes of God. We cannot attempt a review of the work, but call attention to it as one of great learning, and as an important addition to the solid standards. For sale by R. J. Harp, Depository, New Orleans.

Little Sunbeams. By Joanna H. Mathews. New York: Robert Carter & Bros.

Little Sunbeams embrace a handsome set of six beautiful duodecimo volumes, all snugly put up in a substantial box. The title of the books are: Bell Powers' Locket; Dora's Motto; Lilly Morris' Enemy; Jessie's Parrot; Mammie's Watchword; Nellie's Housekeeping. They are beyond all praise in their binding, illustrations and typography, while the contents are calculated to benefit and please. A religious and moral purpose is evidently in the author's mind throughout, and she has succeeded admirably in conveying the lessons of truth and piety in an attractive style. The books are written for the young, and most fortunate will those young folks be who got this delightful set of books. We suppose they will be sold separately or by the set. Order them of R. J. Harp, New Orleans Methodist Depository, 112 Camp street.

Wisdom-Teeth is a book for little people, a compilation of useful knowledge for children. By Mrs. F. G. DeFontaine. For sale at the Depository, New Orleans.

The Cotemporary Review for April has the following articles: The Study of Sociology; Is Eternal Punishment an Open Question in the Church of England? Peasant Proprietorship; The Place of Mind in Nature and Intuition in Man; Fenianism; The State; The Government and Scientific Morality; Pleasure and Desire; Morality and Immortality; The Eighth Article. Lippincott & Co., publishers.

The St. Paul's Magazine and Good Words for the Young for April are excellent numbers of these valuable republications by Lippincott & Co.

Up to our last advices the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church has taken final action on no important measures. The reports, pro and con, on the Book Concern have been exceedingly voluminous, and have been referred for committee investigation. The reception and addresses of fraternal delegates from various religious bodies have also occupied considerable time. The Bishops in their address recommend from four to eight new Bishops. We believe the Conference has also authorized the appointment of fraternal delegates to visit the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in 1874.

SPECTACLES.—Those who wish spectacles of a superior class will do well to call at the establishment of Mr. William Bohne, 108 Carondelet street.

UNION INSURANCE COMPANY.—We call attention to the fifteenth annual exhibit of this excellent company, which appears in our advertising columns to-day.

DUCRO'S ALIMENTARY ELIXIR.—Among our new advertisements will be found that of Mr. P. Cusachs, corner of St. Philip and Royal streets, setting forth the claims of Ducro's Elixir for consumption and kindred diseases.

LOUISIANA EQUITABLE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.—By reference to our advertising columns our readers will observe the list of officers and directors constituting the recently-elected board of this excellent company.

LIVERPOOL DIRECT.—The steamship Memphis, of the new Liverpool line of steamers, is to sail May 28. We refer to our advertising columns for full information in reference to this fine line of steamships, which we have noticed favorably on several occasions previously.

FAMILY GROCER.—At the corner of St. Charles and Jackson streets will be found the large establishment of Mr. Charles Ballejo, which we, through an oversight, failed to notice in our last issue. If our friends will call at the store of Mr. Ballejo we think they will be favorably impressed.

LUMBER.—Through an oversight we neglected to notice, in our last issue, those extensive and enterprising lumber dealers, Messrs. Hasam & Pooley, corner of Julia and Cedar streets, New Orleans. They have large facilities for furnishing every kind of lumber; also sash, blinds and cabins to order. See their advertisement.

CARRIAGE MANUFACTORY.—By reference to our advertising columns the card of W. F. Clark will be found, which brings to the attention of our readers a most important branch of home manufactures. Mr. Clark should be encouraged by a liberal patronage. Let those who need work in his line call at No. 134 Rampart street, between Toulouse and St. Peter.

OUR READERS will do well to visit the Grand Exposition now being held in the new Exposition Hall, St. Charles street. Not only an hour or two, but whole days could be agreeably passed in examining the goods on exhibition, and the specimens of art and handicraft there collected. The extremely low price of admission, (twenty-five cents,) and the many attractions offered will, no doubt, crowd the hall during the remaining time of the twenty days' opening.

NEW ORLEANS, JACKSON AND GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD.—We have been much gratified, in our recent trips over the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern, and Mississippi Central railroads, to see the vast improvement in the condition of this line of travel, so important to our community. The road will now bear favorable comparison with the best roads in the country. It could scarcely be otherwise under the management of so able and skillful a superintendent as Colonel E. H. Frost, who we have regarded for many years as one of the best financiers and railroad superintendents in the country.

VALUABLE IMPLEMENT.—In correcting a slight error in our notice of a "Valuable Implement" exhibited by Messrs. Marshall & Hord, of Ohio, at the late grand State Fair, and who were awarded the first premium, we take pleasure in again calling the attention of the readers of the ADVOCATE to its many excellencies. It is not only the best cultivator for vegetable gardeners known to us, but it is said to have been successfully and profitably used in the early cultivation of cotton, cane and broom-corn, and in the culture of rice it stands without a rival. With no complicated machinery to get out of order, remarkably simple in construction, it will, with proper use and care, last many years. The cheapness of the implement will, it is said, justify the cultivator of but one-eighth of an acre in purchasing it, while larger gardeners and planters will annually save many times their cost by using them.

Messrs. Bacon & Thorpe, of this city, have purchased the exclusive right of this implement for the State of Texas, and will immediately begin their manufacture at Corsicana.

Mr. J. Rheinthal, No. 170 Girod street, New Orleans, is proprietor for the State of Louisiana.

A Warning.—Dr. Abernethy once affirmed that his mistakes would fill a graveyard; and if this confession sprang from so eminent an authority as this distinguished English Esculapius, how many graveyards could be filled by those of less repute, who recommend noxious nostrums for tonics, and administer ineffective compositions for stimulants? It almost seems like a blind infatuation in persons afflicted with indigestion, dyspepsia, nervous debility, or similar functional derangements, to swallow the wretched admixtures that glut the market, when Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters are so accessible. Prepared from vegetables that embody the purest and most valuable medicinal virtues, Price's Bitters are at once a grateful cordial and most invigorating adjuvant. Imparting a healthy tone to the organs, regulating the system of circulation, sending an exhilarating glow through all the "natural gates and alleys of the body," they not only repair the shattered nerves, but simultaneously recuperate the wasted energies. In short, wherever there exists any gastric disorder, Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters will infallibly ferret out the disease, and by their active principles apply the remedy.

"It Acts Like a Charm."—This is what we hear on all sides of DR. TUTT'S EXPECTORANT. In cases of Croup, Bronchitis, Asthma and all Pulmonary Diseases it affords instant relief. It permeates the very substance of the Lungs and causes them to throw off all acrid matter. It is very pleasant to the taste. Children take it readily.

NEW YORK, August 31, 1869.

DR. WILLIAM H. TUTT—Sir: When in Aiken, last winter, I used your Expectorant for my cough, and found more benefit from it than any I ever used. I took half a dozen bottles home with me, and have had to give some of it to my friends. Please send me one dozen by express, C. O. D.

The Child's Corner.

WAITING FOR THE MAY.

BY MARION DOUGLAS.

From out his hive there came a bee:
"Has spring-time come or not?" said he.
Alone within a garden bed
A small, pale snow-drop raised its head.
"'Tis March, this tells me," said the bee;
"The hive is still the place for me.
The day is chill, although 'tis sunny,
And icy cold the snow-drop's honey."

Again came humming forth the bee:
"What month is with us now?" said he.
Gay crocus-blossoms, blue and white,
And yellow, opened to the light.
"It must be April," said the bee,
"And April's scarce the month for me.
I'll taste these flowers, (the day is sunny,)
But wait before I gather honey."

Once more came out the waiting bee.
"'Tis come: I smell the spring!" said he.
The violets were all in bloom;
The lilacs tossed a purple plume;
The daffodil wore a yellow crown;
The cherry tree a snow-white gown;
And by the brook-side, wet with dew,
The early wild wake-robins grew.
"It is the May-time!" said the bee.
"The queen of all the months for me!
The flowers are here, the sky is sunny;
'Tis now the time to gather honey!"

FRIENDLY TALKS with THE GIRLS.

MANNER.

You asked me the other day, Daisy, what it was that made our friend, Mrs. Morningbright, so charming. "Her coming into a room," you said, "is like the coming in of a sunbeam." Everybody feels better in her presence. I agree with you, for I too have felt cheered and strengthened by an hour with that lovely lady, whose graceful presence and cordial words are welcome wherever she goes:

"It's her manner, Daisy, isn't it?" I replied.

"Yes," you answered, "her manner, and something more."

And so you have given me my text. It is not possible to overestimate the importance of a polished and winning manner, provided there be with it "something more." For manner ought always to be the outgrowth and necessity of character, never the finish painfully put on from outside. It is a thing that ought to begin with the acorn, and go on through the successive stages of the tree, till close, fine-grained, smooth and consistent, it is a part of the tree itself. Do you catch my meaning? You know what a provoking piece of furniture that lumber was, that used to stand in your room at S.? The least jar or knock, and off would fall a piece of the veneering, till, by and by, what with fractures and repairings, and places that defied your skill to glue, the bureau was the most unsightly thing in the house. But there was the oaken wardrobe in Aunt Polly's chamber, with the natural polish on it, a solid, stately, substantial structure, of which the workman needed not to be ashamed. Those two pieces of furniture have often stood in my mind for the two great types of character, and the two schools of manner which they develop: Real and sham. All artificial manner, whether worn by a queen or a servant, in so far as it is put on, and fails to grow from within, is of the nature that nothing explains better than the expressive word "sham." All sweet, honest, pure, characteristic manner comes from the "real."

"Company manners!" The phrase reminds me of another you sometimes hear: "Sunday religion." It is of the very essence of good manners, that they shall be good and sweet at home, as it is of the essence of a true religious experience, that it shall bear fruit every day. For whom, if not for the dear ones around the home table, shall we be courteous and kind? For strangers who meet us and forget us in a moment? For people who have no leisure to think of us, or our belongings? Yet this is the plan of those who keep their politeness for "company." The trouble is that in some moment of forgetfulness they may be found out, a jar will come, and the veneering will fall—the studied speech will be forgotten, and the rudeness which is habitual will crop out. If anywhere politeness is a duty and a privilege, it is in the home circle. Let the manner there be gracious and pleasant, and it will be so, without effort, everywhere else. All real politeness springs from loving unselfishness, and in the lowliest home there is always room for this.

Emily tells me that she is exercised with regard to her manner with gentlemen. She appears to have an idea that some peculiar grace or dignity is a requisite where the other sex is concerned. My dear child, your manner in the company of a gentleman should be precisely the same as in the company of a lady—no more, no less. With both you should be gentle, modest and refined. No especial difference is necessary. Be yourself—and don't think about yourself. Much of the awkwardness and diffidence, which pains one's self and others, comes from too much thought about the impression one is making.

It is the vice of too many young people, and of their elders too, that, in these days, enough respect is not felt for the aged and for those in authority. I say "felt," for if it were felt it would be shown. An aged person is entitled to seemly tenderness and thoughtful courtesy from those who are younger. Nothing sets the stamp of vulgar coarseness more plainly on one's breeding, to use a strong, old-fashioned word, than disregard of the feelings and infirmities of the old. So, Daisy, when I see you giving your seat in the street car to a thinly-clad, elderly washerwoman, and pressing it upon her when she hesitates, because of your dainty silk and primrose gloves, to accept it, I say to myself: "Our Daisy is a lady." When, in the crowded boat-saloon, you yield your rocking chair to the pale mother, with the teething baby in her arms, I know you have learned the sweetness of your manner from him who "pleased not himself."

There is the secret. We get it from our dear Lord—his words—his example—his lovely life. Study your Bible if you wish to know where are the springs of all that is precious in daily living. For "love is the fulfilling of the law," and a hearty love to Christ needs must bear such blossom of love to our neighbor as to make our manner to him warm, earnest, helpful and sympathetic.—Sunday School Times.

"DO YOUR BEST."

"When I was a little boy," said a gentleman one evening, "I paid a visit to my grandfather, a venerable old man, whose black velvet cap and tassel, blue breeches and huge silver knee-buckles filled me with great awe. When I went to bid him good-by he drew me between his knees, and, placing his hand on my head, said: 'Grandchild, I have one thing to say to you; will you remember it?' I stared into his face and nodded, for I was afraid to promise aloud. 'Well,' he continued, 'whatever you do, do the best you can.'

"This, in fact, was my grandfather's legacy to me; and it has proved better than gold. I never forgot his words; and I believe I have tried to act upon them. After reaching home, my uncle gave Marcus and me some weeding to do in the garden. It was Wednesday afternoon, and we had laid our plans for something else. Marcus, fretted and ill-humored at his disappointment, did not more than half do his work; and I began pretty much like him, until grandfather's advice came into my mind, and I determined to follow it. In a word, I 'did my best.' And, when my uncle came out, I shall never forget his look of approbation as his eyes glanced over my beds, or the fourpence he slipped into my hands afterward as he said my work was well done. Ah! I was a glad and thankful boy; while poor Marcus was left to drudge over his beds all the afternoon.

"At fifteen I was sent to the academy, where I had partly to earn my own way through the course. The lessons came hard at first, for I was not fond of study; but grandfather's advice was my motto, and I tried to do my best. As a consequence of this, though I was small of my age, and not very strong, my mother had three offers for me before the year was out; and one from the best merchant of the village, 'a place' in whose store was considered very desirable. When I joined the church I tried to do the Lord's work as well as I did my own; and often, when I have been tempted to leave the Sabbath School, or let a hinderance keep me from the prayer meeting, or get discouraged in any good thing, my grandfather's last words, 'Do the best you can,' have given me fresh courage, and I would again try."

Here, then, was the key to this man's character. He is considered one of the best business men, one of the best citizens, one of the best officers in the church, one of the best friends of the poor, one of the best neighbors, fathers, husbands, friends; in a word, he is universally beloved and respected. And what is the secret of it all? He always tried to do the best he could. Let every boy and girl take this for their motto. Acted upon, it will do wonders for you. It will bring out powers and capabilities which will surprise and delight yourselves and friends. "Do your best;" or, as the Bible has it, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do with thy might;" or, in other words, "Whatsoever you do, do it heartily as to the Lord."—Messenger.

THE SPOILED WAISTCOAT.

Charlotte Elizabeth, the authoress, records the following incident in her history of a deaf and dumb boy: "John had formed a great abhorrence of drunkenness, to avoid the beginning of which he heartily resolved never to taste any kind of strong drink. He remarked that Satan would persuade him to take a small spoonful of wine to-day, a larger to-morrow, then half a glassful, and so on, until he should be willing to drink to intoxication. On one occasion he was sent with a note to a friend's house, and while waiting for an answer was pressed to take a glass of wine by a young man who had resolved to overcome his scruples; the boy refused, but was more importunately urged to take it. His rejection became the more decided, as the foolish young man more resolutely persevered, until he seized the little fellow by the collar, threw back his head, and forced the wine into his lips. In this emergency John set his teeth so firmly that scarcely a drop of wine passed them, and the contents of the glass ran down upon the waistcoat which I had made for him, and on which he set a high value. He said nothing, but buttoned his coat, and returned with the letter. On his return he told me in writing what had passed—showing me the stains on his waistcoat, and, with an exulting smile, concluded by writing: 'The waistcoat is spoiled, but God was not angry, for John was not drunk.' When adverting to it afterward, he wrote: 'God made my teeth, and the devil could not get the wine through them.'"

APPEARANCES ARE DECEITFUL.

"What a beautiful light that lamp gives!" said a moth, as he stood brushing his wings on the sideboard.

"Yes, it does," said a fly, who fluttered with great difficulty toward the moth. "But you had better not go near it, for it's anything but safe."

"Surely there can be no danger there," said the moth; "the flame looks so cheerful and bright."

"Yes, but it burns," said the fly. "I'm suffering from it now. I ventured too near, and it so injured my wing that it is almost useless."

"I really think you must be mistaken," answered the moth. "I don't see how that beautiful light could injure anybody. I shall fly and see."

"Take care," buzzed the fly, "for appearances are sometimes deceitful."

"All right," said the moth. And he flew off to see the flame, and, going too near, fell fluttering on the table, severely burnt, and nearly dead.

"There's folly now," said the fly. "Some people will trust appearances rather than heed the kind warnings of those who have suffered through their deceitfulness."

ASK DAILY.—"Why," asked a governess of her little charge, "do we pray to God to give us our daily bread? Why don't we ask for four days, or five days, or a week?" "Because we want it fresh," said the hopeful.

HOW TO HAVE GOOD MUTTON.

The sheep is a delicate feeder, and makes one of the most delicious and digestible of all the butcher's meats. Like most animals, it improves in flavor by age, and attains its perfection, in most breeds, at the age of three years, when it makes, in Daniel Webster's language, red mutton—so called because the gravy, though well done, is red and of high flavor. In feeding sheep for the luxurious table, there should be but few together, which allows them greater variety of food and more repose. In large flocks the strong sheep monopolize the best herbs and grasses, and the weakest ones are poor and mean meat; besides, there are always restless sheep where many feed together, and the others are ill at ease while any are on foot. Sheep well grazed are better than the stall-fed, and have that "gamey" and juicy flesh so liked by epicures. The best table sheep in the British Isles are the small Welsh breed, which have the wide range of these mountains. But the best sheep in the world are often spoiled by bad butchering, and I propose to show how this should be done. Many persons become disgusted with and never eat mutton because of what they term the "wool-taste." Now a sheep well dressed may be wrapped in the skin and wool, as well as in the purest linen, and never have a "wool-flavor." The intestines of the sheep are, like those of all the ruminating animals, very long and powerful in capillary absorption, and, if allowed to remain in the body after death, infuse the odor and flavor of their contents into the meat, and thus give that ill taste. Everything, then, depends upon rapid dressing. While yet alive the sheep should be suspended by the hind legs, well apart, to two pegs or hooks, to a cross-timber, so that the body may be easily reached on all sides without turning it. The butcher should be prepared with a sharp knife, ax, meat saw, thread and water; also with a block or low stool to stand upon, if need be; for the sheep, when suspended, is too long generally to be reached in all parts. The throat should then be cut, severing both arteries, and the blood entirely let out. (If Prof. Bergh is about the animal may be knocked on the back of the head with the pole of the ax before using the knife.) The skin should then be rapidly taken off, at least from the parts to be cut in taking out the intestines, and pinned back, so as freely to allow that operation. This finished, the blood should be well washed out by casting on the body clean water freely. Should the intestines at any time be broken, let them be tied up at once, and the soiled parts well cleansed. The body should then hang until it is well dry, when it is ready for use. Mutton (and all meats) never ought to be salted, if possible, until it is ready for the cook. Salt absorbs the juices, dries and preserves the meat, but spoils the flavor. Meat should be hung in a cool, dry place, so that all parts may be aired. Do not allow it to become frozen, but, if frozen, it should be used at once, if possible. Indians and hunters dry their meats with slow fires.—American Agriculturist.

SPREADING MANURE IN AUTUMN.

We have endeavored at different times to impress upon our readers the importance of a fine pulverization and thorough intermixture of manure with the soil. If the ingredients which go to make up fertility were all in large lumps, they could be of little use in growing plants. If the silex were in the form of cobble stones, and the clay like unburned bricks, they would produce a very different effect from that resulting from a thorough pulverization together of these two ingredients. The same reasoning applies with as great force to manure, whether in large unbroken lumps or masses, or ground into fine powder, and intimately diffused among the particles of the earth.

Autumn application gives an excellent opportunity for this intimate diffusion, in addition to ordinary breaking down by mechanical means, by the soluble parts in the water of rains, which carry it down into the earth. So effectual and perfect is intermixture that, according to repeated experiment, its effect on spring crops is twice as great, on a fair average, as when spread in the ordinary manner in spring. This practice is becoming yearly more common; yet we still see repeated cautions in the papers against the loss by washing, when spread in autumn. We have never found the least detriment from washing on loams containing even a small portion of clay. These absorb all the liquid manure almost as soon as it touches them. When heaps of manure were placed on steep hillsides, the greener hue of the grass below, after months of washing, did not extend three feet from the heaps. Grass and its roots appropriate it readily, and fresh bare soils appear to do it as readily. When spread thinly over the surface the danger of washing becomes far less than in heaps, as the quantity to be absorbed by a given surface of earth is many times smaller.

Let it then be distinctly remembered that manure applied in autumn must be always spread, and never left in heaps, by which at least one-half its efficacy is lost.

Next to leaving it unspread is the objectionable practice of scattering it in large lumps, from which only a part of the soluble manure is washed out, and this part is not evenly carried into the soil, but only in spots and patches. These remarks apply both to top dressing grass and spreading on bare or plowed soil, although the general practice is to spread it on grass, whether for meadow or pasture, or on sod to be inverted in spring for corn. Not less beneficial is the autumn application to winter wheat, when, in addition to the enriching of the plants by the soluble manure, they are protected from the exposure and winds of winter by the fibrous or insoluble portions.—Country Gentleman.

FOOD FOR BEES.

It may be of interest to bee-keepers to know all the different plants, trees, etc., from which bees gather honey, and we therefore give the following list from the Bee Journal and other sources: The plants are classed—1. Spring flowering trees and plants. 2. Summer. 3. Fall flowering trees, etc.

Spring.—Willow, alder, aspen or poplar, elm, maple, marsh-marigold, hepatica, anemone, dandelion, erythronium, service-berry, currant, gooseberry, strawberry, peach, cherry, apple, pear, China tree, black gum, honeysuckle, oak, red-bud, hazel, yellow jasmine, sweet myrrh, magnolia, hawthorn, box-elder, locust, azalea, shepherd's purse.

Summer.—Red clover, plantain, thistle, strawberry, pea, sumac, catnip, peppermint, smart-weed, Spanish needles, white clover, alsike clover, boneset, thyme, sweet marjoram, star-wort, chickweed, raspberry, thorn, crab apple, cockspur, whortleberry, sourwood, blackhaw, azalea, self-seal, honey-dew, cinquefoil, linden or basswood, cucumber, chinkapin, bee-balm, iron-weed, chestnut, maize, persimmon, sorghum, heliotrope, beggar's lice, buckwheat, silkweed, cardinal flower, balsam, mountain mint, turnip, spearmint, viper's bugloss, dandelion, pennyroyal, speedwell, English clover, sweet clover, elderberry.

Autumn.—Buckwheat, white clover, English clover, red clover, sweet clover, alsike clover, aster, golden rod, cinquefoil, pennyroyal, phlox, chick-weed, smart-weed, dandelion, artichoke, chrysanthemum.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

TO REMOVE PROUD FLESH.—Pulverize loaf sugar very fine and apply it to the part affected. This is a new and easy remedy, and it is said to remove it entirely without pain. It has been practiced in England for a number of years.

QUINCE.—The expressed juice of the quince, or a syrup made of it, is useful in nausea, vomiting and fluxes. Two pounds of sugar to a gallon of the juice makes a delicious wine. Equal parts of the juice and brandy, or any good spirits, with a little sugar, makes a fine cordial or stomachic. It makes a superior preserve. A mucilage made of the seeds, with sugar and nutmeg, is an excellent and delightful remedy for the dysentery.

GAPES IN POULTRY.—Take a feather from the wing of a fowl, and remove the feather part from the vane, excepting a tuft at the tip. Dip in spirits of turpentine and pass gently down the chicken's throat and into the windpipe, the opening of which may be seen at the base of the tongue. Turn the feather round once or twice to loosen the worms which infest the windpipe, and quickly withdraw it. The bird will cough violently and expel the parasites, and if any remain the turpentine will destroy them.

USE OF SULPHUR IN NESTS.—The powdered sulphur sold by all druggists is a cheap and handy preventive of parasites upon young chickens. After a hen has been sitting till well established, sprinkle a small handful upon her eggs when she is off, and upon every part of the nest, and for a little distance all around it. Then, when she is on, disturb her just enough to make her bristle her feathers, and then dust another handful down to the skin upon her head, neck, and every part of her body not in contact with the nest, and do not omit to scatter a pinch under each wing.

THE SUN.

Prof. Young, of Dartmouth, in a recent lecture at New Haven, upon the great luminary, imparted much information. The theory which he most seemed to favor respecting the sun's constitution, he illustrated very simply thus:

Put a pail of water in a room the temperature of which is below the freezing-point; the temperature of the water settles slowly till it reaches thirty-two degrees, and there remains till every drop is frozen. The sun may be a vast quantity of merely gaseous matter, which is gradually liquefying, and accordingly will not change its temperature till this process is entirely accomplished; then the temperature will fall, perhaps thousands of degrees, till solidification begins, when it will again remain stationary. One authority believes the sun to be surrounded with a liquid coat already, and the sun spots are places where the surrounding metallic clouds have opened, and we see the liquid surface below it. The theory that the sun's heat is kept up by matter constantly falling into it, he doubts, arguing that, if such masses of matter existed outside of the sun, they would exert some slight influence on the surrounding planets, no evidence of which is discernible.

Speaking of iron, he said that if the word were written in great letters across the sun's face, the proof of its existence there would not be so satisfactory as that afforded by the spectrum. He pointed out lines in the spectrum made by metals which existed in the sun, though entirely unknown to us.

He gave several illustrations of the heat of the sun. If a pillar of ice covering nine square miles extended from the earth to the sun, and all the heat of the latter should be directed upon it, the whole mass would be melted in exactly one second. If an icicle forty-five miles in diameter were to be thrust into the sun with the velocity of light, say twelve million miles a minute, it could never touch the sun; it would melt as fast as it came. Still, physicists are as yet unable to determine the exact temperature, one placing it at sixty-seven thousand degrees Fahrenheit, another at twenty million degrees Fahrenheit—some difference.

ARTIFICIAL ROSE PERFUME.

It is well known that most perfumes and flavors may now be made without the use of the original substance; modern chemistry having informed us of the composition of many of them, has made the perfumer independent of most of the original plants used. Thus, for instance, the bitter-almond flavor is made from nitro-benzole, which latter is obtained from coal-tar, and called oil of myrbane. Pineapple flavor is made from the essence of rancid butter; banana flavor from old cheese; pear flavor from nitrous ether; and oil of cloves from oil of ants. But there are several flavors and perfumes that resisted attempts at imitation. Oil of roses was one of these, but it has now been brought within the reach of art, and good rose-water has been made from salicine.

This substance is the bitter principle of the young bark of poplars, willows and several other trees. It may be transformed into an acid known as salicylic acid, and this, combined with potassa, forms the salicylate of potassa. This last substance will decompose spontaneously, and the prodnets of the decomposition possess a strong rose flavor. The cheapest method of obtaining it is to take the oil of winter-green, which is comparatively low in price, and, by the way, the heaviest of all essential oils, and boil it with a solution of caustic potassa. The oil of winter green has acid properties, and has been proved to be similar in its nature to salicylous acid. The crystalline paste formed by this operation, separated from its mother lye, gives, upon distillation with water, rose-water.

Spectacles with air lenses, formed by very concave watch glasses, placed back to back, and united round their edges by a water-tight ring of wood or vulcanized rubber, and with a focus of one and a half inches in water, have been constructed for restoring perfect vision under water.

Very fine specimens of terra cotta made in London one hundred years ago, and exposed to the weather since, are still perfect. In northern Italy many fine examples of brick and terra cotta exist, and the extensive revival in England and Germany of this method of building is worthy of note.

The Journal of the Telegraph announces that the seemingly wild problem of transmitting messages both ways at the same time, on a single wire, has at last been solved. It does not work to perfection, but its entire possibility has been completely demonstrated.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. "A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, 'are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts.'"

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. SCHELE DEVERE, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

MEDICAL.

TO THE AFFLICTED.
The most salutary and efficient remedy against all affections of the breast, lungs and throat is decidedly
Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Syrup.
Many medicines of doubtful virtue have been pressed upon the public, and kept up for a while by persistent advertising and humbuggery; but Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Syrup is an old friend to the invalid. It has now been in use for the last forty years, and its popularity is still increasing.
It is sovereign in colds, coughs, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, inflammation of the throat, laryngitis, spitting of blood, whooping cough, etc.; rheumatism, diarrhea or dysentery.
For sale by all respectable druggists.
F. P. DUCONGE, Proprietor,
my2 2m 39 Chartres street.

The New Louisiana Remedy
FOR CONSUMPTION, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable product of the swamps of Louisiana. It is prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as
G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SIRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,
and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste, and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. SCHOOL HISTORY.
(From the Virginia Educational Journal.)
Mr. Swinton's reputation led us to examine this book. What is of most importance in the work is its extreme fairness. It is vastly superior, in this respect, to any history issued at the North that we have seen. Where accuracy seems almost impossible, he comes nearer to the truth than the others.

THE "DOMESTIC"
IS THE "KING"
Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.
ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems ineffectable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."
All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.
You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.
Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The weather has been clear and warm. The crop accounts have been much less favorable, and from some localities decidedly discouraging. We hear a general complaint of the want of rain, the ground being caked, plants not coming up, or presenting a poor stand, and being otherwise inauspicious. Our accounts from the sugar crop are still discouraging. Since writing the above we have heard from Grenada, Mississippi, of timely showers, and hope that other localities were equally fortunate.

The river is 2 feet 10 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the tenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales..	3,045
Lake		3
Mobile		87
Arkansas		1,196
Florida		1
Total		4,332

On Saturday the demand improved, and 1,850 bales changed hands at about previous rates, although in some cases factors made slight concessions. On Monday buyers came forward with still more spirit, the movement being stimulated by an advance of 1-16d. at Liverpool and ⅛c. at New York, and factors were more stringent in their pretensions during the morning, which checked operations. Later, however, the decline in gold counteracting the favorable news, they met the demand more freely and accepted Saturday's figures. The sales summed up 2,800 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but with little prospect of more than an average business. The demand, however, being stimulated by an advance of ⅛d. at Liverpool, soon became quite active, and although factors advanced their pretensions, in many cases above the limits of buyers, yet the sales summed up 3,500 bales, which, considering the supply, may be regarded as a very liberal business. We heard of no sales of the lower grades to indicate any quotable change, but good ordinary and low middling advanced ⅛c., and middling also ruled more in favor of factors. Strict good ordinary sold at 21¼@21⅜c., a high style of the same at 21½c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 21⅝@21¾c., barely low middling at 21⅞c., low middling at 22@22⅛c., and strict low middling at 22¼@22⅜c.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 933,861 bales, against 1,324,801 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,053,687 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 93,156 to France, and a decrease of 761,768 to Great Britain, and of 288,698 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Ordinary	19 @ 20¼
Good ordinary	20¾ @ 21⅛
Low middling	22 @ 22⅜
Middling	22⅞ @ 23
Strict middling	23¼ @ 23⅜
Good middling	23½ @ —

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MAY 23, 1872. NO. 21.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

BROOKLYN, May 15.—In the Methodist General Conference to-day a motion was made to appoint in each State and Territory one eminent lawyer to act for the church. Motion carried.

A collection was taken to complete the amount necessary for the erection of a monument to Bishop Kingsley, in Syria, and for the benefit of the family of the deceased Bishop.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 16.—The Chinese news by the steamship Japan is very important. Tseng Kwofan, Viceroy of Nankin, the most powerful politician in China and a most determined opponent of foreigners, is dead.

The Emperor, though not yet sixteen years of age, is about to be married. He signalized the anniversary of his accession to the throne by liberating all but the worst criminals of the empire.

RICHMOND, May 17.—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church South convened here to-day. Dr. Welch, of Arkansas, was appointed moderator. One hundred delegates present.

A motion, inquiring into the expediency of adopting optional liturgical service, caused a great deal of excitement.

The Assembly meets at Little Rock next year.

NEW YORK, May 18.—The Methodist Conference adopted a resolution electing eight new bishops, one of whom is from the South.

NEW YORK, May 19.—A special states that the fires in Pike county, Pennsylvania, covered a surface of seven miles. The lumber districts suffered heavily. Three lumber settlements and twelve saw mills were destroyed. The loss will reach $250,000.

The fires in Wayne county have stopped the coal trains on the Delaware and Hudson railroad. Large tracts of wood are also burned over in Sussex county, New Jersey, Sullivan and Delaware counties, New York, and Monroe county, Pennsylvania.

The total losses by all these fires cannot fall short of $1,000,000.

RICHMOND, VA., May 20.—The Board of Foreign Missions of the Southern Baptist Convention to-day appointed the Rev. G. C. Lorimer, D. D., of Boston, missionary to Italy, with authority to raise funds and build a Baptist church in Rome.

NEW YORK, May 21.—The election of Bishops in the General Methodist Episcopal Assembly is progressing by ballot, and is a tedious affair.

Dr. Slicer said that thirty years ago, at the election of Bishops, there had been ballot stuffing. He hoped, if such a thing was discovered here, the vote would be taken over again.

An Indiana delegate demanded that the laity and clergy vote separately for Bishops.

Motion for a separate ballot lost. (Tremendous cheering.)

A delegate called attention to the demonstrations of the audience, and moved that the galleries be cleared. (Hisses from the galleries.)

Bishop Ames asked the police, if there were any present, to clear the galleries.

During the absence of the tellers, the Book Concern was discussed further.

Only three Bishops elected—W. A. Harris, Central Ohio; R. S. Foster, New York, and Thomas Bowman, Iowa. Those lacking majorities were: Peck, Wiley, Foss, Emdie, Merrill, Hoven, Roe, Newman, Waldon, Fowler, Crary, Cummings, Cobbey and Hill. There were other scattering votes.

LATER.—Messrs. Wiley and Merrill were elected Bishops. The remaining three will be elected to-morrow.

On the second ballot for Bishops Newman received only eighty-four votes.

The Herald special commission to look after Dr. Livingstone is within twenty days' march of him. He was well at last advices.

FOREIGN.

YOKOHAMA, April 23.—A frightful fire occurred in Yeddo, during a severe gale, destroying habitations covering a space of two by three miles. The fire originated in one of the Prince's late palaces, which was occupied by troops. The flames leaped over whole blocks of buildings and set fire to places a mile distant from the building in which the fire began. An immense amount of property was destroyed. Where the wounded and lame were unable to escape, the officials slashed right and left with their swords, and this saved many persons from the more awful fate of burning. Thirty thousand persons are homeless. The government opened rice storehouses and fed all who applied. The occurrence of this fire had led the government to permit foreigners to lease land in Yeddo, the owners being compelled to make monthly reports. This act will cause foreign money to be invested there.

A Japanese fair is to be opened at Kiote, the former residence of the Mikado, and the hot-bed of the anti-foreign party. Foreigners, on depositing $300 with their consul, as a guarantee for their good behavior, may visit the fair for twenty days. This movement is made as a test of the disposition of foreigners toward the natives. If they are troublesome to the government, Iwaukara will be ordered to keep Japan a sealed book for some time longer.

LONDON, May 15, three P. M.—The message of President Grant to the United States Senate, submitting the proposed additional article to the Washington treaty, relative to indirect claims, serves to reassure the public that the differences between the two nations will be honorably settled.

The publication of the message has had an effect upon the market for American securities, which are now firmer than at the opening.

PARIS, May 15.—Marshal Bazaine, though placed under arrest, is allowed to remain at home, but guards have been placed in the grounds surrounding his residence to prevent outside parties from communicating with him.

MADRID, May 15.—The force of Carlists which entered Spain from Portugal was met near the frontier by a body of government troops and driven back into Portugal territory.

ROME, May 16.—The Italian government has sent a communication to the government of Prince Charles of Roumania, protesting against the persecution and oppression of the Jews in that country.

BERLIN, May 16.—The Reichstag has passed a resolution asking the government to submit for its action a draft of a law which shall regulate the license granted to religious orders, and provide for the punishment of all members of such organizations who are guilty of dangerous activity toward the State. This resolution is aimed more particularly at the Jesuits, who are especially mentioned as requiring restrictions.

PARIS, May 18.—Dispatches from Spain report a heavy defeat of government troops by the insurgents at Bilboa.

MADRID, May 18.—Don Carlos has certainly escaped from Spain; his whereabouts is unknown.

MADRID, May 21.—All dispatches from Biscay report that the Carlist organization in that province has been completely annihilated.

VALUABLE MANUSCRIPTS LOST.—By the burning, on the twentieth ultimo, at Coffeeville, Mississippi, of the house of Mr. Edward Mayes, all the manuscripts of the late Judge A. M. Longstreet were destroyed. They had been placed in the hands of Mr. Mayes to be edited, and he was waiting only to complete a biography of the distinguished deceased ere publishing them in full. The humorous writings of Judge Longstreet, "Georgia Scenes" and others, can be replaced; but, what is to be much regretted, is the utter loss of the manuscript of an original work entitled "Biblical Criticism," to which Judge Longstreet had devoted many years of assiduous study and labor.

DISASTROUS FIRE NEAR PENSACOLA. The saw mills of Messrs. Chandler, Sherman & Co., situated near Pensacola, lately took fire and in a short time were entirely destroyed, occasioning a loss to the amount of $50,000. Of this loss was $8,000 worth of sawed lumber ready for shipment. There was insurance of only $10,000.

These mills were the largest and finest on the Pensacola Bay, and did an immense business. Their destruction has caused much inconvenience to timber merchants, as there were an unusually large number of vessels in port after lumber.

THERE is a vast difference between the expression of a due and delicate appreciation of merit, and that false and exaggerated praise which is dictated by adulation. The former is always received with pleasure, but the latter wounds the susceptibility of those on whom it is lavished, to a mind rightly constituted there being nothing more painful than undeserved or even excessive commendation.

CORNER-STONE ADDRESSES.

Addresses at the laying of the corner-stone of the new Publishing House were delivered by Bishops Pierce and Wightman. Last week we gave an account of the services. Below we give the addresses:

Bishop Pierce said: I am not only hoarse, but unwell in other respects—too unwell to fill my place in the programme of this service. But I am unwilling to subject another to the embarrassment and annoyance of a sudden call to fill a vacancy. I will stand in my lot long enough to make at least a few remarks.

The heavens above us, all radiant with sunshine, are not brighter than the prospects of Southern Methodism on this auspicious occasion. Christian hope beams over her fortunes in the light of hallowed prophecy, and the shadows of the past but constitute a background from which stand out in bolder relief the assurances and encouragements which cheer her on to future and more glorious triumphs.

The Publishing House may well say: "It is good for me that I have been afflicted." She has no reason to quote, in application to herself, the other portion of the text, "for before I was afflicted I went astray;" but she may add: "Before my recent calamity I was embarrassed with the burden of debt entailed on me by the disasters of the war; I was embarrassed by the division of the public mind on the question of my location; I was embarrassed by an ill-shapen, inconvenient, unattractive habitation. But misfortune has rallied around me the sympathy of the country—the generous response of the church and her friends has not only repaired my loss, but endowed me with capacity for enlargement—improvement—a better adaptation of means to ends—the question of location is settled beyond all the possible contingencies of the future; and now from the ashes and debris of the old rookery where I have been cribbed and confined and almost smothered, I come forth to rear a structure 'polished after the similitude of a palace.'"

The history of what seemed to be a threatening disaster but illustrates a common fact in the experience of most people, especially of the good—apparent evils are blessings in disguise. The clouds which deepen and darken along the sky, and cast their ominous shadows upon the earth, "are big with mercy," and often "break in blessings on our heads." It is a consolatory and inspiring thought that no evil spirit has anything to do with the government of the world. It is ruled by the God of love. Our sharpest pangs, our most serious calamities, are not the inflictions of a malignant principle—the barbarous sport of an insensible, unsympathizing, wanton mind, gloating over our anguish; they are not blown upon us by the winds of chance, nor borne down by the torrent of an unintelligent and inevitable destiny, but are regulated, meted out, appropriated and controlled by him, without whom not a sparrow falleth to the ground, nor a single hair from the human head. This view is as applicable to the enterprises and institutions of the church as to the ministers and members by whom she works her system of benevolence and love.

Methodism has always been the patron, ally and friend of education and intelligence. She believes that a thirst for religious knowledge is an essential element of religious character. This she recognized, encouraged and provided for from the beginning.

I know it is the fashion in some quarters to ignore Methodism—her existence, her progress, her influence and power. Persecution cast her out in her infancy. Ignorance, prejudice and jealousy have slandered and reproached her all along. But, faithful to her mission, she has survived them all, and prospered in spite of all. If true to herself and her calling, she will yet command the admiration and homage of mankind. Already the revolution has begun among the leading minds of Europe and America. The name of our immortal founder is emerging from the mists of his own earlier times, and he will yet stand forth as a character, a reformer, a philanthropist, without a parallel in the annals of our race. To Wesley the world is indebted for cheap religious literature. He was the first to throw it into popular form, and to bring it within the means of the lower classes of society. Asbury adopted his plans and ideas, brought them across the ocean, propagated them among his preachers, and diffused them among the people. Soon after the organization of the church in this country an enterprise was projected which has developed into the mammoth Book Concern of New York, with its various branches. The management of it was committed to the chief talent of the church. Great names in our history dot the line of its progress. Dickins, Bangs, Soule, Emory, Waugh, Carlton. On our side of the line we have had Early, Stevenson, Owen, McFerrin—names not unknown to fame. At a meeting not long since, over the river, an old man, electrified, enthused, transported by some of McFerrin's characteristic speeches and sermons, came out and said: "That man is the very mudsill of the Methodist Church. Talk about your editors and your bishops—I tell you when that man dies your Methodism is gone up." We all recognize his great services, but Methodism, with her missions, and papers, and schools, and Publishing House, will survive him. Long may he live to help her on! and when he goes home, leave as his monument a living, spiritual, growing church. And last, but not least, for sagacity, energy, triumphant success under great difficulties, perhaps the wisdom of the church culminated in the appointment of Albert H. Redford. He took command of the ship when she was rocking among the breakers—thumping upon the bottom. He has worked her out into deep water, made his annual voyage, and brought back a good report. She is now refitting under the same pilotage for a longer sail with a richer cargo.

Looking over the history of our preaching and our publishing, I take it on me to say in this presence that no church, no organization, has made heavier contributions to the general intelligence of the country than Methodism, through her various instrumentalities and institutions. The urgent call of Asbury and McKendree, and their colleagues, upon the preachers at every Conference, was: "Spread the books, brethren—spread the books." Nobly did these men respond to the call of their Bishops. Not only did they carry the gospel to the remote settlements all along the receding line of our advancing population, but every one of them was a circulating library. The books were few, but they were very choice. They encouraged the people to buy and read, and the old Methodists of my father's generation, as far as I ever met them, were the best posted in Methodist theology and literature of any people I have ever known; far ahead of their descendants, who boast of knowledge and progress. But enough. Let this building rise. Lay its foundations deep. Make its walls thick and strong. Invoke architectural taste to preside over its front. Let sound judgment arrange its interior. Prepare an airy, elegant room for the Advocate, line its walls with books, furnish it with all modern improvements, seat the venerable editor upon his throne of power, and let him send forth, from the rich stores of his varied knowledge, the words of truth, soberness and wisdom. Provide a mission room where the board and bishops and secretary may meet in counsel, and plan for the universal empire of the Son of God. Make ample arrangements for my young friend the Sunday school secretary. He has done well. The church everywhere is satisfied. Let him lack nothing needful in feeding the lambs of the flock, and training the young for heaven. And now, let us mark this day as white in the calendar of Methodism; and though we may not live, our children and children's children will live, to realize the hopes which this scene and this project inspire.

Bishop Wightman said: The proprieties of the occasion allow me only a few closing words. As the representative of this large assembly I feel called on to offer to God, the giver of every good and perfect gift, thanks for his good and wise providence. In this I am sure I utter the feelings of all present. There are some men who can see order in the gas-lights of a city's streets, but cannot see any order in the stars that move in the midnight sky. But, however incomprehensible may be many of the evolutions of the divine Providence, yet here we can trace very manifestly the goodness and wisdom of that Providence which allowed the destruction of the old buildings that stood on this ground, and made way for the new and magnificent structures which are to take their place—structures worthy to stand side by side with the lofty and beautiful buildings that surround this spot. You all, my friends and fellow-citizens, have in the history of the past the pledge and assurance that the corner-stone we have just laid shall support a rising edifice worthy of the church whose cherished institution it shall be, and worthy of this enterprising community, and worthy of the broad, and fertile, and beautiful lands of Tennessee. As the representative of the Southern Methodist Church, I offer, in behalf of that church, hearty congratulations to the book agent, to whose sagacity and far-seeing practical wisdom much of what we this day see and anticipate is due. When his work is completed there shall go out, week after week, day after day, hour after hour, influences that shall touch myriads of minds and hearts, East, West, North and South. This is a magnificent thought. It is a conception before which my spirit stands awed—to think of the mighty, rushing, far-reaching tides of influence that shall flow from this throbbing center—influences that shall last through all coming time, and embrace the generations of the future—influences that shall touch the heart of childhood—influences that shall sustain all that is pure and lovely in the family; all that is just, and right, and valuable in law and social order; all that is sacred and hallowed in religion. O ye generations of the coming future, I utter for you congratulations this day! I speak in feeble utterance the mighty voices of joy with which you might well celebrate the proceedings of this day which witnesses the inauguration of this new Publishing House. You will be affected by the books that shall be printed here; by the Sunday school leaves that every wind shall scatter over the land; by the broad sheets of the Christian Advocate that shall carry to hundreds of thousands of families, generation after generation, instruction, entertainment, the blessings of Christian intelligence, the solace of Christian hope. God grant that this reconstruction may be a right fortunate and mightily prosperous reconstruction—one over which no tears shall flow, no regrets arise, no disappointments ensue! May the massive structure which shall rise on this corner-stone realize our most sanguine hopes! May the smiling heavens bend over it with benedictions! May our noble Southern lands, lately desolated by the plowshare of war, in the midst of which this grand edifice shall stand, be once more peaceful, prosperous and happy!

HELP NEEDED.

MR. EDITOR: There is a young man of my acquaintance—a very pious young man—who feels he is divinely called to the ministry. I have often heard him say, in the language of St. Paul: "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." But, unfortunately, he entirely missed an education in early life. He desires an education, he craves an education. Above all things else, he has been very studious, but he is a poor man, and has a small family, and has to labor so hard that it is utterly impossible for him to ever obtain an education without help. Now I wish to ask the many readers of the ADVOCATE if there is one who will help to make a minister. The Lord will abundantly bless such an one.

If there is any one willing to contribute, they can send their address to the ADVOCATE, as I am a constant reader of the same. I will get it, and I will send my friend's address privately.

Yours in Christ, M.

Be still prepared for death; and death or life Shall thereby be the sweeter.—Shakespeare.

Rebuilding the Publishing House.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH—Dear Brethren: We take the liberty of addressing you in behalf of the Southern Methodist Publishing House. The destruction of a large part of it by fire, in the month of February last, entailed a heavy loss upon the whole connection, and rendered it necessary to undertake extensive repairs in order to refit it for its required operations. Upon consultation it was determined, as the better course, to rebuild the whole edifice, and adapt it for all time to the wants of a great and growing church, rather than encounter the expense of merely repairing the damaged part. In the propriety of this measure we fully concur.

The general agent has laid his plans of improvement before us in respect to the dimensions, the conveniences and the style of the structure proposed, and we cordially approve of them. The amount necessary to accomplish this object has been estimated, and an appeal has already been made, by means of the press, to our widely-extended communion to co-operate by subscriptions in money to this enterprise. Responses from many sources have been cordially and liberally given, which, from time to time, have been duly acknowledged in the columns of the Nashville Christian Advocate. We record with pleasure the noble generosity of the citizens of Nashville and its vicinity in subscribing the sum of $35,000 to re-establish the institution in its present location. This amount, together with that realized from various other directions, brings the aggregate within $10,000 of what is sufficient to be contributed in order to complete and refurnish the entire building.

Without entering into further details, we appeal to that portion of our connection which has not yet contributed to this object, to evince their interest in it by raising the deficiency which we have stated. This deficiency is small in view of the number and resources of our people, and of the great importance of adequate publishing facilities to the prosperity of our church. The opportunity is peculiarly favorable for placing it on a basis of expanded usefulness, with comparatively little effort on the part of the connection.

We deem it needless to argue the imperative duty of furnishing to our numerous membership and to our enlightened age, a pure denominational literature by means of our own press, under the supervision of responsible agents. The church has long since taken her position on this question, and has occupied it with gratifying success; and desires to adjust her capacity in this respect to the increasing demands of the times.

The Southern Methodist Publishing House we consider, by the course of events, permanently located in the city of Nashville, where, by the skillful management and untiring energy of our general book agent, and the patronage of the Southern Methodist public, it has recovered from the misfortunes of the past, and attained to the prosperity and credit of a large and influential institution full of promise for the future. And we desire it to be remembered that the voice of the General Conference constituted the Publishing House the property and the boon of our entire church. The whole connection is equally interested in its fortunes, and will reap the benefit of its successes.

On these, and on other grounds that might be assigned, we unite in urging you to assist in rebuilding this cherished institution, and in rendering it a fountain of blessing and a monument of honor to our Methodism. And for this purpose we recommend that collections and subscriptions be taken on all our circuits and stations which have not responded to the calls previously made, on or before the last Sunday in June next, and remitted to Dr. A. H. Redford, Nashville, Tennessee. Invoking the blessing of God upon you, we are, dear brethren, your servants in Christ Jesus,

FAITHFUL.

The Lord, who fashioned my hands for working,
Set me a task, and it is not done;
Tried and tried since the early morning,
And now to westward slaketh the sun!

Noble the task that was kindly given
To one so little and weak as I—
Somehow my strength could never grasp it,
Never, as days and years went by.

Others around me, cheerfully toiling,
Showed me their work as they passed away;
Filled were their hands to overflowing,
Proud were their hearts, and glad and gay.

Laden with harvest spoils, they entered
In at the golden gate of their rest;
Laid their sheaves at the feet of the Master,
Found their places among the blest.

Happy be they who strove to help me,
Failing ever in spite of their aid!
Fain would their love have borne me with them,
But I was unready and sore afraid.

Now I know my task will never be finished,
And when the Master calleth my name,
The Voice will find me still at my labor,
Weeping beside it in weary shame.

With empty hands I shall rise to meet him,
And, when he looks for the fruits of years,
Nothing have I to lay before him
But broken efforts and bitter tears.

Yet when he calls I fain would hasten—
Mine eyes are dim and their light is gone;
And I am as weary as though I carried
A burden of beautiful work well done.

I will fold my empty hands on my bosom,
Meekly thus in the shape of his cross;
And the Lord, who made them so frail and feeble,
Maybe will pity their strife and loss.

SUBSTANCE OF A SERMON

Preached at Fayette, Mississippi, April 18, 1872, at the opening of the District Conference of the Vicksburg district, by Rev. J. G. JONES, and published by the unanimous request of the conference.

What hath God wrought!—Num. xxiii, 23.

Our text is historically connected with the very important interview which took place on the plains of Moab between Balak, king of the Moahites, and Balaam of Pethor, a prophet of the Lord. All who may desire further details of this notable interview can find them in this and the preceding and succeeding chapters. It answers our purpose at present to say that after Balaam, inspired by "the vision of the Almighty," had reviewed the wonderful dealings of God with his chosen people up to that date, was constrained to make the exclamation: "What hath God wrought!" It is very profitable, my brethren, to pause occasionally, amidst the active duties of life, long enough to retrospect the wonderful dealings of God with us as a part of his chosen race. We find many examples of this recorded in the holy Scriptures. Moses, in his valedictory address to the tribes of Israel, called upon them to "remember all the way which the Lord their God had led them these forty years in the wilderness," and the holy prophets and inspired psalmists frequently rehearsed in the ears of the descendants of this people, standing at the head of the militant church, the providential dealings of God with their ancestors. This they did not only to humble them by a recital of their oft-repeated delinquencies and the many afflictions they had suffered on account of their disobedience, but also to excite their overflowing gratitude to God "for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men," and to encourage them to put their trust in their covenant-keeping God, and be steadfast in their obedience to him in all time to come. We have many examples of a similar character recorded in the New Testament scriptures.—Christ and the evangelists, the apostles and their coadjutors, frequently directed the attention of the Hebrews to the many exalted privileges, mercies and blessings which God had bestowed on them and their covenanted forefathers, not only as a reproof of their present obstinacy and hardness of heart, but to suggest and encourage the importance of an immediate and unreserved surrender of themselves to God, that they might be the continued recipients of his special favors. We, my brethren, may profitably imitate this scriptural example on this occasion. Here we may set up our Ebenezer, for hitherto the Lord has helped us. We stand here to-night in the midst of the original Mississippi Conference, and I propose to give you a succinct view of what God hath wrought through the instrumentality of our Conference. Do not understand me as proposing to give anything like a detailed history of our Conference from its origin to the present time. The necessary brevity of a public discourse will not admit historical details. I think I have some appreciation of my present position. I presume the fact that I am now the oldest minister of our church in this district, and from personal contact and long-continued observation know more of the history of our Conference than any man now living, suggested the idea to my brethren of soliciting me to preach the introductory sermon at our present District Conference. I gladly avail myself of the courtesy and confidence of my brethren to say some things to-night which I may never have an opportunity of saying again under similar circumstances. I became connected with the Mississippi Conference in 1824, and my connection with it has been unbroken until the present time; and my main object on this occasion is to contrast the Conference as it was, when I first knew it, with what it has since become, not only in its original territory, but in much additional territory, which it has been the first to occupy at later periods—with what it has since become, and where it still exists, in its populous and prosperous descendants, in the form of nine additional Annual Conferences.—There had been successful Methodist preaching in the territory occupied by the original Mississippi Conference nearly a quarter of a century before I was admitted. As early as April, 1799, Tobias Gibson came as a pioneer missionary to the Natchez country, and in 1808 Matthew P. Sturdevant was sent from the South Carolina Conference to form a mission circuit on the Tombeckbee river. From these dates the Methodists claimed and maintained a foothold in this country, but the Mississippi Conference was not officially organized until the fall of 1816. When I was admitted as a probationer, in 1824, our Conference territory embraced all of Alabama south of the high lands which separate the Tennessee and Mobile waters, a portion of Florida about Pensacola, all of Mississippi and all of Louisiana. Texas was then a Mexican province, and Protestant Christianity was excluded by law; but as early as about 1825 Rev. Henry Stephenson, a worthy local deacon, residing in what was then a part of Natchitoches parish, Louisiana, began to cross the Sabine, and preached to the American settlers on the Redlands. I was personally cognizant of the fact that he took several preaching excursions across the Sabine in 1826. It may be well for the future historian of Methodism in Texas to note this fact. My dates are correct, for in 1826 my work was in northwestern Louisiana, and I was well acquainted with Henry Stephenson. Texas afterward became an independent republic, and incorporated religious liberty in her constitution. The country was soon organized as a mission district, and attached to the Mississippi Conference. In this territory, which has been first or last occupied by our Conference, we now have two Conferences in Alabama, two in Mississippi, one in Louisiana, and five in Texas. But let us now examine our published statistics, and compare the present with the past in our former territorial bounds, that we may see, with something like absolute certainty, what God hath wrought through the instrumentality of our church within less than half a century. When I was admitted on trial, in 1824, we had 41 traveling preachers, most of them young unmarried men. We then had 8,024 white members, and 2,000 colored members. The local preachers were not then numbered as a separate class, but I suppose we had at least as many local as itinerant preachers. Now, in territory originally occupied by our Conference, we had in 1870—I have no copy of the general minutes of a later date—783 traveling preachers, 1,428 local preachers, 126,982 white members, and 5,778 colored members, giving us, in 1870, a grand total of 134,971 registered church members in our former territory. In order to have a more correct view of the great work which God hath wrought in our midst, there are several other facts to be taken into the account:

1. Soon after the close of the late war the minutes show a decrease in our colored membership of about 40,595 within the various Conferences covering our former territory. These colored members were seduced from our communion mostly by clerical interlopers, who came among us with the avowed purpose of disintegrating and absorbing our church, and they had the unchristian audacity to commence at the weakest and most unprotected point. Hitherto they had kept at a great distance from the colored people of our country, and had scarcely ever contributed a mite, in any way, to their intellectual, moral and religious elevation, until they saw an opportunity to impose on their native credulity and impulsiveness to pervert them from the church to which, under God, they owed all the religious knowledge they had, and all of Christianity they possessed. But "the Judge of all the earth" will reward every man according to his works, and the faithful and self-sacrificing ministers of our Conferences, who labored for the salvation of these people during all the long years of their bondage, will not lose their reward, though strangers have entered their well-cultivated fields, and, for the present, are reaping the fruit of their labors. And if these misled and perverted colored people ever become capable of understanding the true history of their former church relations, and of appreciating what is honorable and just among true Christians, they will return to the church of their first love, by connecting themselves with the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church of America, which is a co-ordinate branch of our church.

2. After due deliberation at the first meeting of our General Conference, after the emancipation of the colored people in the South, we thought it best to advise them to organize themselves into an independent Methodist Episcopal Church, and the preliminary steps were taken in that direction. The plan, being approved by the great majority of our colored members, has since been legitimately perfected by the organization of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church of America, and most of our remaining colored members have united with that church, and are no longer reported in our statistics.

3. The Choctaw nation of Indians was formerly in our Conference territory and under our pastoral care, and after their removal to the Indian Territory in the West they remained a part of our Conference until, with other tribes, they were erected into the Indian Mission Conference. They owe the introduction of Methodism into their nation, and many years of their greatest religious prosperity, to the labors of our Mississippi preachers.

4. Our church here in the Southwest, as elsewhere, has always been, both directly and indirectly, the feeder of our sister churches, and many of their most valuable members have received their first awakenings, and been converted through the instrumentality of our people. Indeed, one of our sister churches often boasts that she receives not only many of her members, but also a large number of her ministers from our communion. We do not object to this transfer of both members and ministers from our church to one more needy, provided the parties are influenced only by such holy motives as should prompt true Christians to change their church relations, and by such means as are honorable and evangelical. But I see no justifiable cause for boasting about this accession of members from our church. A church which is not self-supporting and self-progressive is not a very safe church, and has nothing whereof to boast. I believe, my brethren, that it will take the revelations of eternity to make known what God hath wrought in behalf of other churches through our ministry and membership.

5. In summing up all that God hath wrought through our present sisterhood of ten Conferences, occupying the former territory of the Mississippi Conference, we must take into the account our vast and constantly increasing Sabbath school interests; our denominational schools, from the unpretending local academy to colleges of the highest grade; our church edifices, parsonages and cemeteries, with our church periodicals, etc.

6. Finally, my brethren, in concluding my remarks under this division of the subject, I may inquire, What avails our seed-time and laborious cultivation if we reap no harvest? In order more fully to realize what God hath wrought, we must look at final results. Since the organization of our Conference at least one whole generation and a half of the fruits of our labors have died in the Lord, and have gone to their inheritance in heaven. How many will not be known to us until "the dead in Christ shall rise!" Our weekly periodicals are sometimes burdened with notices of the triumphant death of our membership, while thousands die unnoticed beyond their immediate vicinity. Their bones are in the clay all over our territory, but their redeemed spirits, washed and made pure in the blood of the Lamb, are "Far from a world of grief and sin,

With God eternally shut in."

GENERAL SUPERINTENDENCY.

MR. EDITOR: The Methodist Episcopal Church South is a unit, having the same articles of religion, and the same rules and regulations everywhere. Bishop Asbury said: "Methodism is union all over—union in exchange of preachers, union in exchange of sentiments, union in exchange of interests; we must draw resources from the center to the circumference." The grand center, from which radiates a potential influence, and from which "we draw resources," is found in our general episcopal superintendency. In our superintendency is fulfilled the significant words of the Lord Jesus Christ, when he said: "He that is greatest among you shall be your servant." Perhaps none can be found who are more the servants of all than our Bishops, and none more highly and truly respected for their office and work's sake.

By the constitution of our church the general oversight, in planning the different fields of labor and appointing the preachers to their several charges, is lodged in the hands of chief pastors. Since such power is thus conferred upon our Bishops, it lays the ground of necessity for them to travel through the entire connection, that they may be personally acquainted, as far as may be, with the condition and wants of the church at large, and by their personal ministry to build up and establish the church in "the faith once delivered to the saints." Hence the tenth clause of section 2, chapter 3 of the Discipline, speaking of the duties of a Bishop, reads: "To travel during the year, as far as practicable, through the presiding elders' districts which may be included in his episcopal district, in order to preach and to oversee the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church." The General Conference, representing, as it does, the whole church, regards this duty as fundamental in the structure of the church, and as primary in the success thereof. Indeed that body has seen proper, from session to session, to preserve inviolate the third clause of section 1, chapter 2 of "Limitations and Restrictions," which reads thus: "They (the General Conference) shall not change or alter any part or rule of our government so as to do away episcopacy or destroy the plan of our itinerant general superintendency." "The plan of" this "superintendency" makes it the duty of the Bishops to preside in the sessions of the General Conference and in the Annual and District Conferences. According to the plan, it is as much the duty of the Bishop, if practicable, to preside in the District as in the Annual Conferences. The third clause of section 3, chapter 2, settling the question as to who shall preside in the District Conference, holds the following language: "A Bishop, or in his absence the presiding elder, shall preside; and if both be absent the conference shall elect a president." While this clause of the Discipline shows the weighty privilege the Bishop enjoys, it also shows the heavy tax levied upon his time, talents and energies. Therefore the Methodist people everywhere think they are entitled to an annual visit of one of our Bishops; and the presiding elder is worried no little by his beloved charge if he cannot secure the service of one of the chief shepherds at least at the District Conference.

System in the "itinerant general superintendency" must be rigidly observed in order to carry out the grand purpose contemplated in its powers and functions. Hence the Discipline holds the Bishop to "his episcopal district," and that "during the year," and enjoins that he shall travel "through the presiding elders' districts which may be included in his episcopal district." According to this language one Bishop has not the right to leave his episcopal district and enter upon that of another, any more than the presiding elder has the right to leave his district, and enter upon and perform the duties of another presiding elder upon his district. Hence the harmony and efficiency of Methodism, when worked in all its parts and powers according to the rules and regulations of our most excellent Discipline. By this rule our Bishops perform their duties in perfect harmony; so with the presiding elders and preachers in charge of stations, circuits and missions. By this rule our Bishops not only visit the great centers of our influence and of the country, but they reach the "hedges and highways," and preach the gospel to "the poor" and less refined. They also help the presiding elders and preachers generally, and thus build up the "waste places" of our Zion. The announcement that a Bishop is coming stirs the whole section of country in which he is to appear, and quickens the energies of the church and draws out the "mighty men" of the neighborhood, and has a happy effect in giving us a nobler reputation in the estimation of other churches. But when the Bishop fails or declines to attend these more distant or inconvenient places, our church is discouraged, and our enemies have occasion to exult, and will say: "Well, your chief shepherd does not care very much for you; you are too far from the railroad." But this is not true; for there are districts in this (Alabama) Conference into and through which railroads run, and yet a Bishop has presided in these districts but once since the introduction into our church economy of District Conferences, in the year 1866. With such facilities of traveling through the district, and then the long-continued absence of a Bishop, argues a want of systematic arrangement among the Bishops in order to meet the crying demand of the church.

When we take the number of Annual Conferences with the probable number of districts into the account, with the number of Bishops, we can demonstrate that the work has not been uniform nor general. How many Annual Conferences are there? Say thirty-six; and say that these Conferences will make a general average of eight districts to a Conference. This will give us two hundred and eighty-eight districts. We have eight active and efficient Bishops. In order to ascertain the number of District Conferences which may be reached by the Bishops in one year, we will give six months for the purpose of attending the sessions of Annual Conferences, the annual meeting of the Bishops, and the missionary meeting, college commencements and other important public exercises; and will then give them one month to rest and recuperate, and will retain five months for the purpose of attending the District Conferences. These five months will have twenty-one Sabbaths. Twenty-one multiplied by eight, the number of Bishops, will give us one hundred and sixty-eight, the number of District Conferences which may be reached in the course of one year. Now multiply this number by two, and we have three hundred and thirty-six, the number of District Conferences which may be reached by our eight active and laborious Bishops in the course of two years. And yet, in the absence of our Bishops from some districts for four and six years at a time, we have a strong presumptive argument that there is lack of system in planning the work, and the church suffers.

What we ask and pray for is that we, in this portion of the great Methodist field, may not be neglected hereafter, as we have been heretofore.

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. SARAH DAVINSON BRIGHAM was born in Iredell county, North Carolina, on the eighteenth of September, 1805, and died in Bastrop, Morehouse parish, Louisiana, on the thirteenth of March, 1872.

Her mother having died at an early age, she removed with her father, James Caldwell, to Stuart county, Tennessee, in 1818.

She was converted at a camp meeting at Manly chapel, Henry county, in 1824, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South soon after, at a camp meeting held at Cypress Creek, in Tennessee, under the pastorate of the Rev. Mr. Rostle and the Rev. Mr. Norvel, in the nineteenth year of her age, thus living the life of a Christian over forty-eight years.

The subject of this memoir, ever after her espousal to Christ and union with the church, continued to display a holy life and godly conversation. At the time of her conversion not a member of the family made pretensions to Christianity; but so thorough was the change which justifying grace wrought in her entire life and exterior deportment that other members of the family were soon brought under a gracious influence, and powerfully converted to God. At the time of her conversion her father, a man of position and wealth, was skeptical. But the bright example of her holy life, so constantly displayed in word and deed, in uniformity of devotion and fidelity in her profession, made his skepticism yield to the force of truth; and, attracted by the charms of a pious daughter's life, before his death gave evidence of a renewed nature, and in his death left confidential testimony of his future felicity in the home of God. After her marriage with the late Major James H. Brigham, a prominent and leading citizen of Louisiana, which occurred on the twenty-third of March, 1826, her zeal for the Master lost none of its ardor. As a wife she was unexceptionable, and she made home an earthly Eden. As a mother she eminently performed her part, which fact is certified in the virtuous lives and spotless reputation of eleven children. The most of those who survive her are members of some branch of the Christian church.

Sister Brigham, especially in ante-bellum times, shared the advantages of an opulent fortune, and, her husband being a public man, she was brought in contact with the gay and fashionable world. But none of these things moved her from that godly simplicity that characterized her conduct and conversation, displayed on all occasions, and heard in every circle in which she moved. With a liberal hand she dispensed her charities, in the absence of ostentation or display, practically following the precept of the great Teacher: "Let not thy left hand know what thy right doeth." Hence eternity alone will give publicity to the elemosynaries of this good woman. The widow and orphan found sympathy in her heart, and Christian generosity at her hands. As a neighbor she was loved and esteemed; as a friend devoted and unselfish. To all ministers, but especially to those of her own denomination, her door was thrown open, and no pains were spared calculated to render them comfortable, and feel that her house was a home for the preacher. A short period before her death she spoke freely concerning the power of saving faith to her son, J. Harvey Brigham, remarking that there was nothing that could compensate for the want of a well-grounded hope of heavenly immortality through the blood of Jesus Christ our Lord. The morning in advance of the evening summons to join the angel escort, that bore her pure and unprisoned spirit up to God, she manifested an unusual flow of spirits. But in less than eight hours the silver cord was loosed, the golden bowl was broken, and the wheel broken at the cistern. The tide of life ebbed, and children mourn the loss of a dear mother.

JUNIOR SET RIGHT.

MR. EDITOR: I indorse very heartily the tenor of an article in your issue of May 9, over the signature of "Junior."

The author rebukes, in a very neat style, and generally in a very pertinent manner, the ungracious and unwise tendency in some quarters to push aside old ministers "for a younger and less worthy class of men." Such tendencies ought to be rebuked. The world, especially the younger portion of it, needs continually to be reminded: "Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honor the face of the old man;" "The hoary head is a crown of glory if it be found in the way of righteousness."

"Junior," however, is very unfortunate in one of his references. To illustrate the point that "a sickly sentiment has developed," which makes "invidious distinctions" between "seniors and juniors," he says: "See also a resolution which was offered in an Annual Conference last fall, censuring an old man because he preferred complaints against the official administration of a young minister."

The illustration is totally irrelevant. True, it so happened that the minister preferring complaints was an old man, and the one complained of a young man; but there was not a word in the resolution of censure, nor in any of the discussions for or against it, about young men or old men. The resolution was based, and the discussion had, simply upon the merits of the case, without reference to the age of either party.

If "Junior" should be at a Conference where it happened that resolutions of censure were offered against a man of black hair for preferring charges against another who chanced to have red hair, he could with just the same propriety go home and write to the ADVOCATE that "invidious distinctions" were being made between black-haired men and red-haired ones.

JUNIOR'S FRIEND.

THE HUMOR OF JOHN WESLEY.

Wesley's humor enhanced the blandness of his piety, and enabled him sometimes to convey reproof in a manner that could hardly be resented with ill-temper. "Michael Fenwick," he says, "was often hindered from settling in business, because God had other work for him to do. He is just made to travel with me, being an excellent groom, valet-de-chambre, nurse, and upon occasion a tolerable preacher." This good man, one day, was vain enough to complain to him that, though constantly traveling with him, his own name was never inserted in Wesley's published journals. In the next number of the journals he found his egotism effectually rebuked. "I left Epworth," wrote Wesley, "with great satisfaction, and, about one, preached at Clayworth. I think none were unmoved but Michael Fenwick, who fell fast asleep under an adjoining hay-rick."

He could be noble in his reproofs as in all things else. Joseph Bradford was for many years his traveling companion, and considered no assistance to him as too servile, but was subject to changes of temper. Wesley directed him to carry a package of letters to the post; Bradford wished to hear his sermon first; Wesley was urgent, and insisted; Bradford refused. "Then," said Wesley, "you and I must part." "Very good, sir," replied Bradford. They slept over it. On rising, the next morning, Wesley accosted his old friend, and asked if he had considered what he had said, that they must part. "Yes, sir," replied Bradford. "And must we part?" inquired Wesley. "Please yourself, sir," was the reply. "Will you ask my pardon?" replied Wesley. "No, sir." "You won't?" "No, sir." "Then I will ask yours," replied the great man. Bradford melted under the example, and wept like a child.

THE Spaniards have a saying that a wife should resemble three things, and yet differ from these same things.

First, she should be like a snail, which always guards its house, but she should not carry the house with her whenever she goes out. Second, she should be like an echo, which speaks only after the other is finished, but she should not always have the last word. Third, she should be like the town clock, which always sounds the hours with regularity, but she should not sound so loud that the whole town shall hear it.

THE universal remark of the old Persian poet, Saadi, whenever any unusual event was mentioned, was the question: Who was the woman?

MY LITTLE ONE.—A PRAYER.

BY EDOAR FAWCETT.

God bless my little one! How fair
The mellow lamp-light gilds his hair,
Loose on the cradle-pillow there!
God bless my little one!

God guard my little one! To me
Life, widowed of his life, would be
As sea-sands widowed of the sea!
God guard my little one!

God love my little one! As clear,
Cool sunshine holds the first green spear
On April meadows, hold him dear!
God love my little one!

When these fond lips are mute, and when
I slumber, not to wake again,
God bless, God guard, God love him then.
My little one! Amen.

THE BIBLE.

This single book I'd rather own
Than all the gold and gems
That e'er in monarch's palace shone,
Or on their diadems.

Nay, were the seas one chrysolite,
The earth a golden ball,
And diamonds all the stars of night,
This book were worth them all.

THE DISPLAY AT VESUVIUS.

If Rome has lost much of its fascination for the foreigner in the downfall of the Pope, Naples still periodically attracts to it thousands of persons from all parts of the Continent. Holy Week, without the Holy Father and his benediction, is no longer spectacular, but Vesuvius is still a wonder of the world. The latest dispatches from the spot represent the volcano as in magnificent eruption, nothing like it having been witnessed since 1631. The phenomenon comes opportunely to compensate the sojourners in Italy for the loss of the ceremonial of the church at the close of Lent, the papal procession, and the blessing urbe et orbi, and all the other rites of that religious season; and it is certainly far grander. Not to speak disrespectfully of the Pope, it may be said that he cannot hold a candle to the blazing mountain, and the gloom of the Tenebræ is as nothing in comparison with the darkness of the surrounding landscape in the intervals of the volcanic convulsions.

To say that this is the most splendid display that has been witnessed since 1631, is something that may well draw to Naples at once all the tourists that can possibly get there. Sir William Hamilton's description of the eruption of 1779 will be freshly remembered. At that time a luminous smoke rose above the mountain more than a mile high, into which scores upon scores of stones, heated to redness, were incessantly thrown, to the height of two thousand feet. A mass of rock, seventeen feet thick and one hundred and eight feet in circumference, was projected to a considerable distance above the month of the crater. In 1794 there poured out of the mountain a single stream of lava which was estimated to contain more than forty-six million cubic feet, and which, we need not wonder, destroyed the town of Terre del Greco. In 1822, in 1858, and again in 1861, eruptions of great violence changed the whole face of the country around the base of Vesuvius. The eruption of 1861 occurred in the month of December, and was remarkable for the fearful detonations that accompanied it, resembling the heaviest explosions of artillery; but it excited little attention comparatively in the United States, as the public mind here was occupied with another and more dreadful kind of cannonade. The exhibition of electric lights in the eruption of 1861 was indescribably brilliant, and that the present spectacle is even finer than that would be enough to inspire every reader of the ocean telegrams with the desire to get to Naples without loss of time.

The advance of the lava flood has in all preceding eruptions been a matter for the intervention of the priesthood. A procession of ecclesiastics set out from Naples in the direction of the mountain, carrying the sacred vial that held the coagulated blood of St. Januarius. On reaching the burning tide the blood miraculously liquified and the progress of destruction was stayed. The change of rulers in Italy has wrought a change in the mode of dealing with volcanic devastations. Miracles have had their day. It is not exactly a case like that described in the old French epigram:

De par le roy, defense a Dieu
A faire miracle en ce lieu;

but it is a relinquishment of the priestly hocuspocus in favor of worldly legislation. The Italian Parliament has had its attention called to the matter, and if it cannot stop the flow of the lava, it may at least, and let us hope it will, adopt measures looking in the future both to the greater security of the dwellers in the neighborhood of Vesuvius, and the more accurate observation of volcanic phenomena.—Evening Post.

THE Watertown (Massachusetts) Republican says that no revivalist has ever visited that city who has been as successful as Mrs. Van Cott, and that many evidences are visible of the value of her labors.

PREACHING EXTEMPORE.

The imagined inability to speak extempore is, in general, a result of mental disease. A minister may be able to preach without notes on one subject, but not on another; before one audience, but not before another; one part of a sermon, but not another part. This appropriateness of his services to his own characteristics may not only save himself from failure, but may also save his pulpit from monotony.

Think more of doing good than of doing well.

Take a healthful view of your own talents, and regulate your speech according to them. Every rule for Whitefield is not imperative on Wesley. There is a healthiness of soul which results, it may be, from healthiness of body, and forms one condition of a preacher's success. Remember the law of the "herb yielding seed after his kind," and the tree yielding fruit after his kind. * * * While not attempting to do what others do, and you cannot, you may venture to do what others cannot and you can. This was the wisdom of David when he went to meet Goliah.

Theology was Dr. Priestley's work, and chemistry his recreation; but he is thought to have accomplished more in his amusement than in his labor. Writing is regarded as work, and extemporizing is looked upon as play; but unless the work be solid, the play will be frivolous.

Persevere in the habit of reading religious truth in the book of nature. There are "sermons in stones," in water-wheels, in noble actions, in wars, in shipwrecks. Pictures are in sermons, and sermons in pictures.

A minister must know something of everything, although he cannot know everything of anything. If he know nothing except theology, he does not know theology.

If a man be a mere thinker, there is danger of his being a bald preacher; if he be a mere reader, there is danger of his becoming desultory in the pulpit. He must think in order to read well, and read in order to think well.

The true orator lets the idea come out; the declaimer tries to say something smart or sublime. The subject impressing the soul exalts it, as the atmosphere pressing on the mercury raises it in the barometer. * * * Let a preacher keep himself under the power of his subject, and his phrases, if we may borrow a simile, will fall over that subject as drapery over a statue, and will adapt themselves to its distinctive outlines as the drapery rises and falls with the protuberances and depressions of the body which it clothes.

An honest preacher has reason to feel confidence, even though he lapse into literary errors which mortify him. Sometimes he receives a new impetus from the mistake which he has made, and he is stimulated to put forth a degree of energy unusual with him. Sometimes his error is not detected by a single one of his auditors, and all his chagrin is gratuitous. Still more frequently, perhaps, a mistake which mortifies him, is thought by his hearers to be an excellence. When Prof. Trietram Burgess was making a speech in our National Congress, he directed his eagle eye and pointed his forefinger toward his opponent on the floor, and in this threatening attitude made a lengthened, truly emphatic pause. "That pause was terrible," said a fellow-representative to Mr. Burgess afterward. "To no one so terrible as to me," responded the orator, "for I could not think of anything to say."—Prof. Parks.

GEORGE MULLER'S LAST REPORT.

Mr. George Muller, of the Ashly Down Orphan House, Bristol, England, has just made another annual report. He acknowledges the kindness of Christian friends who have many times written to him, fearing that on account of the war, or for other causes, he might be in want. To such he replied: "We want nothing." He adds: "Faith is above circumstances. No war, no fire, no water, no mercantile panic, no loss of friends, no death can touch it. It goes on its own steady course. It triumphs over all difficulties. It works most easily in the greatest difficulties."

Not only has the institution lacked nothing, but every part of the work has been considerably enlarged during the past year; and since the beginning (March 5, 1834) Mr. Muller has received more than five hundred thousand pounds "as the result of prayer and faith." He was therefore without anxiety, though "the current expenses of the institution have amounted during the past year to nearly thirty-nine thousand pounds, and though we have the prospect that during the year upon which we have entered the expenses will be greater still." Just what has been accomplished by this great expenditure is thus set forth:

"Twenty-three thousand children, or grown-up persons, have been taught in the various schools, entirely supported by the funds of the institution, besides the tens of thousands who have been benefited in the schools, which were assisted by its funds; more than sixty-four thousand Bibles, eighty-five thousand Testaments, and one hundred thousand smaller portions of the Holy Scriptures in various languages have been circulated since the formation of the institution; and thirty-nine millions of tracts and books, likewise in several different languages, have been circulated. There have been, likewise, from the earliest days of this institution, missionaries assisted by its funds, and of late years more than one hundred and fifty in number. On this subject alone above one hundred and four thousand pounds have been expended from the beginning. Also three thousand five hundred and seventy-five orphans have been under our care, and five large houses, at the expense of one hundred and fifty thousand pounds, have been erected and fitted up for the accommodation of two thousand and fifty orphans. As to the spiritual results, I will here say nothing; indeed eternity alone can unfold them; yet, even so far as God has been pleased to allow us to see already the results of our service, we have reaped most abundantly, and do so more and more with every year, while going on with the work."

CHOOSE YOUR TEACHERS.

There is not one superintendent in fifty who rigidly scrutinizes the teachers who have the guidance of his classes. With the majority, a teacher for every class seems to fill every need. No inquiry is made as to what is taught. To a far greater extent than most persons imagine, grossly false doctrine is disseminated in our Sabbath schools, and the blame, primarily, lies upon the superintendent of the school. Manifestly, it is a loose way of doing business to receive with open arms every person who offers himself or herself as a teacher. In secular education parents are far from placing their children under the guidance of unindorsed teachers. In business men question as to knowledge and experience before making choice of foremen or bookkeepers. An engineer undergoes a searching examination before he is given control of an engine.

It is enough to make an earnest Christian's heart ache to see a whole class sitting idly before a teacher, who, after five minutes, is completely emptied, and for the life of him does not know what to do with himself or his class. They never prepare a lesson. They cannot tell how to go about it. Their teacher is dumb as to these things. Or perhaps a gay, dressy, dancing, theater-going young lady enters the Sunday school, and, for the sake of novelty, and to kill time, wishes to be enrolled as a teacher. The superintendent has two or three classes which have been without teachers for several weeks. He is delighted to see Miss —— interesting herself in the Sunday school, and very gladly establishes her over a class. Suppose the lesson is on "Self-denial." Can she, whose feet are only motionful in the delirious dance, whose hands are used for careful adornment of her body for the world's gay life—can she reach down and bring up from her own heart the rich jewels of experience, and warn those waiting, listening souls against self-indulgence? That lesson will be a hard and cruel one for the class. The good Lord have mercy upon them! Superintendents, for the love of the dear souls beneath your care, find out who it is that is going to handle the plastic clay.—Sunday School Times.

THREE EMINENT PHYSICIANS.—As the celebrated French physician, Deemouline, lay on his death-bed, he was visited and almost constantly surrounded by the most distinguished medical men of Paris, as well as other prominent citizens of the metropolis. Great were the lamentations of all at the loss about to be sustained by the profession, in the death of one they regarded as its brightest ornament. But Deemouline spoke cheerfully to his brother practitioners, assuring them that he left behind him three physicians much greater than himself. Each of the doctors, hoping that his own name would be called, inquired anxiously who was sufficiently illustrious to surpass the immortal Deemouline. With great distinctness the dying man answered: "Their names are Water, Exercise and Diet. Call in the services of the first freely, of the second regularly, and the third with moderation. Follow this advice, and you may well dispense with my aid. Living, I could do nothing without them; and dying, I shall not be missed, if you make friends of these, my faithful coadjutors."

THE Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs—heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ.—Paul.

THERE is no sweeter spirit than a yielding spirit, submitting to God, and saying: "Thy will be done."

DOLLINGER BURNING HIS SHIPS.

The great German professor, Dollinger, is making all retreat from the position he has taken against papal infallibility impossible. The Berlin correspondent of the London Times gives the following account of the lecture with which Dr. Dollinger has just concluded his historical Collegium at Munich University.

Altogether abandoning his former cautious standpoint, he aimed his last remarks not against the individual acts of the present Pope, but against the papacy as an institution. "The papacy," he freely asserted, "is based upon an audacious falsification of biblical history. A forgery in its very outset, it has during the long years of its existence exercised a pernicious influence upon Church and State alike." If this is the way he deals with the Pope, you can easily imagine how he lashes the Jesuits. "Their very breath," he exclaimed, "is more deadly than pestilence. To Germany especially they have proved a worse enemy than the Turks and the Hun.—They plunged this country into the 'Thirty Years' War,' which destroyed two-thirds of its inhabitants, and left it weak and divided against itself for a couple of centuries. They involved the Hapsburgs in the suicidal policy which could not but end in their exclusion from Germany. They cheated Spain of her world-wide dominion, sacrificed Poland, and so utterly degraded the Gallican Church that the political humiliation of France became a mere question of time." To these censures was added the certain conviction that, freeing themselves from Pope and Loyola, the German Catholics would some day join their Protestant compatriots, and establish an undivided national church, extending from the borders of Russia to the confines of France. It will be easily understood that these lectures of the venerable professor have created a sensation.

One of the difficulties with which Old Catholicism has hitherto had to cope was the reserve attitude of its originator. As long as Dollinger only stood up against the latest commands of the Pope, he alienated the friends of religious reform as much by his extreme moderation as he attracted them by the energy with which he exposed what he regarded as error. But now that he has taken up such a decided attitude and thrown the Pope overboard, one of the most palpable obstacles that stood in the way of Old Catholicism is removed, and a chance afforded of ulterior progress. To derive as much advantage as possible from this fortunate turn, the Old Catholic congregations will hold another Congress in the summer, which may be expected to use very different language about the Holy See from what we heard at Munich last year. This time the Congress will probably assemble at Cologne.—New York Observer.

PIANO-POUNDING.—Oliver Wendell Holmes has the following to say in reference to music:

I don't like your chopped music, any way. That woman—she had more sense in her little finger than forty medical societies—Florence Nightingale—says that the music you pour out is good for sick folks, and the music you pound out isn't. Not that exactly, but something like it. I have been to hear some music pounding. It was a young woman with as many white muslin flounces round her as the planet Saturn has rings, that did it. She gave the music stool a twirl or two, and fluffed down on it like a whirl of soapsuds in a hand basin. Then she pushed off her curls as if she was going to fight for the champion's belt. Then she worked her wrists and her hands, to limber 'em, I suppose, and spread out her fingers until they looked as though they would pretty much cover the keyboard, from the growing end to the little squeaky one. Then those two hands of hers made a jump at the keys as if they were a couple of tigers coming down on a flock of white and black sheep, and the piano gave a great howl as if its tail had been trod on. Dead stop—so still that you could hear your hair growing. Then another jump, and another howl, as if the piano had two tails and you had trod on both of 'em at once, and then a grand clatter and scramble and string of jumps up and down, back and forward, one hand over the other, like a stampede of rats and mice more than like anything I call music. I like to hear a woman sing, and I like to hear a fiddle sing, but these noises they hammer out of their wood and ivory anvils—don't talk to me. I know the difference between a bullfrog and a woodthrush.

THE examination of druggists and their clerks, in New York, recently, disclosed a very dangerous degree of ignorance on the part of both employers and employed.

INCREDIBLE as it may seem, many of the richest planters in Jamaica live on coffee-grounds.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE project for the union of the Free Church of England and the Countess of Huntingdon's connection has been pronounced impracticable by both bodies.

THE New York Methodist Conference has appropriated $130,000 for the erection of a hall of language in Syracuse. The edifice will be built of gray limestone, and will be completed within a year.

THE actual increase of the Presbyterian ministry in the United States for thirty years has been only about two per cent. a year, and for the last ten years only one and a half per cent. annually.

A SIGNIFICANT evidence of improvement in Paris is the announcement in Le Monde, a leading newspaper, that it will no longer employ printers on Sunday, and therefore cannot furnish papers on Monday.

MR. LOBB baptized his first convert in Ningpo about twenty-four years ago, and now the number of native Christians is not far from two thousand. The flourishing mission schools are looked upon with favor by the people.

THE brig Morning Star, now in the Pacific ocean, has returned to Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, from its first missionary trip among the islands and mission stations, proving itself admirably adapted for its work.

THE Congregational Church has one theological student to 985 communicants; the Protestant Episcopal Church one to 498; the Presbyterian (North and South) one to 1,014; and the Reformed (Dutch) one to 1,926.

THE American Board has appointed a commissioner to visit France, northern and western Austria, and Italy, and to report on the best points to establish missions in those countries, and upon the best methods of labor.

STEPHEN GIRARD has an imitator in the late Robert Barnes, of Evansville, Indiana, who left $500,000 to build and endow a college for the orphans of that State, enjoining that no minister or missionary of any sect whatsoever shall ever hold office in the institution, or even be allowed to visit the premises.

THERE are thirty-two places of Protestant worship in Paris, where services are held in the French language. Of these, thirteen are what are termed Reformed churches, or Calvinist; nine according to the Confession of Augsburg, or Lutheran; seven free churches; two Methodist, and one Baptist.

THE Pennsylvania Supreme Court has decided generally that whenever a church or religious society has been endowed in connection with, or subordination to, some ecclesiastical organization and form of church government, it can no more unite with some other organization, or become independent, than it can renounce its faith or doctrine and adopt others.

THERE is a new religious sect in England, the members of which call themselves the Peculiar People. The principal tenet of these eccentric persons is that they are the special object of the divine care; hence they disdain physic and surgery, and will not render any assistance to their children when they are suffering from illness or accident, in the full confidence that Deity will effect their cure.

THE streets of Smyrna were recently the scene of a terrible conflict between the Greeks and the Jews. The disturbance was immediately caused by the absurd rumor that the Jews had sacrificed an infant in one of their religious ceremonies. The real cause was probably the commercial rivalry which has long ruled between the two races. At last accounts the mob had been quelled, and troops had been sent to the city to preserve order.

AN EXAMINATION of the General Minutes for 1870 of the Methodist Episcopal Church shows that of the ministers who died in that year, the average age at which they joined Conference was twenty-seven years and three months; that the period of their connection with the Conference, or from their entrance on probation to death, was twenty-three years and three months; and that the average duration of their lives was fifty and a half years.

THE Pope has written a letter to Senor Zorilla setting forth the conditions on which the differences between Spain and the Holy See may be adjusted. He says: "If Spain desires to be reconverted to the mother church, the principle of religious liberty must be modified. Tolerance of public worship the church will not object to; but the Catholic religion must be restored to its proper supremacy in the realm. The superintendence of schools must be remitted to the priesthood, and civil marriages and registry of births must be abolished."

FIRST ELECTED IRISH BISHOP.—The disestablishment of the Irish Episcopal Church makes its bishops elective. We find in the Tribune this report of the first election:

"The Rev. Maurice Day, who has been chosen by two-thirds of each order of clergy and laity among the synodsmen of the diocese of Cashel, and becomes, therefore, the new bishop—the first 'elected' in the Irish Church—was known for many years as the leading 'Evangelical' Episcopal divine in Dublin, where large numbers attended the parish church of St. Matthias, where he preached. He has no reputation for erudition, but has been an active and useful parish clergyman, and the "anti-Ritualist" party are delighted at the choice made, as strengthening among the bishops the section in favor of prayer-book revision. Dr. Day, however, is a man of good temper, moderation and impartiality."

THERE are said to be not less than sixty Protestant churches in the Republic of Mexico, the members varying from ten to five hundred. In December last the Lord's Supper was administered to four hundred communicants in an ex-papal church, four of the administrators being ex-Roman priests. Some of the people could not restrain their tears of joy, but sobbed aloud. In Guadaloupe, the center and headquarters of Mexican idolatry, a church had just been organized. The images in one of the papal churches have been nearly all removed, and the archbishop reads publicly in the cathedral portions of the Scriptures in the language of the people. Many families are vacillating in regard to their ancient faith, old doctrines and usages are discarded, and the people are often found indulging in discussions on religion. A majority of the educated men never go to the confessional, and while some fall down into infidelity, numbers are brought to know the truth as it is in Jesus.

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS, (ORTHODOX.)—We gather from the Friends' Review the following statistical summary of the condition of the Orthodox Quakers: "The total present membership of the Orthodox Meetings is 57,405, being a gain of 755 in twenty years. During these years the membership of the meetings east of the Alleghanies has decreased 7,722, while those meetings at the West have increased 8,477, so that actually there has been no general increase worth considering. The New England Yearly Meeting has, after an existence of over two hundred years, only 4,403 members; the New York, established in 1695, has 2,858; the Philadelphia, established in 1681, has 5,500; the Baltimore, 600; the North Carolina, 4,000. The Western Meetings are much larger. Ohio Meeting was only established in 1812, and has a membership of 2,855; Indiana (1821) has 17,200; the Western (1857) has 9,740; Iowa (1863) has 8,599. The increase at the West must be attributed mainly, we suppose, to emigration, as the eastern loss and western accessions just about balance each other. We do not know upon what data these statistics have been arranged. A good many people, with no particular love of Quaker peculiarities, remain in the "meeting" because they were born in it, and they do not feel sufficient interest in religious differences to abandon their old associations. At the same time they are pretty sure of not being 'disowned.' The general discipline has been greatly relaxed, especially as regards costume, language and education."

THE deputation of the Evangelical Alliance to Russia, in behalf of religious liberty, is bearing good fruit. A member of the deputation, Colonel Von Wurstemberger, in Switzerland, who is now traveling in the Baltic Provinces of Russia, reports that "thousands of former forced converts to the Greek Church have now publicly returned to the Protestant Church," to which they originally belonged, and which they never really renounced. "A high Russian official, himself a member of the Greek Orthodox Church, told me that he estimated their number in Livonia at about thirty thousand persons. There are large parishes from which the former members of the Greek Church have entirely disappeared, and several pastors have already publicly confirmed so-called Greek converts, and admitted them to the communion. It is a fact that our hopes with regard to the Baltic Provinces have so far been realized; but the law still exists and is rigorously carried out in the neighboring provinces, where, at the present hour, several persons are still suffering imprisonment, or are being prosecuted on account of their religious convictions. In order to effect the liberation of these poor people, I now proceed to St. Petersburg. In the meantime the number is rapidly increasing of Russians who publicly demand the repeal of the laws which dishonor their church. The question of religious liberty, which hitherto was enveloped in a haze of political considerations, is from day to day better understood; and the efforts of the Evangelical Alliance, now seen in their true character, are much appreciated by enlightened Russians."

THE SPIRITUAL FACE.

The light in the soul transfigures the countenance. "A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine." In a literal as well as in a figurative sense David says: "Who is the health of my countenance." The inward change was manifest in the outward expression. The Savior's countenance was ordinarily luminous, we may suppose; but the glory was obscured, except in the solitary instance on the mount, when its complete effulgence was displayed to the wondering three. Moses exhibited the effects of near communion with God when he came down into the encampment with the divine beams playing upon his brow. It was the fullness of the Holy Ghost in Stephen that gave to him that heavenly light which arrested the attention of his malignant judges, when they "saw his face as it had been the face of an angel." Phenomena akin to these are seen in ordinary conversions. The face before and after conversion exhibits marked contrasts. The moral change is written upon the visible features. The transition from darkness to light is seen in the outward expression. Peace and joy flood and irradiate the countenance which but lately was darkened and cast down by guilt and despair. In a revival meeting it is not difficult to pick out those who are still seeking, from those who have found, the pearl of great price. Ordinarily the face tells the story where there are no audible expressions of contrition or of rapture.

The countenance of the mature Christian bears in its lineaments the spirituality which reigns in the heart. There is a light and sweetness in such a face which distinguishes it from those who have never experienced the renewing of the Holy Spirit. In a mixed assembly, or in the throngs on the street, we imagine that we discern the mark which God has set upon his children. As in the prophet's vision, the man with a writer's inkhorn set a mark upon the foreheads of the faithful; and as in the apocalyptic scene, an angel ascending from the East "sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads," so it is now. Spiritual people have the seal in their foreheads. There is something in the face which answers to the purity and love glowing within. The power of grace to transform the face is something wonderful as seen in the conversion of adults. The marks of grossness and lust, the sharp, cold lines of covetousness, the ardent but unsatisfied desire of pleasure, the almost diabolical touches of selfishness and malignancy, the clouded and burning traces of fierce passions and unholy tempers are swept away, and give place to a benevolent and sunny composure. It is the difference between the mountain rocked by volcanic throes, scorched by tides of burning lava, and covered with ashes and scoria, and the mountain whose base and sides are clothed with harvests, orchards and gardens, and whose top towers in restful sublimity above the clouds. The beauty of childhood is greatly owing to the spirituality that is in it. Vice and ungoverned passion have not yet carved their ugly lines upon the face, nor stamped it with the dark and repulsive hues of conscious guilt. A congregation of children impresses us with the innocence and spirituality which speak in their happy looks. Such a scene of upturned faces is like a lake of rippling wavelets, responding in manifold forms of beauty to the breeze and sunshine which play upon them.

The countenance indicates the various types and degrees of piety. The expression is often variable as the inward condition changes—it is often mixed in the conflicts, the depressions and the triumphs of faith. The stern and ascetic, the deeply emotional, the cheerful and sympathetic, the peaceful and loving, like so many styles of art, put their several characteristics upon the canvas. "The Last Supper" is an endeavor to exhibit these types as they surround the great original and perfection of holiness. What the painter attempted with his pencil is in fact being done upon Christian faces. We have thought that denominational types are more or less revealed in the countenance. In a union prayer meeting the faces, not less than the utterances, are tinged with the peculiar theologies. The staunch advocate of predestination, the conscientious stickler for immersion, the emotional Arminian, the lover of prelacy and liturgies, have their several creeds graven upon their faces, while the sheen of a common Savior's love softens and subdues the rugged features of sectarian conviction. The Methodist, the Presbyterian, the Baptist, the Episcopalian, with good and wholesome faces all, have each their distinctive physiognomy. A Lavater or a Spurzheim might have seen this had their studies taken this direction.

The spiritual face is perhaps most marked in women. Naturally more beautiful and spiritual than men, they rightfully claim a nearer kinship to the angels. The higher and finer organization, with its deeper and truer intuitions, and with its more delicate and refined sensibilities, gives to womanhood this spiritual pre-eminence. The work of the Holy Spirit in woman is most perfectly reflected in her face. Her features are singularly plastic and mobile, and yield readily to the transforming power within. Her face to her spiritually is as the photosphere to the sun. Under the influence of religion it is not merely a beauty, but a glory. We do not hesitate to give Christian women the pre-eminence in all the attributes of real beauty, nor is there any doubt that this pre-eminence is due to their spirituality.

The spiritual face alone improves with age. The work is nearer completion as time advances; and the silvered head and the wrinkled brow have the gentleness and mellowness of the tranquil and golden autumn. We remember our sainted fathers and mothers as being lovely to the last. It was the spiritual in them shining more and more to the perfect day. Their decrepitude and decay were transfigured by the glory which, in angel forms, was about to be set free forever.

THE twenty-sixth anniversary of the New Orleans Sunday School Union of our church was celebrated at the Carondelet Street church on Sunday, the nineteenth, at four o'clock P. M. The exercises were generally well conducted, and the singing particularly good. The opening address by Harry Boullemet, and the closing one by Caswell Ellis, were as nearly perfect in matter and manner as such efforts ever need be. Mr. A. B. Chase conducted the singing with skill. That veteran Sunday school embodiment, W. H. Foster, Esq., had charge of the whole.

We regret that no report was furnished and read, on the occasion, of the numbers and state of our Sunday school work in the city. The large church was filled with the children and grown people, and everybody went away pleased. Our Sunday school work, however, calls for extension, and there is a loud call for earnest and self-denying effort on the part of our people. The schools of smaller churches especially need strengthening by additional teachers from the larger and more central congregations. There is also a demand for the organization of at least two mission schools in portions of the city not as yet occupied. With many reasons for encouragement, we have also occasion to bestir ourselves, and to devise and execute greater things. We are by no means keeping pace with the growth and spread of the population. We must not forget to mention that our German schools were well represented at the anniversary, under the leadership of J. H. Keller, Esq., of the Dryades Street church, and that their singing was most delightful.

CONTRIBUTORS.

We are thankful to our friends for their articles, and hope they will continue to write. But we would again advise brevity. Three or four pages of ordinary letter or foolscap is long enough ordinarily. We cannot supply the needed variety in our limited space if the articles are long. We have a number of excellent articles on hand, but their length precludes their appearance for the present, and may exclude them altogether. Do not try to exhaust a subject, but begin in medias res; touch it here and there, and drop it. Then, again, controversial articles are not generally desirable. They are sometimes necessary, but we do not prefer them. There is a way of responding without animadversion. Give your views of a subject and the reasons for them, without any special reference to others. We like to present all the aspects of a question, but not in the form or spirit of controversy. Once more, as the preachers say, send name and address with every communication. Neither need appear if the writer wishes them withheld from the public, but we can pay no attention to an article unless the name of the writer comes with it. And lastly, write—write briefly, carefully. Let your best thoughts distill, drop by drop, from your pen. And finally, there are many gifted and cultivated ladies among our readers. We invite them especially to contribute to our columns. We want their presence in the ADVOCATE as much as it is needed in the house of worship or in the social circle.

LETTER FROM BISHOP KEENER.

PARIS, TENN., May 13, 1872.

MR. EDITOR: The Bishops were all present at their annual meeting excepting Bishop Early. We had the pleasure of a letter from the dear old man, who still breathes prayer and love for the cause of the Master. He is confined to the house, and for the most part to the bed, awaiting the summons of the Lord to enter into his joy.

The debris of the Publishing House was being cleared away, and things hammering up for the laying of the new corner-stone occasion. A board camp-meeting pulpit for the Bishops, right by the corner which overlooks the valley of Jehoshaphat, or some such gorge which on one side bounds the site of our Book House, and another for the choir and organ, with seats for the audience, constituted the visible preparation. The day came, and with it a fine gathering of people. The whole area and even the neighboring windows were filled with spectators or hearers. Bishop Pierce gave us an appropriate and stirring address, beginning with: "The heavens of this beautiful day are not brighter than are the prospects of the Southern Methodist Publishing House at this hour." His venerable father sat within supporting distance, just behind the Bishop, and enjoyed full as much as any of us the mellow thoughts of the speaker. He complimented those who had guided the publishing interests of our church in its early days, and who followed up the enterprise of that great Englishman, John Wesley, in first giving to the people a pure and a cheap literature; noticing that some of the wisest and best men of the church had labored in this field, and concluding with a deserved mention of the name of Carlton, at New York, and a deserved compliment to the indomitable skill and wonderful success of our own agent, Dr. Redford, at Nashville. The building is to be white stone, of modern style, ample breadth and height, and with such conveniences for printing, binding, presses, engines, with packing and sales rooms, and elevator, as can be found in the best publishing houses of the North. To secure this Dr. Redford took the architect with him, as I understand, to Cincinnati and elsewhere, and took accurate drawings of all the latest improvements in the great art of printing and getting out books.

In going down into the bowels of the old establishment, I was glad to find the presses all there and in good condition, steadily digesting those difficult masses of material which the editors pour hourly into them. The fire is now thought to have been of no permanent disadvantage—that is, if our people will come up to the help of the enterprising agent. To secure this aid the Bishops unite in an address, calling upon all our preachers to make collections and forward them promptly in aid of the new building.

The principal item before the Bishops' meeting, outside of their regular business, was a communication from the "Central University" curators. After much thought and prayer a result was attained which received the vote of every one of the Bishops. The substance of this action was: 1. A conscut to locate the University so soon as $500,000 were subscribed to it. 2. To take only such oversight as is given to our other colleges. 3. The University to be for the West—that is, the several Conferences of Tennessee, Kentucky, Arkansas, North Mississippi and North Alabama as lie about Memphis. 4. The theological department to be made conformable to the action of the last General Conference, in the minority report on education, which was adopted. I write from memory, not having the paper before me. It was the result of much earnest deliberation, and a determination to be wise in maintaining that harmony and unity of sentiment and of policy which heretofore have been the glory and beauty both of our Episcopal College and of our whole church. Let all our preachers and our people imitate the example thus set them, and mentally assent to views which represent the united wisdom both of the best policy on education and that next to the best.

The Missionary Board took several steps in advance. A mission in Mexico was not only projected, but fully set on foot. Money was appropriated for an additional missionary in China, and additional schools there. The support to the Pacific work was decided, and placed at the order of the Bishop who takes that district. The Indian missions were amply sustained, and so also were the great fields of the West—Arizona, Montana, Nebraska, etc. Money was appropriated for publishing a German Sunday school paper. The collections in some of the older Conferences are sadly behind; and, strange to say, those regions of our church which suffered least, and are now well recovered from the general upheaval of 1860–64, are yielding less support to this glorious impulse of the "spirit of Jesus" than are the most oppressed parts of the South. There are four Conferences up here, close together, whose membership do not give annually the value of a saucer of strawberries per member for the outer extension of the gospel of Christ. This is an alarming condition of affairs, and must at the judgment startle those who will not listen to the missionary call of the Spirit this side of the last trump. We had no anniversary meeting. Such public demonstrations are a starting-point for the next year, and their moral force should not be lightly estimated.

On yesterday I dedicated a beautiful brick church, Gothic style, in this place—just finished, and under the pastorship of Rev. S. B. Suratt. The day was fine, the audience large, and the collection all that was asked for—some $400. The old friends of Bro. Suratt would have greatly enjoyed the occasion, to which he largely contributed by collecting the several thousand dollars which at the commencement of the Conference year were still due on the building.

MISSIONARY REPORT.

MR. EDITOR: The annual report of the Board of Missions is now passing through the hands of the printers, and will soon be ready for distribution. The financial department will be read and studied by those who are interested in the spread of the gospel. The measure of the zeal of the church is found in the means afforded in sending the tidings of salvation to lost sinners. Not that persons poor and unable to give have no love for souls and no prayers for the coming kingdom of Christ; but the interest of the church in the aggregate of its members may be determined, to a degree of certainty, by its contributions to the cause of Christ. It will be a curious study to compare the liberality of different sections of the country. The table below will furnish a key to each Conference, and may perhaps lead to the investigation of the causes of a large liberality in some places, and meager contributions in other portions of the church.

The items below are taken from the Minutes that are now going through the press, and from the treasurer's book. The date to which these receipts extend may be put at the time of the holding the respective Conferences at their last sessions. In some instances, as in the case of North and South Georgia, Virginia, North Carolina, and a few others, remittances have been made in payment of the old debt since their Conferences adjourned. This, however, will only make a slight difference in the figures.

SUMMARY.
Old debt	$9,952 81
Collection	77,323 79
Miscellaneous	7,961 65
Grand total	$95,238 28

The above table shows that the largest sum was collected in the North Georgia Conference, being $7,199, and the smallest in the Western, $236.95. It is proper to say, however, that the Western Conference, which is really missionary, numbered last year 1,744, while the North Georgia Conference numbered 43,597. Will the reader see how much the North Georgia Conference gave per member, and how much the Western Conference gave?

South Georgia is the second highest in contributions, having given $6,459.15. While South Georgia, therefore, pushes North Georgia hard, it is proper to say that the membership of South Georgia was 24,143, while North Georgia, as above stated, was 43,517.*

* It will be remembered that these statistics refer to the Conference held in the autumn of 1870.

The Tennessee Conference, with a membership of 34,426, contributed $3,759.85, while Louisiana, with 11,555 members, gave $3,964.99. Will the preachers of the Tennessee Conference solve the problem why they have fallen so far behind their brethren of Louisiana? The Louisville Conference, with a membership of 25,957, gave $1,332, while Little Rock, with a membership of 13,287, gave $2,087.

How can this be explained? Holston, with 30,089 members, contributed $1,813.02, while South Carolina, with 34,040, contributed $4,548.64. Who will say that, in her distress, South Carolina has not done nobly? And will Holston explain how that, with her fertile valleys, she is so far in arrears of the Old South State? But I will not pursue this comparison farther. The whole church, with a membership in 1870 of 586,418, gave, exclusive of bequests, and receipts from other sources, say, in round numbers, $90,000. This, without being very exact, is only a little over fifteen cents per member.

Now, I submit it to the reader, is this enough? Cannot more be done? Some churches are poor, to be sure, but there are many charges where the members are able and willing to give ten times that amount, and they will contribute if they are properly enlightened as to their duty and the demands of the cause. Let each address himself to the work. Brethren, our contributions must go above those of the past year, or our cause will suffer, and the board will again be in debt. Our numbers have largely increased since 1870—let our liberality increase in proportion, and God will be honored, and souls for whom Jesus died will be saved.

Fifty cents per member would give us over three hundred thousand dollars. This can be easily obtained. Will every man do his duty? Some can give $100, others $50, $20, $10 or $5. Let every one give as God has prospered; but do not reject the widow's mite.

J. B. MCFERRIN, Sec'y.

ACCORDING to the dispatches the General Conference at Brooklyn elected the following Bishops on Tuesday, the twenty-first: W. A. Harris, Central Ohio; R. S. Foster, Thomas Bowman, Stephen M. Merrill and Isaac W. Wiley. Three more were to have been elected on Wednesday, the twenty-second, but the result had not reached us before going to press.

AN ENTERTAINMENT for the benefit of the church corner of Louisiana avenue and Magazine street will be given on Thursday and Friday, May 30 and 31, at half-past seven P. M. We earnestly commend this enterprise to the generosity and benevolence of our people. Go and help this weak and struggling church.

IT IS ANNOUNCED in the Episcopal Methodist that Dr. Wadsworth, of the Alabama Conference, has been appointed to the Trinity church of Baltimore. Sorry for Alabama—we congratulate Baltimore.

THE REV. DR. EBNERT, of the North Mississippi Conference, died at Paducah, Kentucky, on the first of May.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

GOD-MAN. By L. T. Townsend, D. D. Boston: Lee & Shepard, publishers. New York: Lee, Shepard & Dilliugham, 1872.

Dr. Townsend is professor in the school of theology, Boston University, and the author of "Credo." Our necessarily imperfect examination of the book leads to the conclusion that it is a profound and luminous statement of the doctrine of our Savior's divine nature, and a most exhaustive vindication of its truth. It is a work of much thought and learning, and is written in a scholarly style, and in a spirit of earnest devotion to him whose character the author seeks to portray. We do not indorse all the views and conclusions of the writer, but the book is a most instructive and valuable contribution to religious literature. For sale by R. J. Harp, Depository, New Orleans.

LE BON TON for June, and DIE MODENWELT for May, are both filled with beautiful plates, patterns and valuable information, specially useful and attractive to the ladies. Both of these periodicals are published by S. T. Taylor, New York.

MAY PERIODICALS received: Old and New, Little Corporal, Lippincott's Magazine, American Agriculturist, the American Educational Monthly, the Southern Magazine, Morton's Monthly Home and School Journal.

THE April number of Good Words contains an unusual amount of choice original matter, and is handsomely illustrated.

THE CAMP MEETING.

History locates the first camp meeting held in the United States on the banks of Red river, in Kentucky, in 1799. Like Methodism, the camp meeting had a providential origin. Two brothers, by the name of McGee, preachers, one a Presbyterian and one a Methodist, preached at a settlement where they had stopped on their journey together. Interest was awakened, and they preached on. People began to seek the Lord with "strong crying and tears." The country roundabout heard of the excitement, and came flocking to see the strange things that had come to pass. The meeting-house was overflowed. The people took to the woods, erected an altar there unto the Lord, and remained, dwelling in tents for several days. The camp meeting thence became an institution. The attendance at camp meetings since has been numbered by thousands, in perhaps every State of the Union. Conversions at these meetings have been in number out of all proportion, as a general thing, to results of the same length of time and equal labor under other circumstances. When the camp meeting is properly conducted, the church assembled never fails to be abundantly revived in far more than ample compensation for all the sacrifice and effort to attend. More than this, sons and daughters, wives and husbands, friends and neighbors, have been happily converted, whom the ordinary means of grace, though swathed with prayer, had failed to reach. There is no question of the expediency and utility of camp meetings when they are animated by the spirit of true devotion.

Another thing: health of body is seldom unfavorably affected by the tent-life of camp meeting, but more frequently improved. The manner of living is a recreation and a benefit. It will bear comparison in this respect with the advantages which people seek at watering places, and similar resorts from the familiar and weary surroundings of home. There are no medicinal springs, but there is pleasure and profit for those who have other ideas than of the fashion and vanity which are the main pursuit of many, who regularly frequent the popular watering places.

We hope to see the country people coming in crowds to abide on the camp ground. It will do you good, friends, in more senses than one. And what a delightful retreat it is from the heat and dust of the city! The city people can come, if they only think so, and they will be glad if they do. By later action than last week, the trustees will erect tents for rent at a small sum, and the large boarding tent, which will also be provided, will furnish board, if desired, to families renting the small tents, as also lodging and board for as many as it can accommodate. Persons contemplating the possibility of renting had better communicate at the earliest with the trustees, through their secretary, R. M. Walmsley, New Orleans. The camp ground is situated two miles west of Biloxi, on the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas railroad, and the meeting will begin on June 21.

SPEAK KINDLY in the morning; it lightens the cares of the day, and makes household and all other affairs move along more smoothly. Speak kindly at night, for it may be that before the dawn some loved one may finish his or her span of life for this world, and it will be too late to ask forgiveness.

Obituaries.

MRS. JENNIE SPEED, wife of James F. Speed, departed this life, in the thirtieth year of her age, at the residence of her father, near St. Stephen's, Washington county, Alabama, on the morning of the fifteenth of October, 1871. She attached herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church when about seventeen years of age. Possessed of a strong, abiding faith in God, and constant unity in the performance of Christian duty, which was taught her by her devoted father, who is now on the brink of eternity, and her saluted mother, who will soon join her in the hallelujahs of high heaven, convince us of the fact that she is now at the feet of Jesus, united with the sanctified hosts in perpetual thanksgiving. Mrs. Speed was a daughter of Thomas J. and Mary A. E. Elliott; was happily married to her now bereaved husband in December, 1868, and lived a devoted wife and affectionate mother until the day of her death, when she expressed her willingness to yield to the will of God, by saying: "I am not afraid to die." While we deplore her untimely death, we can but submit to the will of Him whose fervent declaration is to do justice to all. From some unknown cause our gracious Savior has suffered the departure of our dear sister, who is now sleeping in the silent tomb. May those dear relations left behind be more faithful in the performance of their duties toward God, that they may one day reunite with the departed in the land of bliss. G. S. E.

DIED, of pneumonia, near Morton, Mississippi, on the second instant, Mrs. ELIZA C. MCDONALD, wife of Rev. C. McDonald, of the Mississippi Conference. Sister McDonald had been a consistent member of the Methodist Church for about five years, "adorning the profession which she made by a godly walk and conversation." She was a meek and quiet spirit, gentle and kind, and those who knew her best loved her most. Her death corresponded to her life. She said but little, but enough to give evidence undoubted of her peace with God. I preached her funeral sermon to a large and serious country audience, from "Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace." We have good reason to believe she now rests in the home of the blessed.

"No chilling winds nor poisonous breath
Can reach that healthful shore;
Sickness and sorrow, pain and death,
Are felt and feared no more."

She leaves a husband and two small children to mourn her loss.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The Quarterly Conference of Shelly Island, March 24, 1872, passed the following preamble and resolutions:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God, in his wisdom, to remove from our midst our worthy brother, Rev. THOMAS GREEN, by death, February 4, 1872—while we bow with humble submission to his holy will, yet we deeply deplore his death.

Resolved, That by the death of Bro. Green this church and Quarterly Conference has sustained an irreparable loss. As a minister he was ever faithful in the discharge of duty, and deeply spiritual in all his labors; he was gentle, courteous, polite, gaining the esteem and affection of all. Although his stay among us was protracted, he being a member of this church and Quarterly Conference about twenty-eight years, and dying in the seventy-eighth year of his age, yet are our hearts smitten, and we mourn our loss.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with his friends in their loss, and especially with his aged widow in her loneliness and deep affliction.

Resolved, That a copy of the preamble and resolutions be furnished Sister Green, and a copy also sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

JOEL T. DAVES, P. E.
J. H. STONE, Secretary.

DEPARTED this life, near Douglas, Louisiana, April 24, 1872, Mrs. SELINA DAVIS, daughter of James Watson and Letitia Goodglon, and wife of Z. B. Davis, aged forty-five years, two months and twenty-eight days.

Mrs. Davis had been an invalid for more than three years, at times suffering most intensely from the insidious throes of consumption. She had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for years, and a few days before the last "hard hour" came she said to a friend: "I am going home as fast as I can go." She is sleeping; but what has she lost? Ah! ye white-robed, ye alone can note the insignificance of terrestrial imperfection, compared with the glory of the King of Mercy and the Prince of Peace. Her long illness, so full of death's intensity, was, no doubt, as the "fire-of-furnace heat," consuming all the dross and separating the pure gold, burning the tares and preserving the wheat, eating away the chrysalis robe, and perfecting the winged spirit of immortality. Truly, we believe she has gone home—

Home to "lay her burden down,"
Home to wear the golden crown.

A darling daughter, who had just attained the bloom and dignity of young womanhood, left her heart's treasures on earth for the shining "city of refuge" a little more than six years past; and who may tell the rapture of the redeemed when they clasp hands on the other shore!

The husband of her youth, five sons and a dear daughter, with her good and venerable mother and sisters, besides many friends and other relatives, remain to cherish sweet thoughts of their loved one, and watch over the little mound of earth and ashes from which no throbbing pulse returns. L. A. C.

SISTER ELIZABETH LACKEY was born in Georgia in 1800; removed to Claiborne county, Mississippi, when only six years old; became a member of the Methodist Church in early life, and was a truly consistent, zealous member for about fifty years; and died, in the triumphs of Christian faith, February 11, 1872, aged seventy years.

Sister Lackey was the widow of William R. Lackey, a prominent Mason and Methodist. She was a truly pious, consistent Christian, of the old school, who did not think it sinful to shout the praises of her Savior when warmed up by some pathetic appeal of the preacher. It could truly be said of her that she visited the fatherless and the widow in their affliction, and kept herself unspotted from the world.

Sister Lackey, at the time of her death, was the oldest living member of Cayuga church, and had lived to see all its vicissitudes of adversity and prosperity, and through all its changes was the same devoted Christian. She esteemed it not only a duty but a gracious privilege to contribute to the support of the ministry. She was a regular attendant at the house of God, and by her consistent life, and steady, uniformity, showed to the world that there was a blessed reality in the religion she professed, and in her triumphant death gave assurance to her relatives and friends that she was ready and willing to exchange this world for the blessed realities of another.

Sister Lackey had been in declining health for some time, but the immediate cause of her death was from her endeavoring to keep a little girl, who had spilled coal oil on the hearth, from taking fire. In this attempt her own clothes caught fire, and she was so badly burned that it caused her death, this is the last act of her life showing that the welfare of others was the predominant trait of her character. A FRIEND.

CAYUGA, MISS., April 10, 1872.

DIED, in Franklin county, Mississippi, on the fifteenth day of March, A. D. 1872, Mrs. JANE HALL, in the triumphs of faith. Sister Hall was born near Clinton, Louisiana, on the tenth of August, 1805. She professed religion early in life. Although sorrows, afflictions and temptations came oft upon her, she never "gave up her shield," but continued "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the works of the Lord, forasmuch as she knew that her labor was not in vain in the Lord." After more than forty years of trials and conflicts the Lord "wiped away his servant's tears and took his exile home." For months before her death she seemed to take pleasure only in religious converse. She became helpless and confined to her bed three months before her death, during which time she frequently expressed herself as not only being prepared, but anxious to "depart and be with the Lord." While she continued here she had the undivided attention of her son and his wife, and other relatives and friends, who ministered to her wants, and beheld her as she calmly passed away in peace and triumph. We trust that they in their lives may "follow her as she followed Christ."

"Yes, the Christian course is run,
Ended is the glorious strife,
Fought the fight, the work is done;
Death is swallowed up of life.

"Lo! the pain of life is past,
All her warfare now is o'er;
Death and hell behind are cast,
Grief and suffering are no more.

"Borne by angels on their wings,
Far from earth the spirit flies;
Finds her God, and sits and sings,
Triumphing in paradise."

The funeral of Sister Hall will be preached at Beech Grove church, in Franklin county, on the fifth Sabbath in June next, being the thirtieth day. C. W. C.

THE SCHILLINGER PAVEMENT.—We call attention to the advertisement of Mr. George M. Brott, general agent for the Schillinger pavement. His office is at No. 27 Carondelet street.

PAINTS, OILS AND ARTISTS' MATERIALS. Messrs. Samuel M. Todd & Co., No. 76 Magazine street, advertise elsewhere paints, oils, varnishes, glass, and artists' materials. We do not hesitate to say that there is no better house in their line of business than that of Samuel M. Todd & Co.

THE ANCHOR LINE of trans-Atlantic steamships has reduced the twelve months' excursion tickets to $220 in currency from New Orleans to England, Ireland and Scotland, and back to New Orleans. This is for first cabin, and the ships of this fleet are said to be the finest and stroagest that cross the ocean. Persons who intend to travel should secure their staterooms at once by applying to the agent, Alexander Hay, 120 Peters street.

TIN-WORK AND MANUFACTURES.—Mr. George W. W. Goodwyn will attend to orders from accessible portions of the country, as well as the city, for work, such as roofing and other tin-work, in the construction of buildings where the services of practical tinners are required. He will also furnish tin or copper guttering, with hooks, etc., so constructed as to be easily adjusted by an ordinary mechanic. See his advertisement of stoves and tinware in another column.

SUPERCARBONATED MINERAL WATERS. Mr. R. L. Neill, 198 Gravier street, advertises in another column the celebrated supercarbonated mineral waters, lemonade, lime-juice sirup, ginger ale, etc., manufactured by Cantrell & Cochrane, of Belfast, Ireland. We are indebted to the politeness of Mr. Neill for a package, which we have sampled and found to be a very pleasant, cooling and, we think, entirely harmless beverage. For the medicinal virtues of these preparations we refer to the advertisement.

FURNITURE.—In another column will be found the advertisement of Messrs. Mitchell & Rammelsberg, whose large and splendid assortment of furniture may be found in the Moresque iron building, on the corner of Camp and Poydras streets, nearly opposite the ADVOCATE office. We take pleasure in recommending this clever and enterprising firm. Our own dealings with them have been entirely satisfactory. We have found their furniture fully equal to their recommendations, and have in all cases been pleased with our bargains.

CLEARANCE SALE OF DRY GOODS, PREPARATORY TO TAKING ANNUAL INVENTORY.—Braselman & Adams, corner of Magazine and St. Andrew streets, desiring to reduce the bulk of their stock as much as possible by the first of July, have reduced the prices of their goods so materially that the desired consummation must ensue. We are assured that persons wishing dry goods can now get them at less than the cost of importation, from an old and reliable house, whose reputation is too highly valued by them to sully it by making misrepresentations. Therefore, when it is said that Braselman & Adams have advertised a clearance sale, it can be relied on implicitly, and great bargains obtained at Nos. 586 and 588 Magazine street, corner of St. Andrew.

One sip of this will bathe the drooping spirit in delight beyond the bliss of dreams. Be wise, and taste.—Milton's Comus.

Verily do the words of the inspired poet gleam with the light of prophecy; for if there is anything that is swift to operate beneficially on the human system, impaired by physical ailments, it is Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Those whose lives "drag their slow length along," harassed by the petty but fretful annoyances of indigestion, dyspepsia, debility, febrile excitement, nervous irritability, exhaustion or the general suffering that results from hepatic causes, deserve the fate to which they are consigned, when, like the physician to whom the voice of sacred wisdom cried "heal thyself," they turn away from the means placed within their grasp. Price's Bitters will do the work; a vigorous stimulant, an agreeable elixir, a strengthening tonic, and a grateful adjuvant, the very universality of whose use is confirmative of their efficacy, they stand to-day stamped with the signet seal of medical approval, and radiant with the award of a high popular appreciation.

The Child's Corner.

THE GREAT TEACHER

I asked the little prairie Bird who taught him how to fly.
And sing such pretty songs as the bright blue morning sky.
And he told me it was God who had given to him the wing
And taught him how to build the nest, and taught him how to sing.

I asked the little lowly Flower who gave her perfume sweet.
And dressed her in her velvet coat so beautiful and neat.
And taught her how to breathe so sweet upon the evening air;
And she told me it was God who watched her with such care.

I asked the little twinkling Star who taught him how to shine.
And run with such a steady pace along his proper line:
And he told me it was God who made him shine so bright
And trim the little lamp I keep to shine me the whole night.

Since all things, then, look up to God—the Flower, the Bird, the Star,
And all obey His holy will, according to His word,
I too, although a child, will try my Creator to obey,
That I may learn to praise Him, too, and serve as well as they.

THE BRIDGE.

BY JEAN INGELOW.

There was once a beautiful city which stood upon the slope of a hill; it could be seen from a great distance, and the fame of it was such that many people came from far to admire it, as well as to talk with its inhabitants, who were said to be a very wise race of men, skillful in all the arts of life, and constantly making new and great inventions.

One evening, a long time ago, a stranger came to this city. He had traveled a long way, and seemed weary, but he had heard so much of the city and its wise inhabitants that he allowed himself little time for rest before he set out to inspect the streets, and admire the large squares with their long lines of overshadowing trees, the fountains springing up and tumbling into their deep marble basins, the tall, graceful spires, and the clear windows shadowed with sweeping curtains, and filled with flowering plants.

The more he saw the more he was delighted. The city was as beautiful as he had expected, and the people were wise and kind. Some of them were rich, and had houses like palaces; others were poor; but the rich were very good, and had built schools for their children, where they taught them the peculiar learning of the place, with various arts and trades, by which the boys soon learned to get their own living, and the girls to practice needlework and other useful arts, besides which they had them instructed in the laws which had been made by the King; and so well were the children taught on this point that many of them knew as much about the King and his laws as their richer neighbors who had founded these schools.

The stranger thought this such a pleasant city that he wished to remain in it for awhile, that he might observe the manners of the people, and how they employed themselves. So he went about from day to day, and observed how industrious the men were—how they built houses and wove cloth, dug wells and made bread—and how the women spun and knitted, and took care of their children and of their houses. He was pleased, too, to see the children going so regularly to their schools; and when their task was over he often followed them into the meadows to see how happy they were, gathering flowers and playing about in the long grass.

"This town of yours seems a very good place to live in," he said one day to a man who was weaving a basket.

"So it would be," said the man, looking up thoughtfully, "if it were not for the river."

"What river?" asked the stranger. "I have not seen or heard of any river."

"Why, no," replied the man, "I dare say not, for it runs a little way out of the city, and we have planted some trees in that direction, that we may not see it; you will not often hear it mentioned, for in fact we do not consider it good breeding to allude to it."

"But what harm does it do to the town?" asked the stranger.

"I don't wish to say much about it," replied the man; "it is a very painful subject; but the truth is, our King, whom you may have heard of, lives a long way off, on the other side of the river, and sooner or later he sends for all here to cross over. We shall certainly all have to cross before long. The King sends messengers for us; there is scarcely a day in which some one is not sent for."

"But are they obliged to go?" asked the stranger.

"Oh, yes, they must go," replied the man, "for the King is very powerful. If he were to send for me to-day I could not wait even to finish my work. Sometimes he sends for our wives or our children, and the messenger never waits till we are ready."

"What sort of a country is it on the other side of the river?" asked the stranger. "Is it as pleasant as it is here?"

"The river is so wide that we cannot see across it distinctly," said the man; "and when our friends and relations are once gone over they never come back to tell us how it fares with them there. But yet every one here is agreed, and the highest evidence confirms it, that the country across the river is a far better one than this. The air is so pure that it heals all their diseases; besides, there is no such thing as poverty or trouble, and the King is very good to them, and so is his Son."

"Well, then," said the stranger, "if the country be so fine, I do not see why you should think it such a misfortune to have to go to it, particularly as you are to see there all your parents and children and friends who have gone there before you. Why are you so much afraid to cross the river?"

The man did not answer at first; he seemed to be thinking of his work; at length he looked up and said: "When any of our friends are sent for, we always say they are gone over into that beautiful country, but to tell you the truth, the river is so extremely deep and wide, and it rushes along so swiftly——"

"What?" said the stranger.

"I say it rushes along so rapidly," replied the man, "that I think it very doubtful whether many of those who have to plunge in, can get to the opposite side at all. I am afraid the strong tide carries some of them down till they are lost. Besides, sometimes they are sent for in the dark and as I said before, the messenger never waits till we are ready."

"Indeed," said the stranger; "in that case so far from envying these people, I wonder to see them looking so happy and so unconcerned. I should have thought they would have been so anxious lest the messenger should come. Pray, cannot your friends help you over?"

The man shook his head. "We have made a great many rafts at different times," he said in a doubtful tone, "but they all went whirling down the stream, and were wrecked. We began a bridge, too, and it cost us incredible labor, but we could never make it reach beyond the middle of the river."

"Then," said the stranger, "are there no ships to convey you over? Must you needs plunge alone and unhelped into those dark, deep waters?"

"I am not learned in these matters," said the man, evidently uneasy, "and I do not pretend to be wiser than my betters, who generally think this a disagreeable subject, and one that we should not trouble ourselves about more than we can help."

"But if you must all go?" said the stranger.

"I am a workingman," replied the basket-maker, interrupting him, "and I really have no time to talk to you any further. If you want to know anything more about this, you had better go and speak to that man whom you see talking to that group of children. It is his business to teach people how to get over the river, but I have not time to attend to him. I dare say, when my time comes, I shall get across as well as my neighbors."

So the stranger went up to this man who had been pointed out to him, and inquired whether he could tell him anything about the dreadful river.

"Certainly," said the man; "I shall be very glad to tell you anything you wish to know. It is my duty: I am one of the embassadors of the King's Son. If you will come with me a little way out of the town, I will show you the river."

So he led him over several green hills, and down into a deep valley, till they came to the edge of a whirling, hurrying torrent, deep and swollen. It moved along with such a thundering noise that the stranger shuddered and said:

"I hope, sir, it is not true that all the people in the city are obliged to cross this river?"

"Yes, it is quite true," answered the man.

"Poor people!" said the stranger; "none of them can strive against such a stream as this; no doubt they are all borne away by the force of the torrent. Do you think any man could swim over here in safety?"

"No," said the man, looking very sorrowful; "it is quite impossible, and we should all be lost if it were not for the Bridge!"

"The Bridge!" exclaimed the stranger, very much surprised. "No one told me there was a bridge."

"Oh, yes," replied the man, "there is a bridge a short distance higher up; it was built by the King's Son, and by means of it we can pass in perfect safety."

"What! may you all pass?" asked the stranger eagerly.

"Yes, all. The bridge is perfectly free, and is the only way of reaching the country beyond. All who try to swim over, or cross in any other way, will certainly be lost forever."

"Sir," said the stranger, "if this be the case, I must hasten back to the city and tell the people, that no more of them be lost in these swelling waters."

"You may certainly do so if you please," replied the man, "but know, first, that all the people have been duly informed of the bridge. My brethren and myself spend nearly all our time in telling them of the goodness of the King's Son, and how neither he nor his Father is willing that any should perish. But their pride is very great."

"What! so great that they would rather die than use the bridge?" asked the stranger in astonishment.

"Some of them have built up works of their own," replied the man, "which they think are strong enough to bear them over into the King's country; others say they do not believe there is but one way of getting over, and some men throw themselves headlong into the flood, saying they do not believe there is such a provision, or at least that it was not meant for them. But, as I told you before, it is perfectly free, and the voice of the King's Son may sometimes be heard calling to the people over the flood, and inviting them to come to him; for, strange as it may seem to you, he loves them, though they are so backward to believe that he means them well."

"What!" interrupted the stranger, "does not the King's Son repent of what he has done; is he not sorry that he built a bridge for such a thankless race?"

"No," said the man, "though they slight his offers of safety, he still sends embassadors to call them to him, even at the very brink of the river. Nay, he often himself visits them; and by night, when all is still, he comes to their doors and knocks; if any man will open to him, he will enter and sup with him. He will tell him how he has loved our nation, and what he has done for our sake; for indeed it cost him very dear to build that bridge, but now it stands stronger than a rock."

Now, when the stranger heard this, he wondered greatly at the ingratitude and foolishness of these people; and, as he turned away, I went up to the embassador, and ventured to ask him the name of that city, and the country it stood in.

But it startled me beyond measure when he told me the name of that country for it had the same name as my own.—Christian Weekly.

The Farm and Garden.

THE FARMER FEEDETH ALL.

My lord rides through his palace gate,
My lady sweeps along in state,
The sage thinks long on many a thing,
And the fine fellow mocks on marrying:
The minstrel harpeth merrily,
The sailor plows the foaming sea,
The huntsman kills the good red deer,
And the soldier wars without a fear:
But fall to each, whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

Smith hammereth cherry-red the sword,
Priest preacheth pure the Holy Word,
Dame Alice worketh broidery well,
Clerk Richard tales of love can tell:
The tapster sells her foaming beer,
Dan Fisher fisheth in the mere,
And courtiers ruffle, strut and shine,
While pages bring the Gascon wine:
But fall to each, whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

Man builds his castle fair and high
Wherever river runneth by:
Great cities rise in every land,
Great churches show the builder's hand,
Great arches, monuments and towers,
Fair palaces and pleasing bowers:
Great work is done, but here or there,
And well man worketh everywhere:
But work or rest, whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

CLOVER AND GRASS LAND.

If more of our farm land were kept in clover and grass than is usually the case, and a greater quantity of stock, we should not only near less frequently of the exhaustion of the soil, but should feel tolerably certain that, with ordinarily good farming, it was in a way of yielding large crops of cereals annually on a smaller extent of land. It is the manure that is made upon a farm that constitutes the primary source of profit to the farmer. It is the rapid exhaustion of farms and plantations by hoed crops, corn, tobacco, etc.—not only in consequence of the immense amount of phosphates which they extract from the soil, but also by reason of the exposure of the soil itself in its light condition to washing rains and too ardent heat—which has thrown out of cultivation in this and other of the older States so many fields that were once fertile, but are now filled with a sedge grass, and rugged and unsightly gullies and ravines. Soils in our climate need to be kept covered in clover and grass to as great an extent as is consistent with good husbandry. They improve under the shade of clover, because this dense covering prevents evaporation; and because also the long tap-roots of this fine forage plant penetrate deep down into the subsoil, where they rot and furnish aliment for succeeding crops. A good crop of clover turned is equivalent, moreover, to a good dressing of barn yard manure, for it contains all the constituents in which the cereals delight. Grass lands for similar reasons, when not too closely cropped, improve the soil, inasmuch as they not only prevent evaporation and add vegetable matter to the under soil, by the decay of their under leaves, but they also leave many tons of vegetable matter to the under soil by their close net-work of fine fibrous roots when the land is again brought under the plow.

In renting out farms in England, so well is this understood that stipulations are entered into between the landlord and his tenants, with regard to the number of acres that shall be kept constantly in grass, and the quantity of stock of various kinds that shall be maintained on the farm. Nor is this stock in itself unprofitable, apart from the additional amount of manure which is thus furnished. The dairy, and the fattening annually of a greater or less number of heads of beef cattle, is more remunerative, provided the market be not too far distant, than hay sold off the farm, while the increased yield of the cereals—wheat, oats, barley and rye—amply compensate for the smaller amount of land that is brought under the plow. By pursuing this system, lands which were originally of ordinary fertility have been made to produce remarkably heavy crops, and what we call "exhausting the soil" is a term which, with them, is only theoretical.—Maryland Farmer.

GROWING HORSERADISH.

To answer many letters, we give in brief the following directions:

Around the city of New York the gardeners usually grow it as a second crop. The ground is very plentifully manured, and then marked off into rows one foot apart. Every alternate row is then planted with early cabbages, and after the plants are all set out the horseradish sets are planted in the intermediate rows at the distance of eighteen inches apart. If the horseradish starts too soon it is cut off in hoeing the cabbages, which does not injure the horseradish roots in the least. In July the cabbages are harvested and sold, and the ground is left entirely to the horseradish. Such, in short, is the method practiced around New York. As the farmer is supposed to produce only one crop from his land each year, he can manage the crop without so much labor. The soil must be deep, so as to allow the roots to penetrate a foot or more, if possible. The sets which are planted consist of the small roots taken from the large ones, and are from four to six inches in length. In order to distinguish the bottom from the top end of the sets, a slanting cut is made across the lower end, while the top is cut off square. When planted upside down they will grow, but the roots are apt to be irregular and branching. These sets are planted in May, in rows two feet apart and eighteen inches between the plants. During the summer it is only necessary to keep the weeds down and the soil loose. Horseradish is not injured by frost, and may remain in the ground until quite late. Just before the ground closes up the roots are dug, and after trimming off the small rootlets for sets for planting the next season, the large roots are either stored in pits in the open ground, or preserved in sand, in a cool, dry cellar. The small rootlets are preserved in sand, taking care not to make the layers of roots so large that they will heat.—American Agriculturist.

The Prairie Farmer says: "Nothing is better settled than that all biennials—such as beets, carrots, turnips and parsnips—should be taken from the earth where they grow at about the period they attain their growth, and that they be subsequently transplanted, in order to bear seed that shall produce, in turn, roots equal to those that were originally grown. You can easily and quickly show that this is true by making an experiment with radishes, if you have them in your garden. At the time, or shortly after they are in the best condition for the table, pull up a few good specimens, remove a part of the leaves, and reset them. If the weather is suited to their growth, they will soon leave out, and produce seed from which excellent radishes may be raised. Leave in the row some specimens similar to those transplanted, and let them go to seed, and it will be found that the radishes will be greatly inferior, being very tough and branching. As beets and carrots require to be housed during the winter, in order to prevent their decay, there is no danger of their deteriorating; but parsnips and turnips will live through the winter in the ground, and will produce seed the following season. The roots grown from this seed, however, will be very inferior, being generally stringy and branching. We have occasionally known some very late-sown turnips to produce seed from which fair turnips were raised, but they will be worthless for table use and inferior every way."

Turnips Among Corn.—A correspondent of an exchange recommends to occupy the soil monopolized by weeds with the purple-top turnip seed at the last dressing of the corn crop, and scuffling it in or sowing just before a rain, and allowing that to cover it. He can have a hundred bushels of good turnips per acre, if the soil be rich and well cultivated, instead of a host of worthless and pestilent weeds.

After long and patient experiment, a California horticulturist discovered that petroleum would kill the borer that infests the orchards of the Golden State. The fact was made known far and wide; and many fruit growers availed themselves of the valuable discovery. By their experiments the further fact was established that petroleum not only killed the borer, but the tree!

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

Remedy for Neuralgia.—Prepare horseradish by grating and mixing in vinegar, the same as for the table, and apply to the temple when the head is affected, or to the wrist when the pain is in the arm or shoulder.

Lemon for a Cough.—Roast the lemon very carefully without burning it; when it is hot cut and squeeze into a cup upon three ounces of sugar, finely powdered. Take a spoonful whenever your cough troubles you. It is good, and agreeable to the taste. Rarely has it been known to fail of giving relief.

Cure for Inflamed Eyes.—Take a potato, and after quartering it, grate the heart as fine as possible, and place the grating between pieces of cambric muslin. Place the poultice over the eye inflamed and keep it there fifteen minutes. Continue the operation three successive nights and a perfect cure ensues. It is worth trying by those afflicted with sore eyes. It is also strongly recommended for burns.

Scientific.

DR. C. H. F. PETERS caught the first glimpse of his new asteroid during the night of April 11; but the cloudy and inclement weather of the following days did not permit him to ascertain its motion until April 17, when the star was easily recognized as a new planet. This will be No. 120 of the group of asteroids; the one discovered by Prof. Watson, on April 4, will be No. 119; and Prof. Luther's, observed at Bilk-Dusseldorf, on the sixteenth of last March, already named Peitho, will rank as No. 118.

All these little planets, although grouped at the very point where Kepler and Titius declared another member of our system ought to present itself, are no longer regarded, after Olbers, as the fragments of this planet, shattered by some convulsion or collision. They were, without doubt, formed at the origin of the solar system, according to the same laws that governed the production of all the other planets. On the nebular hypothesis, an unusual perturbation occurred in the solar nebula at the time of their separation, causing a series of little bodies to be given off, ranking in respect to volume between planets and aerolites, in place of the single ring or mass of quiet parting to consolidate into a planet of ordinary size. According to M. Le Verrier, all these asteroids united would not equal one-fourth the mass of the earth. The largest of them are not over two hundred and fifty miles in diameter; their mean is one hundred and ten miles. Some of them possess scarcely greater volume than the larger aerolites. The difficulty, therefore, of detecting them is easily understood. Of course, they can be seen only when, in their orbits, they approach the earth most nearly; as they go on their way, they disappear from view altogether for many years.

THE Food Committee of London recently considered Mr. S. Darby's method of preparing a variety of fluid meat containing fibrine, gelatine and coagulable albumen, but no fat, by means of pepsin and hydrochloric acid. Lean meat is finely sliced and digested with pepsin in water, previously acidulated with hydrochloric acid, at a temperature of ninety-six degrees to one hundred degrees Fahrenheit, until the whole of the fibrine of the meat disappears. The liquor is then filtered, to separate fat, cartilage and insoluble matters, neutralized by carbonate of soda, and carefully evaporated to the consistence of a soft extract. The changes effected, in rendering these nutritious components of meat soluble, coincide precisely with those which occur in the stomach in normal digestion, when food has been acted on and prepared for passing the pylorus, to be mixed with bile and pancreatic juice. A bitter taste, arising from the use of pepsin, is removed by the addition of a small amount of fresh pancreas.

Fluid meat thus prepared is plainly ready for immediate assimilation, and does not require the digestive processes of the stomach. It will, therefore, render good service to dyspeptics, convalescents and the debilitated, as a nourishing food. It is readily soluble in water, possesses the flavor of roasted meat, and therefore is entirely agreeable to the taste. As a moist extract, it can either be spread over other food, or, on dilution, be used as a substitute for beef-tea.

DR. RICHARD OWEN communicates to the Academy a note on a discovery of an extinct gigantic bird of prey in New England, twice the size of the great wedge-tailed eagle of Australia, Aquila audax. The remains, found at Glenmark, South Island, in a marsh five or six feet below the surface, consist mainly of claw-phalanges, a number of smaller bones, a left femur, a vertebral rib with its anchylosed epipleural appendage, also a mutilated right humerus, found in a watercourse two miles away. Dr. Huast, geologist of Canterbury, New Zealand, refers this raptorial bird to the genus Harpagornis, under the specific name Moorei, and conjectures that it preyed on the young or feeble individuals of Dinornis, and with the extinction of the same itself disappeared.

PROF. EHRENBERG, of Berlin, has made a collection of all his publications, during the past twenty-five years, on those microscopical bodies known as passat-dust, coloring the "bleed-showers" and the "red-snow" of Alpine elevations and arctic regions, for reissue as a memoir in the "Transactions of the Berlin Academy." He enumerates all the instances of these phenomena on record, the earliest being that of a dust-shower, which fell during ten days in the Honan province of China, in the year 1154 B. C. By seventy microscopical analyses he has been able to distinguish no less than four hundred and sixty distinct forms of organic life.

IT COSTS MORE to avenge wrongs than to bear them.

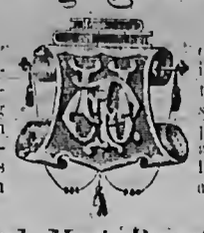
"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND
ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of strictly unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern School Books which should be entirely inoffensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the



Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books
Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,
By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,
By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,
By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,
By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS
COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,
By M. SCHELE DEVERE, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,
By B. L. GILDERSLEEVE, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,
By Rev. J. P. CARTER, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,
By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,
By the Professors LECONTE, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,
By R. M. JOHNSTON, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

SWINTON'S CONDENSED
SCHOOL HISTORY.
(From the Virginia Educational Journal.)
Mr. Swinton's reputation led us to examine this book. What is of most importance in the work is its extreme fairness. It is vastly superior, in this respect, to any history issued at the North that we have seen. Where accuracy seems almost impossible, he comes nearer to the truth than the others.

THE "DOMESTIC"
IS THE "KING"
Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.
ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."
All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.
You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.
Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The crop accounts are conflicting. From some localities they are as unfavorable as ever; from others we hear of light showers, which it is hoped will have a good effect.

The river is 4 feet below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the seventeenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	1,957
Lake.....	3
Mobile.....	241
Total.....	2,201

On Saturday the advance in freights compelled many buyers to withdraw from the market. The movement, moreover, was checked by a decline of ⅛@⅛ ₰ cent. in sterling exchange. The sales during the morning were consequently of limited extent, but later in the day buyers came forward more freely and factors were rather less stringent in their pretensions. The sales embraced 1,500 bales. On Monday the advantage was still more on the side of the buyers. In several cases offers of 22c. were accepted for average low middling, which had previously ruled at 22⅛c., and middling sold at 22⅞c. The sales were 1,450 bales, but there was very little competition among buyers. Freights continued to have a restrictive influence. Some small shipments were made to Liverpool at 7-16d., but ships which were taking oil cake, and consequently in no immediate want of cotton, refused to make any engagements under ½d. Among the sales we noticed ordinary at 19c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 21¾c., low middling at 22@22¼c., the latter for a strong style, strict low middling at 22½c., middling at 22⅞c., and strict middling at 23¼c. On Tuesday the market opened with rather more inquiry, but the tendency, nevertheless, was to still easier prices, and offers were accepted during the morning ⅛c. under Monday's figures. Later in the day, however, as the demand became stronger, prices assumed greater steadiness, and it was more difficult to buy at inside rates. The sales summed up 2,150 bales. Among the sales we noticed ordinary at 18¾c., good ordinary 20⅞@21c., strict good ordinary 21⅛@21⅜c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 21¼c., low middling at 21⅞@22c., strict low middling at 22¼c., and middling at 22⅞c.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 939,398 bales, against 1,347,294 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,093,123 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 78,969 to France, and a decrease of 810,046 to Great Britain, and of 306,707 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MAY 30, 1872. NO. 22.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, May 22.—The Methodist Episcopal General Conference to-day elected the following, which concludes the election of Bishops: E. G. Andrews, Gilbert Haven, Jesse T. Peck.

Washington, May 22.—The Senate adjourned this morning to one o'clock to-day, having passed the House amnesty bill by a two-thirds vote, placing it beyond the President's control.

Also the bill extending the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus.

Also Sumner's civil rights bill, but so emasculated that Mr. Sumner himself entered a motion to reconsider.

These vital measures were passed by bare quorums.

The following is the verbiage of the House amnesty bill, passed last night by the Senate:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, two-thirds of each House concurring therein, That all political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of amendments to the constitution of the United States are hereby removed from all persons whomsoever, except Senators and Representatives of the thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh Congress, and officers in the judicial, military and naval service of the United States, heads of departments and foreign ministers of the United States.

The civil rights bill as passed applies only to inns, licensed places of public entertainment or amusement, and stage coaches, railroads and other public modes of conveyance for freight or passengers.

Equal rights regarding cemeteries, schools and benevolent institutions were stricken out.

The bill as it passed the Senate reads:

Be it enacted, That whoever, being a corporation or natural person and owner, or in charge of any public inn or of any place of public amusement or entertainment, for which a license from any legal authority is required, or of any line of stage coaches, railroads or any other means of public carriage of passengers or freight, shall make any distinction as to admission or accommodation therein of any citizen of the United States, because of race, color or previous condition of servitude, shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000 for each offense, and the person or corporation so offending shall be liable to the citizens thereby injured in damages to be recovered in an action of debt.

Section 2 provides that the offenses under this act, and actions to recover damages, may be prosecuted before any Territorial, District or Circuit Court of the United States having jurisdiction of crimes at the place where the offense was charged to have been committed, with a right to appeal, or to have a writ of error in any case, to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The bill which passed the Senate this morning extends the power to suspend the habeas corpus to March 4, 1873.

Only Messrs. Sumner and Nye voted nay on the amnesty bill.

New York, May 23.—Ten of the jurors for conviction and two for acquittal in the case of Bergh vs. the Importers of Turtles. The jury was discharged.

The Shakespeare monument was unvailed at Central Park this afternoon, with appropriate ceremonies, including an oration by William Cullen Bryant, and the reading of Stoddard's poem by Edwin Booth.

New York, May 24.—In the Methodist General Conference to-day the Committee on Episcopacy reported a resolution that one new Bishop take his residence at or near each of the following places: Boston, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago, Atlanta, San Francisco, Omaha or Council Bluff, and at St. Paul. After considerable discussion the report was adopted. The new Bishops were consecrated to-day.

The will of the late Prof. Morse was admitted to probate to-day. It is dated February 7, 1872, and provides that $4,000 be set apart to defray one-third of the cost of the monument at Greenwood Cemetery, and the residue of his property be held in trust for his wife during her life. After her death the property to be divided into eight parts, one of which is to be appropriated to pay certain legacies, and the remaining seven to be given to his children. From these shares various sums from $1,000 to $5,000 are to be deducted on account of various gifts, and to be paid into the residuary fund.

His biographer, to be appointed by the executors, to be allowed the free use of his books and papers. The cross conferred by the King of Denmark is to be returned. The following are the legacies: $3,000 to the Home of the Friendless, Poughkeepsie, New York; $2,000 to found a scholarship at Nassau Hall, New Jersey; $1,000 to the Theological Seminary at Hampden Sidney, Virginia; $1,000 to the Old Ladies' Home; $1,000 to the National Academy of Design, for medals for the encouragement of art; $1,000 to the American Geographical Society, for the encouragement of geographical researches; $1,000 to the New York City University, for medals as rewards for scholarships.

Richmond, May 24.—The Presbyterian General Assembly dissolved yesterday, to meet on the third Thursday in May next, at Little Rock, Arkansas.

Washington, May 25.—The Senate, after nine hours of executive session, advised the President to negotiate the supplemental treaty substantially as demanded by England. The verbiage is somewhat changed from that submitted by the President.

Reports to the War Department mention the concentration of a large party of Indians to obstruct the progress of the Northern Pacific railroad, on the west side of the Missouri river. About two thousand members of tribes hostile to the whites are preparing to operate in mass against the builders of the road. They are said to be well supplied and equipped. Some of the stakes that were driven by the road surveyors have already been pulled up by the savages.

Alexandria, May 25.—Our town was yesterday visited by one of the most disastrous tornadoes we have witnessed for many years. About twelve o'clock the wind commenced blowing furiously, accompanied by a heavy fall of rain, and for half an hour or more the hurricane continued without abatement. Those who were in positions deemed unsafe were not slow to seek other localities where there was less danger. As soon as the wind and the rain would permit our people sallied forth to see what damages had been done, and in many places the work of destruction was to be seen. The new Episcopal church was leveled to the ground, and is a complete wreck. The galleries, with a part of the wall, in front of the stores of R. C. Hotherwick, Tait & Lacey and M. Rosenthal, were blown down. A large part of the roof on the west side of the Exchange Hotel was torn off. The carpenter shop of Mr. Mills is blown down. Also a house in the upper part of the town, besides many fences, shade trees, etc. Fortunately no lives were lost that we have heard.

New York, May 27.—In the Methodist Episcopal Conference to-day a motion was made that the restrictions placed upon Bishop Roberts, who presides over the Liberia Conference in Africa, be removed, and that he be elevated to the full dignity of a bishop and admitted to this Conference.

A colored delegate addressed the Conference on the question of the secretary of the Freedmen's Aid Society, and said that he was sorry to see in this Conference a disposition to keep the colored men off the committee. He then moved that the secretary be a colored man. An election was then taken, and resulted in the election of the Rev. Dr. R. S. Rust.

In the Methodist Conference R. L. Dashfield, T. M. Eddy and J. M. Reed were elected missionary secretaries. Dr. Kynett was elected secretary of the Church Society.

New York, May 28.—Bishop Harris presided at the Methodist General Conference to-day. Reports of committees on Sunday school, tracts, etc., were received and adopted. A resolution of thanks was tendered to Dr. Durbin, the retiring secretary of the Missionary Society. A resolution was also passed continuing Dr. Durbin's salary for three months after his retirement; the Conference then adopted rules for the election of General Conference officers. A vote was taken by hand, and the Rev. J. H. Vincent was elected editor of Sunday school books and periodicals; Dr. William Nast, editor of the Christian Apologist; Dr. King Liebhardt, editor of the German Family Magazine, Sunday school tracts and books, and Dr. D D. Whedon, editor of the Methodist Quarterly Review.

On recommendation of the Committee on Itineracy, the basis of representation in the General Conference was changed to one delegate to every forty-five, instead of thirty-nine, as heretofore.

The voting for the editor of the Ladies' Repository proceeded, but none of the six candidates received enough votes for election. The election was postponed until to-morrow, after which the Conference adjourned.

It is estimated that there are forty thousand men engaged in the various trade strikes in this city.

FOREIGN.

London, May 27.—The Duke of Bedford, nephew to Earl Russell, is dead.

Sir Henry Lytton Bulwer, the brother of Lord Lytton Bulwer, the novelist, is also dead. He was minister to Washington from 1849 to 1852.

SAD OCCURRENCE.

A FATHER SHOOTS HIS CHILD.

Mr. Editor: Bro. Henry Wicker accidentally shot his little son. The mournful event occurred in this way: Bro. Wicker laid his gun on the floor of the pass or entry, to await the return of a hawk that had been in the habit of carrying off Sister Wicker's chickens. The hawk very soon came again. Bro. Wicker, in the act of raising his gun from the floor, struck the hammer against a log of the house, causing the gun to fire, discharging the load into the head of his son, who was getting up on the floor at the opposite end of the entry or pass just at that time, causing the death of the child in one hour. This is sad! The accident occurred near Trenton, Smith county, Mississippi, May 10, 1872. Thus passed away dear little Willie Robert Wicker, who was born March 21, 1871. At the request of Bro. Wicker I have given an account of this mournful event as it occurred. I tried to preach a sermon on the occasion from Rev. xxi, 3, 4. May God comfort and support the sadly bereaved parents in this hour of sore affliction.

ROMANISM AND CRIME.

A new work on the Jesuits in Germany has recently been published at Leipsic. It is written by Drey Dorff, and presents some striking comparisons between Catholic and Protestant countries in the matter of crime. We invite the attention of some of our Catholic friends, who think that the education and morals of the people in Europe and this country should be regulated after their fashion, to the following comparisons:

"Statistics prove that in Rome there are 237 times as many chances of being murdered as in England, and 133⅓ times more than in Protestant Prussia. In England it is shown that one murder occurs for every 178,000 inhabitants; in Holland, one for 163,000; in Prussia one for 100,000; in Austria, one for 57,000; in Spain, one for 4,113; and in Naples, one for 2,750; but at Rome there is one homicide for every 750 of the inhabitants. Rome also scores the highest proportion of illegitimate children, the ratio of births of this class being nearly sixty-one times greater in Rome than in London. It appears that in London there are for every one hundred legitimate births four illegitimate; in Leipsic, 20; in Paris, 48; in Munich, 91; in Vienna, 118, and in Rome, 243."

Build Strongly.—Twenty years ago there was being built in my native village the largest vessel I ever saw. She was the marvel of the town, and all the leisure moments I could command I spent near the carpenters with youthful questions and amazement. I wondered why the timbers were so large and placed so near together; why so many large iron bolts and clear-wood and locust trunnels were used. I could not see why such care and strength were needed. But when I became a man, and one night was upon the ocean in a violent storm, all the wonder of my boyhood was thoroughly answered.

Young men, build strongly in youth your ship of character. Mark how the shipwright does his work; so when you are launched upon the sea of life—often more stormy than the ocean—when business cares and temptations, with all the world's allurements, beset you, you may, like a well-constructed vessel, withstand the tempest, and accomplish your voyage of life with profit and safety.—American Messenger.

FROM THE WORK.

Shreveport District.

Mr. Editor: We closed our first round of quarterly meetings for Shreveport district, at Shreveport, on the twenty-first of April. We got to all of the appointments except one. While on the way to it the road over which we traveled became so soft, in consequence of excessive rains, that it refused to bear us up, and we retreated.

The usual work of the first Quarterly Conferences—fixing the salaries of the preachers, and apportioning the same to the respective appointments—was done, we believe, to the satisfaction both of the churches and preachers.

For the benefit of the church generally, and for the stewards especially, we propose to state the amounts paid on each preacher's salary, up to the time of the first Quarterly Conference. For the sake of brevity, we will give the facts in figures, and because figures are facts.

Shreveport station, salary $2,800, paid $800; fully up to time. Caddo circuit, salary $1,200, paid $100. Keachie circuit, salary $980, paid $200. Mansfield circuit, salary $1,460, paid $200. Pleasant Hill circuit, salary $940, paid $95. Manuy circuit, salary $650, paid $18; the preacher has a wife and four children. Springville circuit, salary $900, paid $95. Anacoco circuit, no report. We hope that it will be prepared when the time comes.

It may be well to state, in this connection, that the aggregate of the financial report for this district, in 1871, shows an excess of eleven and a half per cent. over a similar report in 1870, notwithstanding the times in 1871 were much harder. This speaks well for our people. Much has been said about a want of liberality among our people in the support of the ministry. But, after all, we believe that the Methodists are the most liberal people in the world. Ministers of other denominations wait till they are called; then they stipulate; the salary is made secure by a legal obligation. After all that, so far as our knowledge extends, the support of the Methodist ministry compares favorably with that of others. The Methodist preacher goes to his circuit; the people do not know him; they never asked for him; they look at him and listen to him; they may or may not be pleased. But they say: "He is our preacher; Conference sent him, and we must support him."

We were sorry to find that while the financial report for 1871 had improved eleven and a half per cent. over the year 1870, the increase of the membership, in the same time, had only increased six and a quarter per cent. We hope, by the grace of God, that we shall be able this year to improve this report, so as to compare favorably with the other.

Laudable efforts are being made among us to promote and advance the cause of temperance. The State Reform has its various councils, well organized and equipped for its work. We occasionally meet with these, in different places, assembled in their weekly meetings. Here you may find nearly all the young of the community, including both sexes, with here and there an old man with gray hairs, whom they have gathered from the habits of dissipation, but who is now clothed and in his right mind. The Mansfield Temperance Society has its constitution and by-laws peculiar to itself. Its regular meetings are only once a quarter, when addresses are made by men selected, who can make them to profit. Its initiation fee is fifty cents, and its annual dues one dollar, the money to be expended in supplying the country with temperance literature. This is what we need above everything else. The public mind must be educated upon this subject before we can hope for final success. Strange as it may seem, there are church members, and even ministers of the gospel, who to this day advocate the practice of drinking artificial stimulants as a beverage; and, stranger still, religious newspapers will persist in heralding to the world that of such a person and at such a place the best of the article can be had; which, everybody admits, spreads death and destruction broadcast over the land. We want to say, before we leave this subject, that we have secured, and have it on hand, the non-alcoholic wine, unfermented, the pure juice of the grape, for sacramental purposes. We have seen it and used it. Any one wishing to get it can do so by applying to Sutherland & Page, Shreveport, Louisiana.

The Mansfield Female College is quietly but efficiently carving her daughters to be corner-stones, "polished after the similitude of a palace." It has seventy-six pupils, and will turn out eight graduates in June. Major Capers, of Shreveport, is to deliver the literary address, and the Rev. C. W. Carter to preach the commencement sermon.

In conclusion, we will say for Mac, the new district horse, that he has performed his part admirably. He wades deep, swims shallow, and has considerable tact in defending his own rights.

Our second round of Quarterly Conferences will commence on the eleventh of May. We expect to have good meetings at all the appointments.

J. P.

Winnsboro Circuit.

Ma. Editor: I have at last reached my new field of labor, and am now pretty well initiated into the work. Having heard many hard things said about this part of the country, I at first hesitated to come. But my apprehensions were all removed after visiting it in person.

Nevertheless, I found the church in a cold, backslidden state, but occasionally met with a good brother or sister whose heart seemed to glow with the fire of God's love, and gave me a hearty welcome and warm reception as their new preacher, and with whom I have since found many kind friends and pleasant homes.

I met my first congregation on the circuit, at this place, on the ninth and tenth of March, which was the time of our Quarterly Conference. Here I also met the presiding elder of this district, Bro. Daves, full of zeal and the Holy Ghost, whose whole deportment impressed us that he felt the weight and importance of his mission.

I found no church building of our own on the circuit, and at once began the work of raising money for the purpose of erecting the same, and in a short time succeeded in getting more than fifteen hundred dollars subscribed to build a house of worship at Oakley Camp Ground, which we hope to have completed by the first of September.

We have procured a lot of ground in this place upon which to erect a church edifice, and for that purpose have subscribed some six or seven hundred dollars, with a favorable prospect of getting as much more as may be needed.

As regards the spiritual condition of the church, there seems to be an increasing interest on the entire work, as the following results would indicate: Fifteen accessions to the church, and fifteen new subscribers to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and will endeavor to make it a weekly visitor to every Methodist household in these lands.

I find that the people on the circuit respond as promptly to any demand made upon them, that tends to the moral improvement and elevation of mankind, as any people among whom I have ever labored in a ministerial capacity. And here I will take the liberty to speak a word in commendation of the liberality of the resident Jews of this place, whose names I withhold. They as cheerfully respond to any demand made upon the public for any religious enterprise as our own people. There are four Sabbath schools on the circuit—two Methodist and two union. I organized the former, and found the latter in operation when I arrived here. At the Magnolia Sabbath school—which was the first I organized—I have received ten subscribers to the Sunday School Magazine. I cannot leave this subject without giving at least the outline of the organization of the other Sabbath schools at this place. Being somewhat pressed for time on Sunday, I requested the congregation to meet me on Monday night, May 6, at the courthouse, which they promptly did—Jews and Gentiles, saints and sinners, old and young; after which we organized in due form. I then took up a collection to purchase a library for the school, and in a few minutes we had raised $50 10. The several classes received lessons for the next Sabbath morning, at which time the school is to begin operation; and I feel fully satisfied that under the superintendency of the energetic and trustworthy brother, Judge Campbell, former parish judge of Franklin, it will be a decided success.

A more cheerful group of little boys and girls I have rarely ever met than at Winnsboro! The exercises of the evening were concluded by an address from Bro. A. W. Moore, who is now making full proof of his ministry by preaching every Sabbath with great power and acceptability.

I feel that if I had some of Bro. Purvin's expansion I would be able to accomplish much more good in this wide field, inviting us to an abundant harvest.

THE PUBLISHING HOUSE.

Our accomplished architect, Mr. John L. Smith, has completed his design for the Publishing House. It is to be four stories high—with a Mansard roof, twenty feet in height. The front is to be seventy-two feet high—of cut stone—massive and elegant. The doors and windows will be arched. It will have a front of one hundred and seventeen feet, and will embrace four stores, each twenty-seven feet in width in the clear, and having the great depth of two hundred and twenty-four feet. Besides the four regular stories, there will be in the rear three full basement stories, which are to be set apart chiefly for the machinery and presses. The style is to be Italico-French. The business of the institution will be confined to that portion of the building next to old Bridge street. The remaining three stores have been rented to Jennings, Goodhar & Co., Cook, Settle & Co., and Ewing & McClaugherty. The plans for the interior arrangement of the House will soon be drawn.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Death of Henry R. B. Bascom.—Some of our readers, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, may not be aware that Bishop Bascom left a son who inherited his name, and not a little of his intellect, though he did not succeed to his position in the church. He died May 10, and we are happy to learn that he died in hope of meeting his glorified father in the skies. The Rev. J. Rand, pastor of the church in Lexington, Kentucky, writes us, May 16:

"Henry R. B. Bascom, son of Bishop H. B. Bascom, died in this city, at the residence of his mother, on the tenth instant, aged twenty-nine years. He was endowed by nature with many rare gifts—inheriting from his parents a remarkably fine intellect—which, had he properly cultivated and devoted to the cause of God, would have made him a "burning and a shining light." He professed religion a few weeks before his death, and united with our church in this city. His conversion was, in many respects, a remarkable one. It was a most striking exhibition of the power of the gospel as taught by Methodists. He was anxious to die. 'Will I know my father?' 'Yes,' I responded. 'What a happy thought!'—and he passed away. His death was hopeful, happy."

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

Infant Baptism is a neat 12mo of about 157 pages, issued by the Southwestern Book and Publishing Company, St. Louis. The author, Rev. C. W. Miller, A. M., is a member of the Kentucky Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and an able and forcible writer. He handles the subject well, and the work is a valuable one.

The Visitor, Magazine and Little People for June have been received. A fine batch of Sunday school literature, and covering the ground of Sunday school work most completely. Nothing which issues from our Publishing House is telling so powerfully for good as these excellent Sunday school publications. Their circulation is immense, but Drs. Haygood and Redford are ready to supply a still heavier demand. Let no school or family be without these beautiful papers. The three should be in every house and school.

From Kain & Co., of this city, we have received Spectrum Analysis Explained—a pamphlet published by Lee & Shepard, Boston.

The Song Messenger is an excellent musical monthly, published at Chicago by Root & Cady, and George F. Root & Sons. We have received the May number.

Littell's Living Age of May 18 has: A Century of Great Poets; On the Temperature and Movements of the Deep Sea; Edward Denison; A Hindoo Prince, and other articles of interest.

Lippincott's Magazine for May is splendidly illustrated, and has a fine table of contents.

We have received the latest numbers of Littell's Living Age and Appletons' Journal.

Church's Musical Visitor for May has been received.

A party, hearing of a dog after Landseer, wanted to know what he was after him for.

NOW.

BY ROSE TERRY.

The sweet, sad stir of spring
Is in my heart and brain;
I hear once more the wild brooks pour,
And the soft south wind complain.

Where all the hills were green
Is a brown and barren waste;
But earth's fresh breath, that laughs at death,
Tells how the buds make haste.

Through the gray and faded grass
The green blades rise to light,
And the wind that grieves in the sweet dead leaves
Is full of vague delight.

Will ever a spring-time come,
In all life's lingering time,
That will not make my heart awake
As it wakened in its prime?

Will all these weary days
So fill my soul with fears
That the wind's soft voice, when the woods rejoice,
Shall only bring me tears?

Ah! never. The grass shall grow,
Though a thousand winters pass;
And the soul's fresh youth with tender truth
Still spring to the springing grass.

SUBSTANCE OF A SERMON

Preached at Fayette, Mississippi, April 18, 1872, at the opening of the District Conference of the Vicksburg district, by Rev. J. G. JONES, and published by the unanimous request of the conference.

What hath God wrought!—Num. xxiii, 23.

II. Here, brethren, let us panse a few moments, in our onward career, that we may calmly retrospect the past, and cast an observing glance all around our wide horizon on our present prospects. Let us "walk about Zion, and go round about her—tell the towers thereof, mark her bulwarks, and consider her palaces—that we may tell it to the generation following." In this summing up of the success with which God has favored us, it is but just to admit that we have, from time to time, received many accessions by immigration from other Conferences; but, to offset this, we may observe that many, both of our ministry and membership, have emigrated to the Western Territories and the Pacific coast.

Some really good men, under the depression of powerful temptations, allow themselves to take a gloomy view of the present status and future prospects of our beloved Methodism; while others, who have evidently lost their first love, judging the church generally by their own low grade of spirituality, are perpetually croaking about the decline of vital godliness in the church. I trust I am not at all pharisaical in this matter; but I do thank God to-night that I do not belong to either of those classes. I see some things, both among the ministry and laity of the church, that I think might and ought to be improved; but in the main the church has as much vitality and progressive godliness and zeal now as ever heretofore. Her career is onward in all her departments of usefulness, and we may, for good cause, "thank God and take courage."

If some of our ministers and members, here and there, fall from their steadfastness, and become permanently lukewarm, God "will spew them out;" but the march of the church will be to glory, honor, immortality and eternal life.

III. Let us now look at the various instrumentalities which God has employed to accomplish this great work. 1. And, first, we may mention that of the itineraut preachers, of whom we have generally had a fair supply. But few of these holy, zealous, self-sacrificing and useful men ever had the privilege of reciting a lesson in a college or other high classical school; few of them knew much about what are termed the learned professions; only here and there any one of them ever had the honorary degree of D. D. or even A. M conferred on them by proper authority. But they were truly converted, and as truly called of God to preach the gospel; and as God makes no mistakes in selecting his ministers, what wonder that they became "able ministers of the New Testament." Feeling inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost to preach the gospel of the grace of God, they betook themselves to the study of their God-appointed work; and if we may judge of their proficiency by their success in the awakening and conversion of sinners, and in building the church up in gospel holiness, we must decide that most of them were workmen that had no occasion to be ashamed of their ministerial qualifications. I sincerely wish and pray that the so-much-talked-of incoming educated ministry may be as successful in turning many to righteousness, and spreading scriptural holiness all over these lands, as these their worthy predecessors were. Up to a late date they have been almost universally—as our local preachers have also been—extemporaneous preachers. Common as it is now becoming, especially in our town and city stations, for our ministers to recite their sermons from a written manuscript, I was far advanced in life before I ever saw a Methodist preacher read his sermon from a written manuscript. The almost universal opinion of our forefathers has been that if a man was truly called of God to preach, and thoroughly understood his subject, and had his heart filled "with faith and the Holy Ghost," and his lips touched with fire from God's altar, he could always preach an acceptable and useful extemporaneous sermon; and if he could not, he was not much of a preacher, whatever his literary attainments might be. I am glad to know that we still have hundreds of men, in every grade of the ministry, who can preach the gospel intelligibly, and "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power," without being cramped with a written manuscript. Such has been the result of my training, experience and observation, that I do not look upon it as an evidence of superior literary attainments, or other superior ministerial qualifications, for a man to be under the necessity of rehearsing a sermon from an exact copy before him. But I prefer to let each of my brethren judge for himself in this matter. If a man is weak-kneed and cannot walk without crutches, he had better avail himself of that artificial help than not to walk at all; so if a man cannot preach an acceptable and useful sermon without reading it from a manuscript, let him read. I am aware that it takes a man—a full-grown man in theological and other ministerial qualifications—to stand up and preach extemporaneously for an hour, without committing a theological, grammatical, rhetorical or logical error; but, thank God, we still have a goodly supply of just such men.

2. A second instrumentality which God has employed to carry on his great work in our midst is that of our local preachers, many of whom are preachers of an elevated grade. These holy and devoted lovers of the church, and the souls of their fellow-men, do not feel that their providential circumstances will permit them to enter the regular itinerant work, and yet they feel that they must preach, as much as in them is, or subject themselves to the penalties of disobedience to God, and have the blood of souls upon them. I believe their calling is of God, as manifested by the fruit of their labors. I look upon our corps of local preachers as one of the strong arms of the church. Their services in most places are indispensable. They not only supply vacant places near their homes, but they frequently go into the regions beyond the present range of the itinerants, and preach to the destitute; and not only collect new congregations, but organize new churches, and then turn them over to the regular pastors. In this way they not only form new congregations and churches, but sometimes lay the foundation for new pastoral charges. I recollect, fifty years ago, in this very region of country where I was born and raised, that our itinerant pastors could only get round their large circuits once in four or six weeks, and that by preaching every day in the week except Monday; and had it not been for such efficient local elders as Randle Gibson, John C. Johnson and James Griffing, we would often have been without preaching, sometimes for months; and this has been the sort of service they have rendered all over the church, at their own cost of time and incidental expenses, without asking or expecting any pecuniary compensation. God bless our local preachers is the prayer of my very heart! It grieves me ever to hear a disparaging word about them. They are our dearly beloved co-laborers.

3. Another important adjunct in maintaining and promoting this glorious work, especially in former years, was a class of men known among us as exhorters. These men did not feel it to be their duty to enter the regular ministry, but, like John the Baptist, they preached many things in their exhortations to the people. Their duty was not so much to expound the word of God as to enforce its immediate observance by direct appeals to the people. In former years, especially where preachers were scarce or absent, they were a valuable class of laborers in the vineyard. They not only kept up regular appointments of their own for public prayer and exhortation, but often rendered extra services by supplying the place of absent or disabled preachers, and assisting in the labors of revival meetings. The first great revival I ever took part in was at Cane Ridge, in 1822, and it was mainly conducted by Christopher Bean, an exhorter. I am sorry to see this valuable class of men becoming extinct in many places.

4. Another indispensable class of laborers in carrying on this great work is composed of such men and women as are called among the Wesleyan Methodists, "prayer leaders." They are persons who, from small beginnings, by constant practice, acquire extraordinary talents for extemporaneous prayer, and, in addition to their efficiency in our stated prayer meetings, are always ready to lead in prayer when called on to do so. It is a great help to the preachers, as well as an extraordinary blessing to the church, to be surrounded with holy men and women of this stamp. I have witnessed the labors and success of large numbers of them, especially in the earlier days of my ministry. In 1824-25 it was my good fortune to be associated with many such mighty men of prayer on the waters of Bogue Chitto and Amite rivers. There was Ben. Brister and Yawn—a man who could not then read—William Venable, and Jackie and William Adams, John Obear and many others. These men were not only fervent in spirit and gifted in expression, but some of them had a vast compass of voice, so that they were often called on by our preachers to lead in prayer in our large camp meeting audiences. I used to hear the Methodists of those days say that sometimes when these men prayed it seemed as if the heavens and earth were coming together. All enraptured, I have heard just such prayers, and have witnessed just such scenes. Like Paul at Philippi, we have also had many "women which labored with us in the gospel." Whatever may be said against the preaching of women, certainly nothing sensible or scriptural can be said against their praying in the church and elsewhere, at suitable times, and in a way consistent with the modesty and proper position of their sex. We have too often seen the blessing of God attend their eloquent and melting prayers to throw the least obstacle in their way. We would rather encourage them everywhere to become, in this way, our helpers in the work of the Lord. There are a few still lingering in this pastoral charge who recollect the eloquent prayers, which seemed to melt into our very souls, of such saintly women as Hannah Floyd, Abigail Scott and Elizabeth Osteen. God grant that they may always have their successors in Fayette circuit!

In summing up all the instrumentalities which the Lord of the harvest has employed in the great work which he hath wrought, we should not pass over unnoticed our faithful Sabbath school officers and teachers, our Bible societies and agents, our various missionary enterprises, and the diffusion of our religious literature.

IV. In conclusion, my brethren, let us look to the future, and inquire how this great work is to be perpetuated and enlarged. In order thereto we should:

1. Make no compromise with the world so as to admit its "vain pomp and glory" into the church. "Ye are not of the world," saith Christ, "therefore the world hateth you." We have but little either to hope or fear from the world. The spirit of the world has always been in deadly hostility to the progress of our church. Our greatest battles have been fought and our most splendid victories have been achieved right in the face of the most determined worldly opposition. We must not let the world seduce and conquer us by its "vain pomp and glory," but we should aim persistently at its entire subjugation to the gospel of Christ.

2. We should make no capitulation with other church organizations, either as to our doctrines, ecclesiastical economy or our successful church usages. Such compromises have often been suggested and even demanded by our sister denominations, but our safety is in "holding fast whereto we have already attained, and walking by the same rule and minding the same things;" for by these means God hath brought us to what we are. It would not only be folly, but absolute madness, for us to yield one iota at these points, while other denominations are being modified by the example of our unparalleled success, both in doctrines and church polity, and have adopted many things from us in fact, if not in name. Our future success depends on our adhering to the old "landmarks," both in doctrine and discipline, with only such reasonable adjustments of our church polity as our experience and rapid growth may demand.

3. We should never depend on any thing or measure merely factitious for promoting pure and undefiled religion. Whenever we neglect or depart from the measures taught us, both by the example and precepts of the holy apostles and their true successors in all ages, for saving souls and promoting pure Christianity, and begin to depend on fine and costly churches, splendid organs and choirs, to the exclusion of congregational singing, and that ad captandum sort of preaching demanded by that indefinable something called "the times," then we are a fallen people. He whose eyes are as a flame of fire, seeing our defection, will remove our candlestick. We may still, like another well-known apostate church, maintain our organization, but we will be like a huge carcass spread abroad on the earth, very offensive, both in the sight of God and all true Christians. In order to carry forward the great work of saving souls the apostles relied on "prayer and the ministry of the word." They gave themselves constantly to mighty, all-prevailing prayer, and to the preaching of the gospel of the grace of God, in its simplicity, purity and power. Whatever else they said or did were merely adjuncts, and subordinate to these two great leading measures; and on these measures we must still rely if we would be successful in winning souls to Christ. And now, my brethren, let us praise God for the past and present, and with renewed courage gird on our armor and betake ourselves to the prosecution of the great work to which he has evidently called us.

For the Advocate.

AFFLICTIONS.

Viewed in the light of time and of human reason, afflictions are unmitigated evils, and we are disposed to murmur and complain when called to bear them. We are inclined to think that God deals unkindly with us, and are ready, in our hearts at least, to call him "an hard Master." But when we view them in the light of the Bible and of eternity they assume altogether a different aspect. We see that, however unpleasant they may be in themselves while they last, they are intended for our good—are a necessary part of the discipline by which our heavenly Father inteuds to fit us for our future home and employment. "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." Afflictions per se are evils, and are the legitimate fruit of sin; but God, who is able to bring good out of evil, uses them for our good. If man had never fallen he would not have needed this discipline; but since he has fallen, God uses that which is the legitimate fruit of his sin to save him from sin, and perfect him in righteousness. Afflictions are beneficial in various ways.

In the first place, they are the only means by which some sinners can be arrested and brought to repentance. The Spirit wooes, the preacher warns and invites, loving friends admonish and persuade, but all in vain—the man remains careless and impenitent. But at length, when kind and gentle means have proved of no avail, God sends affliction—he takes away the man's property, or snatches from him by death a darling child or beloved wife, or lays the man himself on a bed of sickness. He begins now to reflect; he sees the folly of his past course; his hard heart relents; he yields to those gracious influences of the Spirit which he had hitherto resisted, and meekly bows his neck to the yoke of Christ, which he had stubbornly refused to wear. He can then say: "It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy statutes."

But afflictions are beneficial to the Christian, and that in two ways: 1. We are liable to forget God and neglect our souls in consequence of the ten thousand unfavorable influences surrounding us and our own imperfections; afflictions, as chastisements, serve to check us, to reprove us, and to bring us back into the path of duty. Some, like Paul, may be in danger of being "exalted above measure," not "through abundance of revelations" made to them, but in consequence of other benefits bestowed upon them, and it may be necessary for them to have "a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet" them.

But as Christians we need afflictions to develop, mature and perfect in us all the Christian graces. God desires to make us perfect—"without spot or wrinkle or any such thing," "holy and unblamable and unreprovable in his sight." He would have us symmetrical Christians, possessing not only some but all the Christian graces, and possessing them in a state of perfection. That we may possess these different graces, and have them thus matured, it is necessary for God to use different means. The means that will develop one set of graces and virtues will not develop another. Prosperity would touch our natures at only some points, bring out only some graces, and make us only partial Christians, if Christians at all. But it is necessary that our natures be touched at all points, that they be affected in every part; to accomplish this it is necessary that we endure afflictions, that, like our Master, we be "made perfect through sufferings." As gold is purified by fire, so our hearts are, in part, to be purged from the dross of sin by the fires of affliction. God desires to see his own image reflected perfectly from our hearts. He only knows when his image is thus reflected, and what means are necessary to accomplish the end. An artist, who understands his work, knows much better than the uninstructed lookers-on when his picture has reached a state of completion; and, when it may appear already perfect to their superficial gaze, he toils on for months, it may be, before he reaches his own ideal of perfection. Our hearts are the canvas upon which the great Artist is drawing his own image. He only can tell when the image is sufficiently perfect, how long it will take, and what means are necessary. As he is infinitely wise and good, we may rest assured that he will use no unnecessary means. He will not permit a single trial, temptation or affliction to befall us more than he sees is absolutely necessary to bring out his image in our hearts in all its beauty and fullness. But as to the amount of discipline laid upon us in the form of suffering, we suppose that God is governed not entirely by what he sees we need, but partly by our desire to become perfect, and the extent to which he sees we will bear the ordeal. He intends to make us just as holy as we desire to be made, and as we are willing he should make us. He can go no further. The difficulty with many of us is, we would like to be holy and to rise to a high position in heaven, but we are not willing to make the necessary sacrifices, and undergo the necessary discipline in order to the attainment of the end. Wherever God sees a soul anxious to be holy, and willing to have holiness on his terms, he doubtless carries it through precisely that kind and degree of discipline which will bring it into the enjoyment of the desired boon. As the sick commit themselves into the hands of the physician, so should we commit ourselves into the hands of the great Physician of souls, and take cheerfully whatever potions he may administer, however nauseous, and submit patiently to the amputation of every sinful member.

Another benefit resulting from the afflictions of God's people is that the patience with which they are borne convinces the world of the reality of religion. Christians should, on this account, try to bear their afflictions with all possible patience, and thus show to the world that there is a saving and sustaining power in the religion of the Bible.

REV. JAMES APPLEWHITE.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Rev. James Applewhite, one of the pioneers of Methodism in Mississippi, was born in Wayne county, North Carolina, November 24, 1792. His parents, who were strict members of the old Baptist Church, removed to Robinson county while James was yet a child.

In early youth he was rather wild and reckless, and engaged in all the follies of the day. In his fifteenth or sixteenth year, through the persuasion of a pious old lady, he attended a Methodist love-feast. The services, so strange, so unlike any he had ever attended—seeing one admitted and another rejected—awoke him to a sense of his own danger, and he there resolved to turn away from the paths of vice and folly and seek the favor of God. Some weeks after this, while riding alone, he was happily converted, and shouted aloud the praise of God. Like too many, he neglected to join the church, and his ardor abated and his love grew cold.

In 1811 he removed, with his father, to Mississippi, and settled in Marion county while it was comparatively a wilderness. Being thus deprived of the privileges of the sanctuary and thrown into the company of the reckless frontiersmen, it is no marvel that he turned again to the paths of the destroyer—to use his own words, "became worse than ever before."

On the breaking out of the war of 1812 young Applewhite shouldered his musket to fight his country's battles, and continued in the service till Packingham was repulsed at New Orleans.

On the seventeenth of April, 1817, he was married to Miss Mary Ann Ragan, in whom he found a helpmate who has shared his joys and sorrows through a long and eventful life, and who still lives to mourn his loss. Some years after his marriage the hand of affliction was laid heavily upon him, and he was brought to death's door. While on his bed he again pondered the paths of his feet, and, like the prodigal, said: "I will arise and go to my Father." At the first opportunity, after his restoration to health, he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and immediately erected the family altar, on which, till the day of his death, the fire never ceased to burn. Long before his six months' probation was out, the joy of God's salvation was restored to him, and he felt, and his brethren thought, that the great Head of the Church had a work for him to do. He was accordingly licensed to exhort. This license now lies before me, signed by R. H. Hurbert, but without date. While an exhorter, such was his zeal, and so scarce were laborers in the vineyard of the Lord, that he would sometimes hold two prayer meetings in one night.

He was licensed to preach by the Quarterly Conference of Pearl River circuit, June 29, 1829. As a local preacher he was very active; in fact he was local in name only, as he had appointments for nearly every day in the week, and, like Paul, he sought to preach Christ in regions of country visited by no other minister. In some sections where he preached the people were so wicked that it almost seemed like casting pearls before swine, and a man less determined than he would have shrunk from the duty and turned aside to fields more inviting; but, nothing daunted, he unfurled the banner of the cross in those dark regions, and the wilderness and solitary places were made to rejoice and blossom as the rose.

In 1831 he was admitted on trial in the Mississippi Conference, and appointed to Leaf River circuit, Alabama district—J. H. Millard, presiding elder. While on this circuit he preached thirty-eight times in twenty-eight days. In 1832 he was appointed to White Sand circuit, Tombeckbee district, Alabama Conference. (It seems that in setting off the Mississippi Conference, in 1831, Bro. Applewhite fell into the Alabama Conference.) In 1833 he was admitted into full connection in the Mississippi Conference, and appointed to Pearl River circuit, Washington district—Thomas Clinton, presiding elder. In 1834 he was appointed to Washington circuit, New Orleans district—William Winans, presiding elder. In 1835 he was appointed to Yellowbusha circuit, Chahata district—O. S. Nash, presiding elder. At the close of this year he removed to Carroll county, and settled near where the town of Vaiden now is. In 1836 he was appointed to Yellowbusha circuit, Sharon district—J. G. Jones, presiding elder. In 1837 he was appointed to Carroll circuit, Sharon district—J. G. Jones, presiding elder. At the close of this year his health had so failed from excessive labor that he was compelled to ask for a superannuated relation. He was ordained elder by Bishop Morris, at Grenada, December 9, 1838. At the close of this or the following year, his health continuing bad, he asked for a location. As a local preacher he was not idle, but continued to labor as his health would permit, and was equally ready to preach to the great congregation at the popular hour, or to the unlettered sons of Ham, with whom he was a great favorite.

Some five or six years since, while in the pulpit preaching, he was stricken with paralysis, from which he never entirely recovered; but he continued to labor as his failing health would permit. Some four or five months before his death, feeling that the time of his departure was near, he sent for the writer to aid him in arranging his temporal matters, and requested him to bury him when he died, and write his obituary; he also requested that Bro. H. Williamson should preach his funeral sermon. He continued to linger till February 20, 1872, when the weary wheels of life stood still, and the disencumbered spirit took its flight to the home of the blessed. On the twenty-first we laid him in the family graveyard, beside his intimate friends and brethren in the ministry, Rev. J. G. Bruner and W. H. Crawford, there to await the resurrection of the just.

Bro. Applewhite was a man of vigorous intellect and strong feelings, and never shunned to declare the whole counsel of God. But few understood the great distinctive doctrines of our church better than he, or were more ready to defend them against any and every foe; and in so doing he would sometimes give offense, when nothing was further from his wish. He belonged to the old school of Methodist preachers, and ever wore the old Methodist coat. He was a great stickler for the old landmarks, and when visiting his friends he would always pray with them before leaving. He was a man whose heart and hand were alike open to the cry of the poor. Like Job, he could say: "The blessings of him that was ready to perish came upon me, and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy. I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame; I was a father to the poor, and the cause which I knew not I sought out."

He rests in peace, and doubtless his works will follow him. His funeral sermon will be preached at Columbiana, on the fifth Sunday in June, by Bro. Williamson.

W. H. HOLMES.

WINONA, MISS., April 27, 1872.

"'WE MUST ALL APPEAR,' or, as now it is generally admitted, 'we must all be manifested before the judgment seat of Christ,'—a far more searching thought. If we were to employ a homely expression, and say, 'turned inside out,' it would, I believe, exactly express the intention of St. Paul; all that is inward now, and thus hidden, becoming outward then; every disguise torn away; whatever any man's work has been, that day declaring it; and not according to its outward varnish, but its inward substance."—Trench.

IN THE VALLEYS.

Children in the valleys
Brawl and sport and run;
Wading in the brooklet,
Basking in the sun;
Gambolling up the hill-side,
Romping in the bowers,
Chasing spangled insects
'Mid the honeyed flowers.

Happy, heedless children,
In the twilight beam,
Picking shining pebbles
From the singing stream.
Sitting on the green banks,
Where tall shadows stand;
Grasping golden handfuls
Of the treacherous sand.

Foolish, thoughtless children,
Sporting all the day;
Lingering on their journey,
Home so far away;
Night is slowly dawning
'Mong her starlights pale,
O'er the homeless children
In the lonely vale.

Men are in the valleys,
Sporting through the bowers;
Chasing golden fancies
Through the fleeting hours;
Catching winged sunbeams
In the noontide's flame—
Ardent fingers grasping
Bursting bells of fame.

Oh! we're only children
Pleased with every chime;
Twining fond affections
Round the neck of Time;
Sitting in the valleys.
Spending life's short day—
Never, never thinking
Home is far away.

Sunset beams are sinking,
Day is nearly done,
And a mask is falling
O'er the mellow sun;
Still we stay, dispelling
Every shade and fear,
Hugging empty phantoms,
As if home were here!

English Magazine.

An exchange says that the following is the pithiest sermon ever preached:

Our ingress in life is naked and bare;
Our progress through life is trouble and care;
Our egress out of it we know not where;
But doing well here, we shall do well there.

To this we would add as a specimen of condensed expression, the following epitaph on Life:

I came at morn—'twas spring; I smiled;
The fields with green were clad;
I walked abroad at noon—and lo!
'Twas summer—I was glad.
I sat me down; 'twas autumn eve,
And I with sadness wept;
I laid me down at night, and then
'Twas winter—and I slept!

ROMAN AFFAIRS.

A Catholic, writing to the Independent from Rome, among other things says:

Holy week is past, and with it the hopes of many for a return of the grand religious ceremonies that have distinguished Rome, its church and churches, for the greatest half of the Christian era, attracting hither heretic and infidel, saint and sinner, from all parts of the globe. Because he cannot be king, Pius the Ninth still persists in refusing to exercise the public functions of bishop. The change is very great, and we shall ever remember at each recurring Passion-time the grandiose spectacles that we have been until now accustomed to—the pontiff-king borne aloft in the vast Basilica, over the prostrate multitude; the entrance into the great nave, as into a wide-extended field, of the brilliant regiment of fighting faithful, whose grounded arms touch the marble floors like the click of a solitary gun; their doffed helmets like the sweep of a white dove through the air; their kneeling, as of one man, at the elevation of the host; then the sublime voices of the papal choristers, and the silver trumpets filling the great dome with a far-away tempest of sacred sound; then the vespers, and above all the Miserere in the Sistine chapel. Yes, the change is very great, is sad; but it is best. For too long a time has the worship of God degenerated into spectacular ceremonies; and, we must confess it to the world, we have looked and listened, enjoying with sensuous eyes and ears, and yet before men and before God blushing at the pagan pageantry. But bigots in broadcloth and brocade, contadini in gay attire, and beggars in their rags, still go up to the temple of the living God, and kiss the foot of the black idol of Jupiter, called Peter, which to the shame of all Christendom is lifted up in this grand central cathedral of the Christian world! Over it hangs a golden canopy, and over that the mosaic portrait and the gold-lettered tablet that commemorates the assumption of divinity by a mortal man! We expect to live to see the day when both the black idol of iron and the idol of flesh shall be taken from their pedestal in the church of Christ. Jupitor will have a place in the Vatican Museum, and the other will have his place in history. Let us be patient.

Rome is filled, as never before, with strangers; and we are surfeited with kings, queens, dukes and princes, who go trudging and prowling about streets and ruins, just like everybody else. But what is it that attracts so many people to Rome today? Certainly not the church ceremonies, as they have almost ceased to exist. It is to see Rome free and the capital of Italy—to look upon her joy, to participate in her happiness. With the natural curiosity of the sight-seer, a presentation to the Pope goes in with excursions to the Coliseum, Catacombs, Forum, etc., as one of the things to do. We do not hesitate to say that this is certainly questionable judgment, if not principle, and we are certainly astonished that Protestants, who look upon the papacy as a monstrous wrong, and the Pope, if not the anti-Christ, certainly the representative of spiritual darkness and heresy, and the greatest enemy to the universal church, come flocking to pay court to Pope and papacy, and thereby adding to the flattery of the poor old man, who believes the whole world is really his, and in this manner giving importance to a position that is entirely anti-Christian and anti-scriptural.

Christians should not leave consistency and principle at home while they go a traveling.

As we said some time ago, Pius the Ninth was determined to abandon the false position he had taken in playing prisoner, and can only do so by openly denying what he has hitherto asserted to be true—that he was a prisoner in the hands of the Italian government. Last Saturday he boldly said, to a hundred persons of different nations, who were presented to him, and several of whom repeated it to me: "You hear it said that I am a prisoner. But you must not believe it, for I am not. I can go out of the Vatican when I will; but I am not going to run the risk of meeting Mazzini processions, and of insults that would certainly be heaped upon me." As the guarantee laws give the Pope all the honors of the king, with royal escort and the same protection as is given to Victor Emanuel, this pretended fear of insult is but a weak excuse.

The war in the Vatican still goes on between the two parties; for even the great center of unity, the Vatican, is divided against itself—one opposed to the Pope's departure; the other, the Jesuits, urging it on. His holiness longs to go, but prefers to stay.

ANTHROPOPHAGY.

Anthropophagy, or cannibalism, has been recently discussed by two German ethnologists, Drs. Andree and Schaafhausen. According to Andree, the motives of this hideous aberration are extremely varied. Besides mere sensual gratification, and hunger brought on by the dearth of other animal food, the passions of revenge and hatred, as well as religious precepts and gloomy superstition, play an important part in its production. It is, however, consoling to see that, in historical times, anthropophagy has been gradually disappearing; and we have but one single instance—that of the Bassuto people—to record in which the habit had newly arisen, having been previously unknown. Antropophagy has vanished, with the people themselves, from among the Iroquois and Algonkins; it has disappeared from among the people of the high plains of Anahuac, the Indians of Peru, and most Brazilian races. It is increasingly circumscribed in the Southern ocean by the dying out of the cannibal races and the pressure of the white settlers. The number of cannibals is still, however, very considerable. The following figures are, of course, only approximately correct, but they afford a standpoint from which to take a census of the class: The Battas, according to Friedmann, may be reckoned at 200,000 souls; the cannibals of the Niger Delta at 100,000; the Fans, according to Flenriot de Langle, at 80,000; the cave-dwellers of the Bassuto country—about a tenth of the whole population—at 10,000; the Niam-Niams at about 500,000; the Miranhas and Mesayas, according to Marloy, at 2,000; the other South American cannibals at 1,000; the Australian aborigines at 50,000; the Melanesians—without including New Guinea—at 1,000,000. This calculation gives a total, at the present time, of 1,943,000 human beings addicted to anthropophagy—a number in no degree exaggerated, but which actually represents the six hundred and ninetieth part of the whole population of our planet, or 0.14 per cent. Schaafhansen's views regarding the motives assigned for cannibalism are hunger, revenge, superstition, such as induces savages to devour a brave warrior to obtain his courage; and lastly, the gluttonous longing for a kind of flesh which is described as appetizing. Human sacrifice may sometimes be a relic of early cannibalism, an offering to deities who devour human flesh, or, it may be, an act of propitiation. There is evidence of the ancient or modern existence of cannibalism in most countries of the world, Great Britain being distinctly included. Even in modern times it occasionally breaks out in the civilized world; but, on the whole, its frequency among savages, and its general disappearance under improved social conditions through the efforts of missionaries, enable the writer to put it fairly into his argument in favor of a steady progression in civilization.—Once a Week.

We are not to search the distant horizon for beauties, while the flowers are beneath our feet.

SAPPHIRE, OPAL AND DIAMOND.

Take an ounce of the blackest slime of a beaten footpath on a rainy day, near a manufacturing town. That slime we shall find in most cases composed of clay (or brick-dust, which is burnt clay) mixed with soot, a little sand and water.

Let us suppose that this ounce of mud is left in perfect rest, and that its elements gathered together, like to like, so that their atoms may get into the closest relations possible. Let the clay begin. Ridding itself of all foreign substance, it gradually becomes a white earth, already very beautiful, and fit, with the help of congealing fire, to be made into the finest porcelain, and to be kept in kings' palaces. But such artificial consistence is not its best. Leave it still quiet, to follow its own instinct of unity, and it becomes not only white, but clear; not only clear, but hard; not only clear and hard, but so set that it can deal with light in a wonderful way, and gather out of it the loveliest blue rays only, refusing the rest. We call it then a sapphire.

Such being the consummation of the clay, we give a similar permission of quiet to the sand. It also becomes first a white earth, then proceeds to grow clear and hard, and at last arranges itself into mysterious, infinitely parallel lines, which have the power of reflecting not merely the blue rays, but the blue, green, purple and red rays in the greatest beauty in which they can be seen through any hard material whatever. We call it an opal.

In next order the soot sets to work. It cannot make itself white at first, but instead of being discouraged, it tries harder and harder, and comes out clear at last, and the hardest thing in the world; and, for the blackness that it had, obtains in exchange the power of reflecting all the rays of the sun at once, in the vividest blaze that any solid thing can shoot. We call it then a diamond.

Last of all, the water purifies or unites itself, contented enough if it only reaches the form of a dewdrop; but, if we insist on its proceeding to a more perfect consistence, it crystallizes into the shape of a star.

And for the ounce of slime which we had * * * we have a sapphire, an opal, and a diamond set in the midst of a star of snow.

If such beautiful and glorious transformations can take place in mere matter, through the ordinary operation of the law which God has appointed, what will the transformation be in man, who has a soul and an intellect, as well as a body, and on whose behalf God has interposed, and will yet interpose, in so mighty and marvelous a manner?—Ruskin's Ethics of the Dust.

The most ingenious, practical sarcasm ever made use of was that of the late Rev. Robert Hall, addressed to a clergyman who had obtained a lucrative living after a change of religious opinions. Mr. Hall had pressed him hard upon the question of church reform. The gentleman's constant answer to the arguments addressed to him was: "I can't see it." "I don't see it." "I can't see that at all." At last Mr. Hall took a letter from his pocket and wrote on the back of it with his pencil, in small letters, the word "God." "Do you see that?" "Yes." He then covered it with a piece of gold. "Do you see it now?" "No." "I must wish you good morning, sir," said Mr. Hall, and left him to his meditations.

Genial.—Rev. Alexander Henry, an English Roman Catholic priest, writes an epistle to Father Hyacinthe, wherein occurs the following passage:

"As a priest of the Holy Roman Church, Catholic and Apostolic, I experience a supreme pleasure in awaiting the day of death and of the last judgment, when I shall see you and your collaborators of the Esperance de Rome cast into the pit and its torments forever. When I reflect on the existence of such apostates as you, I bless the justice of God that it provides a hell."

The Western Recorder, the organ of the High Church Baptists of Kentucky, lays down the following axioms: 1. Baptist churches are the only gospel churches. 2. All Christians, unless it is wholly impracticable, should hold membership in some Baptist church. 3. The demands of the Scriptures would be met if all other denominations—seeing their errors—would disorganize.

In Paris a gamin met on the boulevards a fair lady carrying her pet dog in her arms. "Look!" cried he, "she carries her dogs and she puts her children out to nurse!" There are many of those creatures, this side of Paris, who have adopted dogs in place of their own children.

The Weather Signal Bureau now reports daily to steamboat captains and all parties interested the depth of the water on the bars of the Western rivers.

CHRISTIANITY AND POPERY.

Father Gavazzi, in a sermon on Sabbath last, said that the difference between Roman priests and evangelical ministers is this: "The one class preach allegiance to the Pope; the other to Jesus Christ, the fountain of all good."

It is this difference which causes the opposition of the papacy to all the forces of modern Christian civilization. The Pope, claiming to sit as God, and to exercise supreme and infallible authority over all men, in affairs both of faith and morals, strives to keep the world in slavish ignorance, and to hold in abject submission to a priestly dynasty all civil governments and institutions. To this end the entire hierarchy is now bending its arts, energies and resources. Hence its assault on popular education; its intrigues against republicanism; its cruel plots to plunge nations into revolt against chosen and constituted authorities; and its steady efforts everywhere to substitute the Middle Ages of dismal superstition for the enlarging science and practical Christianity of the present century.

Protestantism derives all its life as an emancipating and reconstructing power of Jesus Christ, who has all the fullness of God, out of which are poured the treasures of truth, grace and salvation into the souls who look directly unto him as the Alpha and Omega of their hope. And it is because of the divine energy which inheres in the gospel that the papacy shrivels and falls beneath it whenever and wherever the gospel is free to reach nations once in bondage to Rome. For this reason the papacy has acted with a due regard for its own preservation by cursing Bible societies and declaring popular education to be a damnable heresy.—Christian Intelligencer.

The Name of God.—It is singular that the name of God should be spelled with four letters in almost every known language. It is in Latin, Deus; in Greek, Zeus; Hebrew, Adon; Syrian, Adad; Arabian, Alla; Persian, Syra; Tartarian, Idga; Egyptian, Aumn or Zeut; East Indian, Esgi or Zenl; Japanese, Zain; Turkish, Addi; Scandinavian, Odin; Wallachian, Zenc; Croatian, Doga; Dalmatian, Rogt; Tyrrhenian, Eher; Etrurian, Chur; Margarian, Oese; Swedish, Codd; Irish, Dich; German, Gott; French, Dien; Spanish, Dios, and Peruvian, Lian.

The name of God in the Anglo-Saxon language means good, and the signification affords singular testimony of the Anglo-Saxon conception of the essence of the Divine Being. He is goodness itself, and the Author of all goodness. Yet the idea of denoting the Deity by a term equivalent to abstract and absolute perfection, striking as it may appear, is perhaps less remarkable than the fact that the word man, used to designate a human being, formerly signified wickedness; showing how well aware were its originators that our fallen nature had become identified with sin.

Origin of a Maxim.—The proverb "Cleanliness is next to godliness" is attributed in Bartlett's Dictionary of Quotations to John Wesley. But Wesley used it as a quotation, and its origin must be sought elsewhere. A learned rabbi of Richmond, Virginia, the Rev. Dr. Bettelheim, in a letter to the Dispatch of that city, traces its origin to the Talmud, as follows:

"This maxim appears first in a Beraitha as the last Mishna of Sota, chapter 9; Talmud jerus., Shakalim, chapter 3, page 6; Talmud babl., Absarah, page 20, b.; Jalkut, Sh. Isaiah, No. 263; and Alfassi Ab; sarah, ibid. loc. Here it reads as follows: 'Phinehas ben Yair says: "The doctrines of religion are resolved into (or are next to) carefulness. Carefulness into vigorousness. Vigorousness into guiltlessness. Guiltlessness into abstemiousness. Abstemiousness into cleanliness. Cleanliness into godliness (equal to holiness,)"' etc. Literally next to godliness."

A Finnish mission was commenced in South Africa in the summer of 1870. Two stations are already formed, and preparations have been made for a third. The missionaries have located themselves with Tji Kongo, the King of Ondonga, and with Najuma, the King of Ovakuambi. These princes were at war with each other; but, having received their teachers in a friendly manner, they consented, upon the entreaty of the latter, to enter relations of amity. After the arrival of two missionaries, who were expected as a reinforcement, another station was to be commenced.

A vacancy having occurred in a certain church by the resignation of the organist, the trustees advertised for a candidate for organist, music teacher, etc. Among the numerous replies to the advertisement was the following: "Gentlemen—I notice your advertisement for organist and music teacher, either lady or gentleman. Having been both for some years, I offer you my services."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

A Miss Wilson was recently ordained a deacon in one of the Episcopal churches in Brooklyn.

A single Bishop in the Protestant Episcopal Church reports that two hundred and seven out of two hundred and eighty-five clergymen ordained by him came from other religious bodies.

The Methodists in England are divided into seven distinct organizations, numbering in the aggregate 637,417 members, 2,904 ministers, and 32,385 local preachers. The proposition of organic union is freely discussed among them.

The Presbytery of Brooklyn has adopted an address to the General Assembly, requesting them to enact a statute forbidding to ordain women to the gospel ministry, or to allow them to preach or teach in public and promiscuous assemblies.

A Sign of Civilization.—The Creek Nation have a well-organized public school system, where their children are taught the rudiments of the English language. They are now ready to give $10,000 for the erection of a Baptist seminary, when the teachers are provided for it.

Church and State, in its desire for Christian union, is willing that the bishop should be considered not as belonging to a superior order of the clergy, but simply as the first among equals. This is the Methodist theory, and the Low Churchmen are certain to adopt it before long.

Italian Church.—Father Gavazzi comes to this country in behalf of the Free Italian Church. He says that he wishes to lecture in different cities, and "earn money enough in America to create an evangelical college in Italy to educate ministers to preach the true gospel of Christianity."

Heresy in Scotland.—It is stated that the Bishop of Argyll is to be tried for heresy, by the College of Scotch Episcopal Bishops, the "heresy" being his doubt as to the claim of the "apostolical succession," and his avowed recognition of the orders in other communions, not Episcopal.

Awakening.—The Greek Church in Russia is said to be waking to new missionary activity, not only in the various parts of the vast Russian empire, but also in China and Japan. The president of the Missionary Society at Moscow, a former bishop of Kamtschatka, is said to have been the means of converting forty thousand heathen!

Mr. Hammond considers the revival in Lawrence, Kansas, in which 1,000 persons out of a population of 12,000 were converted, as the most successful work in which he has ever engaged, with the single exception of one in Dumfries, Scotland. The approximate number of the conversions in the principal towns in Kansas is as follows: Leavenworth, 500; Lawrence, 1,000; Topeka, 600; Atchison, 300; Fort Scott, 400. In addition to these, meetings have been held in many of the smaller towns, with very important results.

The Christian Evidence Society is meeting with gratifying success in its mission of opposing the progress of skepticism and every form of unbelief among the lower classes of London. At a recent drawing-room meeting, Rev. Mr. Cowper stated that in the course of his experience in combatting the errors of infidelity he had heard advocated in the streets of the metropolis Mohammedanism, Buddhism, Hindooism, Judaism, Popery, Atheism, Pantheism, Deism, and, indeed, every kind of religious disbelief. Mr. Ellis said that he had found that the various views or objections presented in reply to his arguments proceeded more from the heart than the head, as attempts to quiet the conscience by denying the truths of Revelation. Rev. Newman Hall regarded as the best evidence of the truth of the Bible the wonderful transformation which it effected in the lives of converted sinners. He was of opinion that the working classes were not so largely tainted with infidelity as many supposed. He always found them readily disposed to listen to the plain, earnest representation of the gospel.

India.—Rev. P. M. Buck, of Shahjehanpore, writes that he had just closed, February 10, a protracted meeting in their Christian village, Panahpore, which continued one week. "God was present in a very gracious manner. Nearly all seemed to realize that we were on holy ground, and many a heart was filled with the Spirit as never before. Most of these men and women professed to obtain pardon and the witness of the Spirit during last year, when we were visited by Rev. William Taylor. But some had failed to walk in their first love. These were restored, and the others were greatly strengthened and confirmed. One recently turned from Hindooism and professed to find salvation. Two helpers were present, and were greatly blessed, and labored with much earnestness. I believe they are being qualified by the Spirit to lead souls to the cross. On the last day I administered the Lord's Supper, and the Master was with us. I also on the same day baptized nine children and three adults."—New York Christian Advocate.

A correspondent of the Allgemeine Zeitung, writing in reference to the recent persecutions of Christians in Japan, declares that the French missionaries have lately been pursuing a course similar to that of their Jesuit predecessors, already described in this column. During the past year they have been secretly wandering through the villages in the neighborhood of Nagasaki, telling the peasants that if they would accept the Catholic religion they would not only be protected by France, but have their freedom procured and be raised by that power to important positions in the State. Whereupon the people rose in masses, expelled tax collectors and other government officials, and attacked adjoining places adhering to national authorities. The government of the Mikado at first strove to restore order by proclamations and decrees, which were met with disrespect on the part of the insurgents, who continued to disobey laws, maltreat officials, until their leaders were arrested by the rulers and sent to another province, the French embassador having refused to send away the missionaries who were the cause of the rebellion. All reports of cruel treatment of those deported are wholly without foundation, and were sent forth by the Jesuits from Nagasaki. The Japanese government not only admit, but do not distrust English and American Protestant missionaries, knowing that they employ moral teachings, and not political means, to accomplish their objects, which also are well understood to be of a nature calculated to strengthen and establish its power.

Sicily is now a scene of activity on the part of Waldensian evangelists. On every side they find unexpected readiness to hear the preaching of the true way of salvation, and brighter prospects for the extension of the gospel than have ever occurred in the annals of Italian reform. Even in inland towns the people are intelligent and desirous of knowing the truth, instead of ignorant and superstitious. Convents have long stood empty, because their occupants were not in favor with the people; friars and monks have been driven away; and for the last two years the masses have been living in a state of incredulity or indifference, not knowing which way to turn. They eagerly purchase Bibles and religious books of colporteurs; and, finding them to contain truths very different from anything they used to hear from priests, are deeply interested, and often embrace with joy the plan of salvation by grace through faith in the Redeemer. Having always been told to look to the Virgin, and having never known of the Savior except as a child in the manger, or as represented on a crucifix, they listen to the preaching of the gospel with wonder and bewilderment, and at the close of an address crowd round the minister, begging him to continue, or wishing to confess, or asking many questions. At San Filippo d'Argiro, the ancient Agira, a baron opened his palace, and desired that the meeting should be held in his great drawing-room. He himself stood at the door to receive the people that came to hear the gospel; and, seeing some of them not venturing to enter and standing at a respectful distance, he, with the greatest cordiality, bade them come forward. Rev. A. Malan visited Riesi, on receiving a petition, signed by seventy-six persons, setting forth "that it is their ardent desire to have an evangelical pastor resident in the commune, in order that there may be promulgated among them the truth, which till now has been obscured, and by the exposition of which the inhabitants would fain be fed. Therefore, may it please you to come with all speed to Riesi." St. Joseph's church being thrown open to him, he preached six times, in the presence of the Syndic of the town, to large audiences, and finally to a crowded assembly, on the subject of drawing nigh to the Son of God in penitence and finding peace through faith in his blood, with all the effects of a revival. The magistrates of the town promised to appropriate the Church of St. Joseph for Protestant worship, furnishing everything necessary for the meetings, if an evangelical minister might be sent to reside among them. An able, faithful evangelist certainly could have no greater opportunity for winning souls to Christ. When he was about to return, the people testified to the sincerity of their gratitude by coming to the house and shouting: "Long live the evangelical pastor!" As he departed, they increased in number and enthusiasm, accompanying him fully half a mile out of the town; and the last sounds heard in the distance, as he rode away, were the shouts of "Viva il Pastore Evangelico!"—Independent.

THE SEEKER.

The promises to those that seek are very direct and encouraging: "For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." We might quote pages from the Bible going to confirm the general declaration that the true seeker always reaches the gracious experience of pardon, and obtains a comfortable sense of his acceptance with God. The Savior's language is very positive, and, as quoted, stands without qualification. In another place, where he exhorts his hearers to "strive to enter in at the strait gate," he says that "many shall seek to enter in and shall not be able;" but this "many" must be other than true seekers — those, perhaps, who seek not earnestly, or those who begin to knock after the door is shut. The prophet throws some light upon the matter when, in well-chosen words, he exclaims: "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near." A right and timely seeking is sure to lead to the great discovery. "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine."

This honest purpose to do the will of God is the initial point, and the main qualification in genuine inquiry. There may be much ignorance, spiritual darkness, blindness and hardness of heart, and manifold errors in the views of doctrine, but the sincere purpose to know and do the will of God is sooner or later crowned with light and assurance. A seeker, bent on doing and knowing, absolutely submissive, and realizing complete dependence upon God, is a rare character. Of the thousands who profess to be seekers, but few really are so. They have not surrendered themselves to God and his guidance absolutely, with the courageous determination to obey the truth at every sacrifice. God has pledged his word to him that asketh; his paternal character and love guarantee the blessing, and the gift of his Son is the abundant warrant that he shall "with him freely give us all things."

Neither do we suppose there is any arbitrary sovereignty in the ordinary bestowal of salvation. Some seem to seek a long time, and are a good while baffled in their efforts to obtain peace. But do they really and truly seek? Jacob wrestled all night, but the necessity was in himself. It took him till daybreak to reach the conditions of mercy.—When he became a seeker, when he reached the point of complete submission and genuine faith, he prevailed. The Lord "blessed him there." God exercises his wise and loving sovereignty in his providence, but we cannot suppose that he withholds his salvation for a moment from those who have complied with the terms upon which it is possible for him to grant it. Why, then, this long delay in finding? Because we have never truly sought. "He that seeketh findeth;" and until the elements of a true seeker are in us there can be no finding. Many who suppose themselves to be seekers are long in becoming real inquirers. Their asking has been no asking, and therefore they have not received. The reason the door is still closed against them is that they have never knocked. God has no purposes to subserve in keeping a soul out of his kingdom a single hour after that soul comes to Christ. It is no part of his plan to hang the sinner up in jeopardy, and to keep him in darkness and uncertainty. When we are ready to admit him the Savior comes into the heart, and brings with him the banquet of love. He who stands at the door of the soul and knocks for admittance, does not at the same time hold and bar the door. This is done by ourselves.

Men sometimes fall into a sullen complacency under the persuasion that they have sought, or that they are seekers, and that the failure lies not at their door. It is God, and not they, who hedges up their way to life. There is no greater delusion than this. Infinite mercy pursues them with invitations, persuasions and convictions, but they have never yielded to the voice of the Spirit, nor have they ever fairly and candidly purposed to do the will of God. Had they sought they would have found, had they asked they would have received. The path of some to the knowledge of the truth may be environed with peculiar hindrances—speculative difficulties, tendencies to skepticism, and temptations numerous and diabolical; but seeking will bring them out into the light. God is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him, and there are no depths out of which he will not hear the sinner's cry for help. The condition which embraces all conditions is to seek. This will lead to all discoveries and to all experiences which are to open into the delights and satisfaction of a new and holy life. When we become humble enough and honest enough to pray, and to feel the necessity and to seek the guidance of the Holy Spirit, the clouds and shadows give way before the celestial beams, and the light of life breaks forth upon us.

General Conference, M. E. Church.

On Tuesday and Wednesday, the twenty-first and twenty-second of May, eight Bishops were elected. Thomas Bowman, D. D., heads the list. He is fifty-three years of age, a preacher of commanding power, and since 1859 he has been president of the Indiana Asbury University, located at Greencastle, Indiana. Wm. L. Harris, D. D., LL. D., was born in 1817, and during his entire ministerial life has been a member of the Ohio Conference. He has filled the office of assistant missionary secretary for the past twelve years. He has also been elected secretary of every General Conference since 1856. Randolph S. Foster, D. D., LL. D., is a native of Ohio, born in 1820, and since 1850 he has been a member of the New York Conference. Two years ago he succeeded Dr. McClintock as president of Drew Theological Seminary. As a scholar and preacher he has perhaps no superior in his church. Isaac W. Wiley, D. D., was born in 1825, a native of Pennsylvania, and a member of the Newark Conference. Since 1864 he has been editor of the Ladies' Repository. Stephen M. Merrill, D. D., is a native of Ohio, born in 1825, a member of the Ohio Conference, and for the last four years editor of the Western Christian Advocate, published at Cincinnati. Dr. Merrill is a good editor and writer, and is said to be a strong preacher. Edward G. Andrews, D. D., is about forty-seven, a native of New York, and at the time of his election pastor of the Seventh Avenue church, Brooklyn. He has the reputation of being a most eloquent preacher, and one of the most effective. Gilbert Haven, D. D., is, of course, the brilliant, the irrepressible, the superlatively radical editor of Zion's Herald, Boston. He is a native of Massachusetts, born in 1821. Jesse T. Peck, D. D., is the oldest of the eight, being upward of sixty years of age, and the greatest man of them all physically, if not otherwise. He is widely known, and of late years has been actively engaged in establishing the Syracuse University in central New York.

Besides the disposal of the election of Bishops, the Conference has adopted a new plan for the support of the Bishops. Heretofore it has been drawn entirely from the Book Concern. The amount is hereafter to be apportioned to the several Conferences, and to be raised directly from the people, the Book Concern, however, for the present to advance and make up deficiencies when needful.

LETTER FROM BISHOP KEENER.

VAIDEN, May 20, 1872.

MR. EDITOR: On yesterday I dedicated the new Methodist church at this place. The day was pleasantly cool, the congregation large, and the collection enough to pay the balance due on the house, to buy a bell and put a fence around the lot. Unlike the cramped policy, which gets the least quantity of land necessary for a church site, the friends of Methodism here have secured about three acres, finely situated in this springing railroad village. The building is a handsome frame, with turret-shaped steeple, very neatly put up; about thirty-four by fifty-five. The whole membership here numbers but thirty-five, and the prospect of being able to build a church for themselves was very dim a year ago. But enterprise and industry can accomplish as much in the way of doing good as in that of making money. The preacher in charge, Rev. T. C. Parish, deserves to be mentioned in this connection, as he builds wherever he goes. I wish we had a dozen such indomitable synagogue-builders in California. But one marked feature in this success is that gentlemen not members of the church bore the brunt of the undertaking. Dr. Vaiden gave $750 toward it, and Mr. Kopperl interested himself in securing a fine sum from parties living at a distance—New York and St. Louis merchants—besides giving very generously himself. Of our own friends who belong to the church, I may only refer them to the words of the Master: "So likewise ye, when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do."

I have no doubt this house will quicken the regions about, and that before long our church will rejoice in seeing another beautiful house for the service of our God quietly and suddenly appear as the first star of the evening. So, too, I hope that a parsonage will be secured for this circuit by the same liberal, enterprising parties to whom we are so largely indebted for this church at Vaiden.

The fields are in good condition—everything clean and ready for the expected showers. I doubt not the Lord will trust these people with another crop. Some farmers scarcely venture to hope as much; but "the Lord is better to us than our fears." I have long since considered the economical problem of the country solved, despite the drawbacks which have been sorely suffered. Its moral and religious future is a matter with me of much deeper concern and more difficult solution. Let us rejoice in the labors of those self-denying, unknown and unobtrusive men who go about building churches and preaching to the people. In no small degree they are the conservators of everything good in the land—the salt which has not lost its savor. K.

MRS. ELIZABETH TAYLOR, wife of Rev. E. J. Taylor, of the Ocean Springs circuit, Mississippi Conference, died at the parsonage, Ocean Springs, on the eighteenth of May. She was the daughter of Rev. P. H. Napier, of the Mississippi Conference—a most estimable lady, a devoted Christian. Her end was triumphant. Her obituary will appear in the ADVOCATE soon.

GOD has two thrones—one in the highest heavens; the other in the lowliest hearts.

The Bishops and the University.

The Bishops, at their recent meeting in Nashville, took the following action concerning the Central University:

Resolved, That the College of Bishops accede to the request made by the Board of Curators of the contemplated University to locate the institution whenever the sum of $500,000 shall be pledged for the enterprise.

Resolved, That by this act we are not to be understood as implying that the said institution is to be considered as connectional to the damage of existing colleges and universities. We can take no official relation to the Central University that will discriminate between it and any and every other institution of the church; nevertheless, we feel free to give our decided approval to the combination of the several Annual Conferences represented in the Convention at Memphis, or so many of them as may agree together, acting through their respective bodies, in getting up an institution of the highest grade.

Resolved, That, as the question of theological schools is in controversy among our people, we propose no action that may be construed into an expression of our collective opinion on the subject; but it is made a condition of the first resolution that the theological department, to be comprised with the literary and professional departments of the proposed Central University, be such as is consistent with the action of the General Conference held in Memphis, 1870, in the words following:

"Resolved, That we indorse the action of the last General Conference in reference to biblical chairs in connection with our existing colleges, as the best available means for training young preachers."

Resolved, That our secretary be instructed to give notification of this to the board.

The Board of Trustees replied to the Bishops as follows:

NASHVILLE, May 10, 1872.

TO THE BISHOPS OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH: Your communication in reply to the letter addressed you by the Board of Trust of Central University was received at the hands of your secretary, Bishop McTyeire, and I am instructed to forward you the following resolution adopted in reference thereto:

Resolved, That the terms and conditions upon which the Bishops of the church are willing, in due time and proper form, to accede to the request made of them by the late Educational Convention held in Memphis, to locate the proposed University, are, in the judgment of this board, sufficient to encourage it in the prosecution of the scheme of education contemplated by said convention; and as such they are hereby accepted in good faith by this board.

Resolved, That the secretary furnish a copy of this resolution to the College of Bishops.

D. C. KELLEY, Sec'y.

Bishops Pierce and McTyeire, anent the University discussion, publish the following card:

The controversy between us, growing out of the proposed Central University, comes to an end, with satisfaction to ourselves, and, we trust, without any damage to the church, whose welfare we both have been seeking to promote. The occasion of it has been adjusted by the unanimous agreement of the College of Bishops, and upon terms agreeable to all the parties. We hope the result will be beneficial to all the interests concerned. Our personal feelings have never been involved, and with mutual confidence and brotherly kindness we now close.

G. F. PIERCE.
H. N. McTYEIRE.

MAY 10.

WE ARE SORRY TO LEARN that Bro. Samuel Armstrong, of the Louisiana Conference, has been prevented by affliction from attending to his work. A man of long and faithful service in the itinerant work, we are sure that he has the sympathy and prayers of all his brethren. In a brief communication lately received Bro. Armstrong writes:

I am sorry to say that I have not been able to move to Alexandria—confined at home by rheumatism. It is the first time in thirty-five years that I have failed to meet my appointment promptly. It troubles me very much to know that the church is without a minister. I have no idea when I will be able to visit my field of labor, if ever. I ask your sympathy and prayers. I hope you are pleasantly situated in your work. Your paper pleases us very much. Our church in north Louisiana enjoys a season of peace, and, I hope, is preparing for the day of battle and victory.

"THE word 'impossible' is the mother-tongue of little souls," said Lord Brougham.

FREE CHURCH OF ITALY.

Father Gavazzi, in his address before the General Conference in Brooklyn, gave the following interesting statement of the work in Italy:

In a general point of view our evangelization had its beginning in 1848. If any would serve God aside from the prescribed forms of the Romish Church, they had to do it secretly among themselves, and with the police at their doors. I am right when I say before 1848 we had not one single place of public worship in Italy other than those of the Romish Church. In 1853 there was a church commenced in Turin. From 1848 to 1859 there were five congregations gathered, so that of the different agencies in Italy in 1860, and from 1860 to 1870 or 1871, we had the one Evangelical Waldensian Church, the Free Church of Italy, the Methodist Church, and in some small sense the Baptist Church. Now we have ten thousand communicants and thirty thousand hearers. (Applause.)—That is the progress the church has made in Italy during the last ten years. This is owing to one fact, namely, we are harmonious, realizing the great value of the Apostle Paul's advice to keep the "unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace;" we try to keep to that, and therefore no sectarianism, and therefore no pedantic scholastic theology, but the Bible, and the Bible only, in my Free Church of Italy. We have scattered here and there some thirty-five churches. They are supported by single individuals, by groups, by committees of Geneva, of London, of America, and of the American and Foreign Christian Union. * * *

When I was in America, twenty years ago, some of my friends almost reproached me for not having one church. Then I had to remain an independent evangelist, and so I could say to my Italians, "I am not sent to you by any foreign denominations, but I am sent by the Father of all, who sent Paul to preach his gospel," and so they would hear me. But now I can say to my American brethren, "I have a church which is for me and to me the best hope of Italy," because it is my opinion it is the best hope for the evangelization of my Italian country. Thanks to God, we have overcome all past difficulties, and we have in the end, and almost now, a kind futurity, because the American Foreign Christian Union has come to the conclusion and the decision that after having supported for so many years in Italy these separate churches, it will now send its aid to the Central Evangelical Committee of the Free Church of Italy, and so we shall have one mind and one scope, and evangelization will advance more and more rapidly. I am thankful to the American and Foreign Christian Union for its past help; but now that this great General Assembly might know our aim, and so sympathize with us, I would say a word.

We have called our church in Italy "free" for various reasons. That word, my dear friends, must ring in your ears as sweetest melody. Free! (Applause.) We have nothing to do with the government. We are free from all State interference. We preach the gospel to our hearts' satisfaction. It is the Free Church, but it is the Free Christian Church, for somebody would ask, Is it a Christian Church? Yes, it is a Christian Church in Italy. We do not make any compromise in our country. When we came out of the Church of Rome, we came out in toto; (applause) therefore, by calling ourselves the Free Christian Church, we mean that there is not one single hair of Rome left on our heads. (Laughter and great applause.) We call it the Free Christian Church of Italy, for it is composed entirely of native Italians; our pastors and our school masters are Italians, and therefore it is the Church of Italy, and therefore it takes our hands, our hearts and our minds. Reasoning and serious people asked me some time ago, Why do you intend to try to make anything of your church? They say, Why do not you import some of our Protestant denominations? Why don't you try to reform the Church of Rome?

Let me ask what kind of Protestant denomination should I have imported into Italy? Of course you would say the Methodist. That would be reasonable for you; but the Episcopalians, the Presbyterians and the Dutchmen would have their objections; and if I had imported the Dutch, others would have objected, and by one importation many would have been displeased; therefore, not to displease anybody, I did not import anybody. Do not say to me that there is a national pride in having an Italian Church. You Americans would not like to be evangelized by Italians, and the Germans would not like to be evangelized by the Frenchmen. (Laughter.) You will permit the Italians to like to have the evangelization of Italy come from Italy. But then you may say, Why not take Protestantism into Italy? Let us understand each other. Protestantism is Christianity. (Applause.) So if I preach Christianity to the Italians, that is preaching Protestantism. Do you see? Christianity is one. We are not of Paul, and Apollos, and Cephas, nor of Luther, or Melanchthon, or Calvin, or Wesley, but we are all of Christ. We have preached Christianity in Italy, and is not that enough?

But some may ask, Why do you not reform the Church of Rome? That would be very pleasing to Roman Catholics to find themselves reformed; but let me say, that in my old age I do not wish to become a fool, and it would be foolishness to try to reform an unreformable thing. (Laughter.) Some have asked me if that church cannot be reformed. I have had a little experience that will illustrate this. When I was with Garibaldi in his campaigns my duties were in the hospitals and in looking after the wounded on the field. I noticed that when the surgeon went to see a wounded man, if the little finger was wounded and gangrened, he would cut it off to save the hand; if the hand were gangrened he would cut off the hand to save the arm, and if the arm were gangrened he would take it off to save the body; but if the body was all gangrened, he would never cut it into a hundred pieces in order to save nothing. (Great applause.) He would simply commit such a body to the undertaker as the only chance for him. (Laughter.) That is just the case in the reform of the Roman Catholic Church. Before the days of the Council of Trent it might have been reformed, but after the errors of that council, and of those that followed it, and which were crowned by the blasphemous utterances of the Council of the Vatican, that church is gangrened through and through, and the best way is to commit it to the undertaker. (Prolonged laughter and applause.)

What is meet and what we mean to do, is to return to the pure Church of the Apostles.

You cannot imagine how long we had to fight in order to get out of the influence of sectarianism. That was the work of ten years. For when the various denominations would come to Italy, each saying, "We are the true church," the Italians preferred to remain in Rome rather than to go into a church they knew nothing about. So we had to get free from this as best we could. We have tried to fight extremes with the word of God, avoiding scholastic theology. We also had to fight against a foreign theology that our hearts revolted at—a theology that teaches eternal decrees of damnation. We had to come simply to justification by faith, to be shown by a holy life. We have now a scriptural church in Italy, and I stand before you today to recommend it to your minds and your hearts and your pulpits.

WEEK OF PRAYER.

It is recommended by the Bishops of the church that the week of August 11–18 be observed for special religious services throughout our communion—the Friday included, as a day of fasting.

The following objects are set forth, upon which our prayers and supplications may be united:

That the Lord would send more laborers into his vineyard.

For his blessing upon our institutions of learning, and the conversion of the young.

For the increase of his kingdom among men.

WE AGREE with "An Inquirer after Knowledge," that our Sunday school exhibitions should be free from all appearance of evil, and that scenes which look like dancing, and all such half profane and half slang phrases as "good gracious," and the like, should be carefully avoided. The exceptions taken by "An Inquirer after Knowledge" were perhaps felt by other spectators, and we offer nothing in vindication. Knowing nothing about dancing ourselves, we are not prepared to judge of the matter to which our inquirer alludes. Let us hope that in future such occasions of unfavorable criticism may not occur. We are sure that no one connected with the preparations for the anniversary had the least suspicion that the most tender conscience would be afflicted.

MR. J. M. REID, an old and highly esteemed citizen of New Orleans, died on Tuesday, the twenty-first of May. Mr. Reid was a native of North Carolina, but a resident of this city for nearly forty years. In his death we have lost an upright and valuable citizen.

THY LOT is seeking after thee; therefore be at rest from seeking after it.—Arabic Proverb.

Married.

By Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, at the residence of Mrs. Harper, in Copiah county, on the twenty-third of May, Rev. HENRY P. BOWEN, of the Mississippi Conference, to Miss ELLA O. MALLEY.

Obituaries.

DIED, of whooping cough, in Newbern, Alabama, April 30, 1872, MAGGIE, infant daughter of Charles W. and S. M. Turpin, aged about four months. Thus another harp has been added to heaven's choir, another bright cherub to heaven's hosts. Another tender lamb is sweetly reposing in the arms of the great Shepherd, that the hearts of the parents may be drawn thither too.

W. A. MONTGOMERY.

DIED, on the third day of April, 1872, in Covington, Louisiana, Mr. M. J. and Mrs. F. H. Scott's darling little boy, LEGRANDE, aged seven months. The infant looked sweet even in the cold embrace of death.

Thus the blooms of life's fair bower
By the cold hand of death are riven;
This bud was nipped ere 'twere a flow'r—
In heav'n brighter hues are given.

Weep not, mourn not, for th' young that die—
They stay not long to learn life's pains—
Their forms, too fair for earth to try,—
For what we strive are their quick gains.

HENRY P. BOWEN.

DIED, of consumption, on the sixth day of December, 1871, in Holmes county, Mississippi, Mrs. SALLIE CARTER, wife of Mr. J. H. Carter, in the twenty-ninth year of her age. She was the daughter of Mr. Lewis Fonville. Bro. Fonville died a few years ago, leaving two sons and five daughters. The sons and one daughter are spared their mother for her comfort in the evening of her life. Four of the daughters have joined the father in paradise.

The family were remarkable for amiability. Sister Carter embraced religion fourteen years ago. Her light shines with a steady ray, leaving sweet assurances of rest with God for the consolation of her bereaved husband and family.

"Let the world bewail their dead,
Fondly of their loss complain;
Sister, friend, by Jesus freed,
Death to thee, to us is gain.
Thou art enter'd into joy;
Let the unbelievers mourn;
We in songs our lives employ,
Till we all to God return."

B.

MRS DORCAS CHANDLER died at the residence of her brother, Hon. Daniel Pratt, in Prattville, Alabama, April 18, 1872, in the seventy-seventh year of her age. She was a native of New Hampshire. She consecrated herself to the service of God in early life, and became a member of the Congregational Church, in whose communion she lived until 1850, when, owing to her declining health, at the solicitation of her brother, she came South, after which she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

She was married to Mr. Joseph Chandler in 1838, but her wedded life was short, as her husband lived only nine months after their marriage.

Sister Chandler was of a quiet, modest and unobtrusive disposition. She made no attempt at outward show, but, by the scrupulous observance and constant practice of Christian duties, made her ornament that of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."

Until her sense of hearing became impaired she was one of our most faithful and efficient Sabbath school teachers. In everything her hand found to do she exhibited that prominent trait of character which distinguishes the Pratt family—punctuality and perseverance.

For the last twenty years of her life she resided in the family of her sister, Mrs. Holt, where her slightest wishes were anticipated, and reciprocal love and sympathy soothed and cheered the heart that was saddened by its irreparable loss. During the last few months of her life she was a great sufferer, her disease being that of the heart. But as the hope of this life went down under the shadow of approaching death, the hope that is in Christ grew brighter, until it was swallowed up in the fruition of heaven.

I visited her often during her last illness, but never found a shadow of doubt resting on her mind. Believing that her work on earth was accomplished, she earnestly desired "to depart and be with Christ," feeling that for her "it would be far better;" yet she questioned not the wisdom of God in detaining her, and with sweet confidence she patiently suffered, and awaited the Father's call, when she calmly fell asleep in Jesus. For more than forty years a faithful follower of Christ, she now rests from her labors of love, leaving the heritage of a pure and spotless life to those who loved her on earth.

R. S. WOODWARD.

DIED, at his residence in Vienna, Louisiana, December 7, 1871, Colonel ANDREW GIBSON, after a severe illness, which his attending physicians pronounced apoplexy. For many years he had suffered much from nervous attacks, which terminated in an apoplectic stroke. He was born in Upton county, Georgia, May 14, 1814; moved to Macon county, Alabama; from thence to Jackson parish, Louisiana, where he remained till the good Master called him to rest—to fold his arms and sleep in Jesus.

The few days of his sickness were full of suffering, both mental and physical; but toward the last the all-wise One saw fit to take away consciousness, and he passed into the bright world unmindful of the sobs of his despairing family and many friends who stood around his death-bed. During the early part of his illness he repeatedly expressed his willingness to die—only regretted leaving his wife and children; for these he was deeply concerned. When his baby girl was brought to his bedside he asked that she might be kept out of his sight, saying: "It grieves me so to think I must leave her."

Being deprived of father and mother at an early age, with the care of younger brothers and sisters, he applied himself diligently to the sacred trust, thus early learning lessons of self-reliance, firmness and prudence, exercising all those rare faculties of head and heart with which he was so abundantly gifted.

A few months before his death he decided, in the calmness of his mature judgment, to live with the people of God, and attached himself to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. All who knew him, even the casual observer, took him to be an excellent, moral man; but we who heard his serious expressions of the concernments of eternity, saw his love for all good men, the purity of his purpose and action, the blamelessness of his life and innate goodness of heart, have an exalted view of his benevolent character.

In all the relations of life, in his intercourse with the world, he was conspicuous for the exercise of those virtues which are the best test of right principles, and which gave him a passport to all hearts, and secured him universal sympathy and esteem. He was gifted by nature with great decision of character, a sound judgment, a close and vigorous conception of right and wrong, a quick discernment of the true and refined, and a religious detestation of the false and frivolous—"the vanities and vices of the land." Such, indeed, was the great energy and beauty of his character that it was impossible to be many hours in his company without acknowledging his worth and superiority.

He had many sorrows, which his noble and delicate constitution of mind rendered him keenly susceptible of feeling; but they had become directed that, instead of concentrating on self, they prepared him to understand and feel for others. But such a character needs no eulogy—such a man cannot pass through life without leaving the impress of his actions as relics to others. His family and friends are bowing under the burden of this sore affliction, but are filled with consolation by reason of the victory won through the grace of God.

MR. E. E. H. ROSS, our resident advertising agent, leaves on the first of June on a tour of a few weeks to the Western and Northern cities, solely in the interests of this paper. We commend Mr. Ross to the favorable attention of our friends and patrons. Courtesies to him will be duly appreciated.

COOPER'S WELL.—See advertisement, which appears to-day.

WILLIAM BOHNE, OPTICIAN, informs his friends and the public that he has removed from 108 Carondelet street, and is now located at No. 1 Carondelet street, near Canal.

AT NOS. 95 and 97 Camp street will be found the establishment of C. Huchez, family grocer—a convenient location. Mr. Huchez offers, in his advertisement, to put up supplies for families moving over the lake, which will be taken notice of by many intending to spend the summer at some of the pleasant retreats over the lake.

WE ARE PLEASED to direct the attention of the public to Messrs. Roberts & Co.'s advertisement, whose sash, door and blind factory will be found to afford the most excellent material in that line. For faithfulness and promptness in the execution of work committed to them they are unsurpassed in the range of our knowledge.

IN THIS ISSUE appears the advertisement of Mr. E. Lalmant, corner of Claiborne and Gasquet streets, importer and dealer in French, German and American drugs, chemicals, perfumery, and all the articles usually found in a drug store. The convenience of having a druggist near at hand should be recognized by the citizens in the vicinity.

THE agency of the very popular iron cotton ties manufactured by J. J. McComb, Liverpool, England, made of the best English iron, is in the hands of Messrs. Bartlett & Rayne, 48 Carondelet street, which is a guarantee of the excellence of the articles. By referring to the advertisement a cut of the Arrow and open-slot ties will be observed, together with the address of the agents, to whom our readers are directed when in want of cotton ties.

BETHESDA MINERAL WATER.—To those afflicted by Bright's disease, diabetes, liver and bilious affections, kidney and urinary diseases, the advertisement of Mr. H. D. Huff, No. 38 Magazine street, in another column, will be found of interest. The water of these celebrated springs, we are assured, is of the greatest benefit to sufferers. Those who cannot visit the springs, situated near Waukesha, Wisconsin, can receive through the agency here these curative waters in any quantity.

ARNICA.—P. Poursine & Co., 140 Gravier street, advertise for sale the preparation of arnica made by the Monks of La Trappe. This should not be confounded with the tinctures of arnica which are prepared from the dried leaves of the plant, and lose in desiccation much of their original strength; whereas it is claimed that this extract of arnica is prepared in conditions exceptionally favorable, on the ground where the plant grows naturally, and at the time of blossoming, when it contains all its active properties.

THE names of some of our best citizens appear as officers of the New Orleans Savings Institution, 187 Canal street, which fact is of the greatest importance, insuring all transactions with this favored institution to be conducted with fairness and equity. The institution has been in existence since 1855, and that during a period of seventeen years it should have enjoyed the confidence of the public is a sufficient recommendation. The agreeable politeness, connected with the universal respect for the cashier, Mr. Jones, makes it especially pleasant for ladies who wish a place of deposit.

THE many persons now preparing for their summer journeys will do well to examine the advertisement of the Iron Mountain, and Chicago and Alton Railroads—a most desirable route in Chicago, the great Northwest, the North and the East, the connections of this line reaching in all directions. Mr. D. A. Freer, the Southern traveling agent, is one of the most energetic railroad men in the country, alive to the interest of the road he represents. His urbanity and good sense have made a most favorable impression among his acquaintances here. Tickets can be purchased at any railroad ticket office in the South.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

"The Life of the Flesh is the Blood." This being the fact, it is very obvious that when the blood becomes corrupted the whole system becomes corrupt also. To relieve this, the true policy undoubtedly is to direct the remedy to the source of the disease. It is in this manner that Dr. Tutt's Sarsaparilla acts. Its specific effect is on the blood; it purifies it, vitalizes it, and expels all distemper from the system.

Being free from violent minerals, it is adapted to general use. The old and young may use it; the most delicate female, at any time, may take it; the weak and enfeebled will be strengthened by it; the tender infant, who may have inherited disease, will be cured by it.

Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills are a mild and gentle purgative, possessing the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving congestive or torpid liver. They have no equal.

One sip of this will bathe the drooping spirit in delight beyond the bliss of dreams. Be wise, and taste.—Milton's Comus.

Verily do the words of the inspired poet gleam with the light of prophecy; for if there is anything that is swift to operate beneficially on the human system, impaired by physical ailments, it is Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Those whose lives "drag their slow length along," harassed by the petty but fretful annoyances of indigestion, dyspepsia, debility, febrile excitement, nervous irritability, exhaustion or the general suffering that results from hepatic causes, deserve the fate to which they are consigned, when, like the physician to whom the voice of sacred wisdom cried "heal thyself," they turn away from the means placed within their grasp. Price's Bitters will do the work; a vigorous stimulant, an agreeable elixir, a strengthening tonic, and a grateful adjuvant, the very universality of whose use is confirmative of their efficacy, they stand to-day stamped with the signet seal of medical approval, and radiant with the reward of a high popular appreciation.

MR. NO-BOD-EE.

I know a funny little man,
As quiet as a mouse;
That does the mischief that is done
In everybody's house;
There's no one ever saw his face,
And yet we all agree
That every plate we break was cracked
By Mr. No-bod-ee.

'Tis he who always tears our books—
Who leaves our doors ajar;
He pulls the buttons from our shirts,
And scatters pins afar.
That squeaking door will always squeak,
For, prithee, don't you see,
We leave the oiling to be done
By Mr. No-bod-ee.

The finger-marks upon the doors
By none of us are made;
We never leave the blinds unclosed,
To let the curtains fade.
The ink we never spill; the boots
That lying round you see,
Are not our boots. They all belong
To Mr. No-bod-ee. Baptist Union.

THE MOCKING-BIRD.

BY BISHOP M'TYEIRE.

There, boys, is an old friend. He sings for us and charges nothing for his song. And such singing! Jenny Lind never equaled it. He makes our country homes cheerful with his music. People in towns having no trees and bowers for him, he lives in a little house of his own.

The mocking-bird likes the habitation of man. The nest, and its young, are thus protected from their greatest enemies—snakes and hawks and foxes and wild-cats. He more than pays the expenses of his entertainment, not only with music, but by picking up the worms and insects that are hurtful to the gardens. Yet some boys are so cruel or thoughtless as to pelt and stone this innocent creature, and rob the nest of its eggs. Let us rather protect these visitors, and throw them a crumb or two. They soon learn who their friends are. Let us make friends.

The mocking-bird is an American; and good judges say he is a superior singer to the nightingale of Europe. He is here on the table-lands of Mexico, at the foot of the Rocky mountains, and in Brazil; but his favorite home is in our Southern States. He spends the winter in Louisiana and the Carolinas, and sometimes in the higher latitudes. Audubon, the great naturalist, who was born in Louisiana, and watched the habits of this bird with wonderful delight, calls him the "King of Song," and gives him the scientific title Orpheus Polyglottus. He says mocking-birds go north in summer as far as Boston, and when these travelers return, in October, the proud "Southrons" of their tribe snub and fight them, and make them very shy, but they soon get reconciled and dwell in peace.

This bird raises two broods a year, and sometimes three. The female sits on the nest two weeks, and during that season the male does his best singing to entertain her. The last broods are not so vigorous or large as the first, and this has led some people to think that there are two kinds. In April our Georgia and Alabama and Carolina readers will see the first young ones; but those who live in Maryland and Illinois will not enjoy that pleasure till the middle of May.

I love not only to hear the mocking-bird, but to watch his graceful motions as he spreads his wings to the sun like a butterfly, or skips along the ground, playing with his mate, or floats in the air, pouring out his song—too happy to sit still.

When a child I thought all mocking-birds sang alike; but closer observation has shown me that this was a mistake. You have seen a young lady that could play two or three tunes on the piano, and then if she continues to play, she must repeat; another, more cultivated, can play a dozen pieces, and another twice as many. So it is with mocking-birds; there is great difference in the extent and variety of their attainments. One soon sings out all he knows; another goes through a greater compass. And the same bird differs from himself as he learns more. I have heard one whistle the "Campbells are coming"—the first snatch of it, as the musicians say. A lady in Bowling Green, Kentucky, told me she had taught her pet to sing a bar of "Old folks at home." Two years ago I heard a gentleman in South Carolina laughing at the attempt of a mocking-bird, in his yard, to imitate a crow. One has been known to whistle up a dog—the dog thought his master called him. The chickens will dodge under cover—they hear the hawk screaming! How the saucy fellow must be amused at the success of his tricks!

Now, boys, and young people all, instead of worrying this bird, let us make friends with him; let us enter into a bargain to give him our protection for his song and service. Some persons, in cities, are glad to pay $5, and even $10 or $20, for a good singer of this tribe, and be at the expense of caging and feeding him, and yet a rude or thoughtless lad in the country will chase away a whole choir of them. So little does human nature esteem the blessings that are common, and the pleasures that are cheap! The papers say one parish in Louisiana exported fifteen hundred mocking-birds last summer.—Sunday School Visitor.

GOING HOME.

Little Mattie awakened on Thursday morning with a sore throat. By Friday the disease had so increased that the doctor was sent for. Saturday, Sunday and Monday she grew worse rather than better. On Tuesday the doctors held counsel together upon her case, but there was nothing to be done, and after a day of much suffering and restlessness, at half-past ten that night, she died. She was eleven years and six months old.

About an hour before she died she became more quiet, as she lay with her arms around her mother's neck. Presently, rising on one elbow, the other arm remaining as it was, she said:

"I want you to pray, mother."

All immediately knelt and offered the Lord's Prayer. Mattie joining in a clear, distinct voice, although previously she had spoken and had been understood only with great difficulty. After this was repeated another little prayer in verse, with which she had been familiar:

Gentle Jesus, meek and mild,
Look upon a little child;
Pity her simplicity,
Take her, Lord, to dwell with thee.

"Mattie," said her mother, "you are very sick. Have you thought that you may die?"

"I don't know, mother," she replied quickly; "I am not afraid to die. You know that if I do I shall go to heaven, and heaven is so beautiful. Jesus is there, and it is so nice, so nice there."

"But what shall I do without my little Mattie?"

"O, mother, you will come too. I shall be waiting for you—waiting by the river; and father will be there, and Walter will be there, and we will all be so happy. Emma, sister Emma," continued the dying child, "where are you?"

Emma heard the feeble but earnest call, and was instantly at her side.

"Here I am, Mattie," said she.

"Emma, I want you to come to heaven too. Give my love to Mrs. Leach, and to all my Sunday school class, and tell all the children how much I love them, and want them to come to heaven to meet me. Good-by, grandpa," she continued, taking his hand; "you will come, won't you, and grandma too?" and then turning to Mrs. L., a lady who had come in to spend the night, she added: "You must come too; and give my love to Hannah and Walter, (Mrs. L.'s children,) and tell them to love Jesus and come to heaven." When these words of affectionate remembrance were finished she began to sing: "I love Jesus, I love Jesus."

Then came other messages of love to other friends and neighbors and playmates, with similar wishes for their welfare, and after these some expressions of desire about her burial, for she fully and calmly realized that her end was near.

"Mother," said she, "I don't care where you put me."

"Is there no place," rejoined her mother, "where you would like to be buried?"

"No, mother, for you know it is only my body which will be there; my soul will be in heaven with Jesus."

The grief of the little circle around her bed grew greater and greater. But she patted her mother's cheek fondly and soothingly, saying:

"Don't cry, mother! Don't cry, Emma! I am not going to leave you just yet. I will stay just a little while longer with you."

She then gave some directions concerning the distribution of a few little keepsakes, but as the moments passed she was evidently failing.

"Mattie," said her mother, "you are tired now. Perhaps you had better rest."

"O, no, mother," she replied, "I am not tired. I have wanted to tell you of this so long, and I am so glad to get a chance to tell you now. I love to talk about it. It is so nice, so nice there."

"Mattie," said her mother, "it gives me a great deal of comfort to have you talk so, and I cannot grieve as I should if you had not said this. It would be wrong. I know you will be happy."

After resting a few moments the sick girl spoke again:

"Now, mother," said she, "I would like to be put at the head of the bed—I would like to sleep."

Her mother immediately complied with her request, commencing at the same time to sing, "Shall we gather at the river?" prompted to do so by the little sufferer's remark that she would soon be "waiting at the river."

Mattie joined her mother in singing one verse of this sweet hymn, and then, loosing her arms from her mother's neck, around which they had been lovingly resting, turned over upon her pillow, and for a few moments lay very still.

Presently she broke the silence by attempting to sing, "Jesus loves me," but her strength was only equal to two lines.

"Mother," she said, "are we almost home?"

"I think so, Mattie," was the answer. "Mother wishes she was as near home as you are."

"There's Jesus!" she exclaimed in a moment, very joyously.

"Mattie," asked her mother, "do you see Jesus?"

"Yes, I do," was her quick reply.

"How does he look to you?"

"Beautifully! beautifully!" she exclaimed—adding in an instant: "And there's father and Walter too! Where's mother?"

"Here is mother, Mattie," the mother answered, raising the child so that she could see her whom her eyes sought for in vain in the group that hovered before her. "Can't you see me, my child?"

"No," was her faint reply. Her earthly sight was failing as the spiritual vision came. And in a moment more, without a struggle, happy in the presence of the heavenly ones she recognized—Jesus and the loved ones gone to him before—she passed away, to be at rest forever with the Lord.

"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."—Congregationalist.

A LOVING HEART and a pleasant countenance are commodities which a man should never fail to take home with him. They will best season his food and soften his pillow. It were a great thing for a man that his wife and children could truly say of him: "He never brought a frown or unhappiness across his threshold."

WHILE you provide for things honest in the sight of all men, let your chief care be not to be rich in the world's estimation, but to be rich in the estimation of God—to have a good hope through grace of enjoying the everlasting inheritance which is laid up in heaven for all believers.

THE New Testament revisers have got to the twelfth chapter of Luke.

The Farm and Garden.

RAISING DUCKS.

The highest authorities in ornithology are agreed that all the varieties of the domestic duck, however different they may appear, have a common origin in the wild Mallard. Many amateurs, who share the writer's fondness for this class of domestic fowls, hold the contrary opinion, and trace the different varieties to sources equally various; but, as already said, the researches of the most scientific observers, entitled thereby to rank as authorities upon the theme, all refer the many varieties now known to the common wild Mallard.

With myself no variety or class of domestic fowls stand higher than the ducks; that they require so little room by comparison, that they are so easily kept and so free from tendency to disease, are very desirable points to be attained by the amateur breeder. A good stream of water or a pond may be considered by many indispensable to the successful raising of these fowls; but although with proper care either is of advantage, still, with the inexperienced, such a supply of water has many times caused the loss of all the ducklings, whose hatching was awaited with eager anticipation. In breeding ducks it is a frequent practice with myself to send eggs to be hatched under hens at distant farm yards, and in nearly every case the result has been most satisfactory, even when no water was within reach of the ducklings beyond that contained in a common pan. Many premium birds have been reared in this way. I can say with confidence, therefore, that my own experience demonstrates the fact that they can be raised successfully in a farm yard with simply water enough for them to drink. Still, for the thorough gratification of their natural instinct, an abundant supply of water, a stream or pond, is needful and beneficial. One mistake made by some admirers of these fowls is to allow young ducks too free access to such supplies of water as afford gratification to the older ones. This should never be done. The young should never be suffered to go near a pond or creek, nor in wet grass, until from ten to fourteen days old. Previous to that age they should be kept in a warm, dry place, and be allowed no more water than might be sufficient for them to dip their bills in. At the age of a fortnight let them have access to the larger supply, and their frolics will not only prove very amusing to the observer, but harmless to themselves.

The character of the food furnished to the young has an important bearing upon the success of duck-rearing. Soft food is so necessary to success therein as to be deemed indispensable. For the first few days after hatching, hard-boiled egg and cooked meat chopped fine should be given occasionally; but the chief supply used in my own yard is Indian meal and "ships" in equal quantities by measure, well mixed and thoroughly scalded. Use this until the ducklings are two-thirds grown; for the main article of food, afterward alternate occasionally with grain. The same is also good for old ducks. Ground worms (angle worms) and small fish are manifestly tit-bits with young ducks; and as they are not only very fond of such food, but thrive well on it, it should not be denied them. Any pains we may take to obtain it for them will be amply repaid by the eagerness and satisfaction displayed by the fowls upon receiving it. In moist seasons they will ordinarily find worms for themselves, but when none can be found their place should be supplied with fresh meat. By following the directions given above, and protecting them from their stealthy foes, the rats, no one need fear of not having success in rearing ducks, whether water is in abundant supply or not.

As to the oft-repeated query, "Which variety of ducks is the best?" I may say that I consider it a hard one to answer satisfactorily. My own preference is the Aylesbury, but for no better reason than it best suits my fancy.

As to which is most profitable for flesh and eggs, all my experience has not yet resulted in a decision between the Rouen, Aylesbury and Cayuga. The Muscovys are equal to any as egg-producers, require less water, and by many are considered the finest flavored for table use; while others, for the same reason, prefer the black Cayuga. In points of general interest, taste, on the part of some, will favor the pure white-plumage of the Aylesbury, with its pale flesh-colored bill; some choose the greenish black of the Cayuga, while others still cling to the colors of the Mallard to be found in the decided markings and changeable colors of the Rouen. Which of the above-named varieties is most hardy is also a question I cannot answer, as each has been proved to be perfectly hardy, so much as to live in our cold climate, from fall till spring, on the banks of a creek, through sun and storm, with no shelter save the canopy above.

In regard to the diseases of ducks, I can state that they are mainly occasioned by improper food. Hard food (as uncooked grain) given to young ducks will occasion sore eyes and sore beaks, and, if continued, death soon follows. The first symptom of trouble from this source is a frothy substance on the ball of the eye; next the eyes will be found closed, and upon opening them a mucous discharge follows. After this the upper mandible becomes sore and ceases to grow, soon turning purple. If the food is changed before the last stage is reached they can be saved, but not after the purple color makes its appearance. If grain could always be cooked for all kinds of fowls, a saving in keeping, as well as the health of the fowls, might be realized.

In conclusion, it might be proper to state that, although it requires a little more food to rear young ducks than chickens, their rapid growth and quick maturity fully pay for the extra expense. But at maturity no more food is required for a duck than for a hen.—Poultry Bulletin.

CURCULIO NOT SINGLE BROODED.—Northern entomologists have come to the conclusion that the plum curculio (Conotrachelus nenuphar) hatches but one brood in the course of the season; but while they may be correct, so far as relates to the Northern States, it is certainly not the true history of the insect in the South. We are confident there are at least two broods in Tennessee, and it is pretty clearly established that there are even more further down. Captain Isaac Donovan and other scientific gentlemen, of Mobile, have lately been investigating the subject with the aid of the microscope, and the result has been very interesting. In the month of August they dissected large numbers of female curculios that were well supplied with eggs apparently just ready to be laid. By this they are established in the opinion that in the latitude of Mobile and New Orleans the curculio breeds all through the season, passing on rapidly from generation to generation, as long as any fruit can be found for them to work upon.—Practical Planter.

IMPROVEMENTS IN PAINT.

Common-sense people are beginning to find out that ordinary oil and white lead are not as lasting as they should be. Many who feel compelled to paint their dwellings anew every two or three years, because the white lead flakes off, often wish they had never erected their house, for a bill of $100 every other year is a standing bugbear. Hence we are disposed to encourage any effort which will bring out any kind of paint which will last longer than our present white lead, and yet protect the woodwork fully as well. No paint should last less than three years, and five years is a great desideratum. In many sections of the West, where timber is cheap, it is considered much cheaper to rebuild a house or recover with clapboards than to attempt to paint with the evanescent ordinary white lead usually found nowadays. We see it stated that a gentleman named Artus, a European chemist, has made up a new paint with solutions of silicate of potassa or soda, and used to paint zinc and other objects. The material is something in the nature of a cement or artificial stone, and will withstand the action of the air, sun and water. It can be employed to advantage on metal roofing, also on plaster, brick and wood. Its chief value will be in rendering wood, paper and tissues uninflammable, and for this purpose ought to be generally known. The value of the mixture for cements will also attract attention to it, and we shall probably hear of its extensive use as a constituent of artificial stone. The heat of rooms under roofs painted with the mixture was found to be ten degrees less than under the unpainted metal.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

QUAKER JUMBLES.—One pound cornmeal, after weighing it, take out one small teacup of meal and put in a cup of wheat flour instead; half a pound of butter, one pound of sugar, five eggs, a small nutmeg, a wine-glass of rose-water. Mix well and drop into a hot pan from a spoon.

A GOOD DRESSING for lettuce is: "Three well-beaten eggs, three tablespoons of sweet cream, two teaspoons of made mustard, a little butter or oil, ten tablespoonfuls of vinegar, a little cayenne pepper and salt; place it on the fire and stir until it thickens. This is also a good dressing for cold cabbage."

TO BOIL FRESH FISH.—Clean, wash thoroughly, wipe dry, and then sew up in a cloth, kept solely for fish, and plunge at once into boiling water that has been first salted sufficiently. Sew the cloth up on the back of the fish. When done take it out, cut the threads down the back of the fish, and cut the skin of the fish, so that in taking off the cloth the skin will come off with it, leaving the fish white and whole. Be careful not to break the fish, as it should come to the table in good condition. Eat with egg sauce or plain drawn butter.

BOILED RICE.—One pint of rice, as new as it can be had—old rice has a dead taste—to one quart of boiling water and one tablespoonful of salt. Boil briskly a few minutes, until the water seems absorbed; then, keeping it closely covered, set on one side of the stove where it can be kept hot and steam itself done, not soft and mushy. In about half an hour it will be cooked sufficiently. Serve very hot with the meats, like potatoes. If cooked soft and watery, and stirred till gluey, as is so often done at the North, it would not be thought eatable at the South. Never stir more than once, and then only when it first boils. Some prefer only one pint of water to one pint of rice.

POULTRY-KEEPING FOR WOMEN.—There are many women who, especially within the last half dozen years while the price of eggs has been so high, make money much faster by tending poultry than by sewing. It is an occupation especially suited to women, because it involves patience and constant attention to details rather than strength. Then, again, the hardest thing for many men to learn, in handling poultry or bees, is gentleness. How many times we have seen boys, and men with no more sense than boys, jerk hens roughly from their nests, enter the poultry-house abruptly and frighten the occupants till they rush in a flutter in a mass into the farthest corner, and keep the poultry community in constant agitation and distress. But all domestic animals appreciate the manners of women attendants when they are fortunate enough to be cared for by them. Now that there are women gardeners and florists who by commendable industry and business qualities have risen to eminence in those callings, and while one of the most successful, if not the most successful, beekeepers in the whole country is a woman, we hope to see others give more attention than it has hitherto received. Aside from profit, the keeping of fine poultry for fancy is an elegant pastime, very popular with English ladies, and we see no reason why the fashion should not be adopted here.—Poultry World.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

KEMPER HALL, KENOSHA, WIS.

ON THE C. AND N. W. RAILROAD, fifty-one miles north of Chicago.
REV. GEO. M. EVERHART, D. D., Rector, formerly president of the Huntsville (Alabama) Female College.

Kemper Hall, a first-class institution for Girls and Young Ladies, elegantly equipped and appointed, offers, in every department, superior advantages. The buildings and grounds are everything that could be desired. The location, overlooking Lake Michigan, affords a view unusually picturesque. The climate, summer and winter, is equally good. Scientific.

RECENT upheavals along coastlines, according to Mr. H. H. Howorth, in Nature, are confined to land bordering the Polar sea, are greatest near the Pole, are continuous in all circumpolar areas, and diminish proceeding southward, until they cease altogether at the fifty-seventh parallel, the focus of elevation being at the Pole itself. In proof of this statement, he appeals to a variety of facts, drawn chiefly from arctic researches. Pliny, on the authority of bold Roman seamen, refers to Scandinavia as an archipelago. Ptolemy speaks of the Scandian Islands. In the seventeenth century Celsius affirmed that this country was being gradually upheaved at the rate of forty inches in a century. In our own time Lyell has found numerous indications that the Baltic has lowered since it has been inhabited by its present tenants, testacea identical with those of the sea appearing near Stockholm, seventy feet above the shore. At Soderlelge, in a bed ninety feet above the sea, shells of littoral species, and wooden vessels joined by pegs, and not far away an iron anchor with nails, had been buried probably in the sands of a beach. Near Gefle are low pastures where the last generation were accustomed to see boats or even ships floating. Experienced pilots in the Gulf of Bothnia estimate the fall of waters at two feet in thirty years. Finland exhibits all the characteristics of a recently-emerged land, being a mere congeries of lakes and swamps, separated by moss and sand from the continual falling of the level of the lakes. In the days of the Norsemen the White sea and the Gulf of Finland were, without doubt, joined by a considerable strait. In Spitzbergen recent bones and drift-wood have been detected several miles inland, far above high-water mark, and skeletons of whales thirty to forty feet above sea-level. Seal fishermen affirm that the land is rising, and, as a consequence, the seas now are too shallow for the right whale, which has forsaken the coast. The Bear Islands are mere heaps of ice and stones, evidently but recently covered with water, shoals and banks occupying at the present time what was tolerably deep water a century ago. The shores of the Polar sea, from Lena to Behring's Straits, are for the most part low and flat, but present, a short distance inland, a line of high ground parallel with the present shore, scattered with old weathered drift-wood. At Port Kennedy shells of species living at the present time in the channel have been found at the height of five hundred and fifty-seven feet, and a bone of a whale one hundred and sixty-four feet above the water-level. Dr. Hayes discovered on all the coasts the existence of ancient sea-beaches, which had gradually risen to the height of one hundred feet. Lyell's gauging the rate of emergence, from Scania, where the land is stationary, to the most northern point of Norway, where the rise is four feet in a century, indicates a higher upheaval the nearer the approach to the Pole.

PERFUME OF MOUNTAIN FLOWERS.—Sweet-smelling flowers, as a class, are found in greatest abundance in mountain regions. A large proportion of the plants growing on the high pastures of the Alps are possessed of aromatic as well as medicinal qualities. The blue forget-me-not of the Scottish mountains, the Peruvian heliotrope of the Andes, the snow rhododendron of the Sikkim Himalayas, are all possessed of exquisite fragrance, and enshrined in many a local legend. The costly spikenard of Scripture is obtained from a curious shaggy-stemmed plant called Nardostachys Jatamansi, a kind of valerian growing on the lofty mountains of India, between the Ganges and the Jumna, some of which are for six months covered with snow. All these aromatic plants of the mountain require climatic circumstances for their growth which art is in most cases incapable of supplying, and hence they cannot be cultivated with any success. When brought down into the valleys they deteriorate, losing the brilliancy and fragrance of their blossoms—in a kind of homesickness for the purer air and brighter light of the far-off summits.

THE EBB OF TIME.—An instrument has been invented that marks the "ebb of time," showing how many minutes there are remaining prior to any event. If placed in the post-office it reads, "Mails open in thirty minutes;" one minute later it reads, "in twenty-nine minutes," then in twenty-eight, and so on. At a railway station it reads, "This train leaves in ten minutes," then in nine, eight, etc., and when the index reaches 0 the train starts. Thus any passenger on entering a station knows just how much time he has for getting tickets, checks, a newspaper, and a seat, without consulting a watch or a clock to ascertain the hour of the day.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of Text-Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—should not be offensive to the pupil—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books and educators named below, which are now issuing a complete series by the eminent Southern scholars

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of that science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be prized by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. SCHELE DE VERE, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. GILDERSLEEVE, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. CARTER, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LECONTE, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. JOHNSTON, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will soon be added.

Send for our full ILLUSTRATED DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE, which will be mailed free to any teacher or school officer. Liberal terms given for introduction.

SWINTON'S CONDENSED
SCHOOL HISTORY.
(From the Virginia Educational Journal.)
Mr. Swinton's reputation led us to examine this book. What is of most importance in the work is its extreme fairness. It is vastly superior, in this respect, to any history issued at the North that we have seen. Where accuracy seems almost impossible, he comes nearer to the truth than the others.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The weather since our last issue has been warm, with cloudy showers, and highly favorable to the growing crops. Our intelligence from the country is to the same effect. In fact, the entire aspect of the cotton-growing region presents a cheering improvement, and the prospect of any serious curtailment of the yield from the previous bad weather is disappearing. The crop, nevertheless, is undoubtedly behind hand, and, coming forward a fortnight or three weeks later than last year, it will be more exposed to worms and grass. On the other hand, the indications are that there will be an increase in the product, hands having been transferred to rich lands from poor, and from some increase in white labor, although little or none in negro labor. There will also be an average increase in acreage of from 5 to 10 ₱ cent. Viewing the whole field of observation, many are coming to the conclusion that for the present we may rest on 3,500,000 bales as the probable result, to be reduced, or perhaps increased by the weather and contingencies of the year. The sugar accounts are less unfavorable.

The river is 5 feet 6 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-fourth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales.	1,115
Lake.....	9
Arkansas.....	170
Mobile.....	342
Total.....	1,636

On Saturday the market opened with a good inquiry, and a moderate amount of business was done during the morning, partly at the full prices of the day previous and partly at a further improvement; but after the later New York dispatches, quoting first an advance of ¼c. and later of ⅛c. additional, the advantage was still more on the side of the factors, and closing rates showed a general advance of ⅛c. in good ordinary, middling and the higher grades, and ¼(@⅜c. in low middling and strict low middling, which ruled disproportionably high from its scarcity. The sales embraced 4,200 bales. On Monday the demand continued fair, but the movement was checked by scant supplies, and under the influence of a further advance of 1-16d. at Liverpool, and the stimulus of exciting accounts from New York, where middling uplands rose ½c. and Orleans ⅛c., both commanding the same figures, while futures ruled ¼(@⅜c. higher, factors were enabled to establish a further improvement of ⅛(@¼c., good ordinary closing at 21½@21⅝c., low middling at 22¾(@23⅛c., middling at 23⅜c., strict middling at 23½@23⅝c., and good middling at 23⅞c. The sales embraced 1,550 bales. On Tuesday the demand continued fair, and, although the movement was checked by scant supplies and the high pretensions of factors, 1,750 bales changed hands at irregular prices, showing a further improvement of ⅛c., in some cases of ¼c.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 942,809 bales, against 1,354,739 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,113,387 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 80,184 to France, and a decrease of 798,672 to Great Britain, and of 316,906 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Low ordinary.....	17½ @ 18
Ordinary.....	18½ @ 20½
Good ordinary.....	21½ @ 22
Low middling.....	22½ @ 23½
Middling.....	23½ @ —
Strict middling.....	23½ @ 23⅝

OATS.—On Tuesday 1,600 sacks sold in lots at 56@57c. ₱ bushel, a lot of St. Louis selling at 55c. ₱ bushel.

BRAN.—On Tuesday the market was firm. There was a light supply and fair demand. 250 small sacks sold at $1.20, and 300 large sacks at $1.25 ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Tuesday the market was dull, and mess was offering at $13 per bbl., without sales, though a lot of 50 bbls. mess, in store, brought $13.25 ₱ bbl. It is retailing at $13.50 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—On Tuesday the market was very dull, and prices were easier for buyers. 9 casks shoulders and 19 do. clear sides sold on private terms; 10 casks shoulders at 5⅜c. and 10 do. clear sides at 8¼c. ₱ lb. Shoulders were quoted at 5¾c.; clear rib sides 7⅝c.; clear sides 8¼c. ₱ lb.

HAMS.—There is a continued scarcity of the favorite brands of choice sugar-cured hams. They are in demand, and command 11¾(@12¼c. ₱ lb. readily—a material advance.

DRY SALT MEAT.—Shoulders held by dealers are retailing at 5¾(@5¾c. ₱ lb. They might be quoted from first hands at 5(@5⅛c. ₱ lb., and are offering to arrive at 4⅞c. ₱ lb.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

DETROIT, MICH., May 29.—The Presbyterian General Assembly today disposed of the reports of the Finance and Mileage Committees. Six cents per member was fixed upon as the assessment for Assembly purposes for the next year.

A memorial from the Presbytery of Brooklyn on the subject of women occupying the pulpit in churches, was answered as follows:

That there is no necessity for a change in the constitution of the church, and memorialists are referred to the deliverance of 1832, which expresses the judgment of this Assembly. This action declares that meetings of pious women by themselves for conversation and prayer are entirely approved of, but to teach or exhort, or lead in prayer in public and promiscuous assemblies, is clearly forbidden to women in the holy oracles.

NEW YORK, May 29.—In the Methodist Conference to-day the Committee on the State of the Church reported in favor of inserting a clause in the Discipline, forbidding dancing, drinking spirituous liquors, theater-going, the use of sinful words or the display of bad temper. A warm debate ensued on the question.

EUTAULA, ALA., May 29.—Hon. John Gill Shorter, ex-Governor of Alabama, is dead.

DETROIT, MICH., May 30.—The Presbytorian General Assembly resolved to meet next year in Baltimore.

MEMPHIS, May 31.—George F. Clarke, alias Fisher, aeronaut, attached to Noyes' Circus, made an ascension from the bluffs in front of the city this afternoon; the balloon drifted southeast, striking Jackson Block, severing the cords sustaining the trapeze on which he was seated. He fell to the ground, a distance of sixty or seventy feet, breaking both legs and one arm, and cutting and bruising him terribly. Medical aid was summoned, but it is not believed he will live through the night. His parents reside at Columbus, Ohio.

NEW YORK, May 31.—The Methodist Conference to-day elected Rev. Dr. R. R. Nelson, of Wyoming, and John Phillips, of Cincinnati, layman, book agents for New York city.

BROOKLYN, May 31.—Leading members of the Baptist denomination in this city are about to start a new paper, with Rev. Mr. Patten, of Utica, as editor. The paper is to be noncommittal on the great questions that divide the Baptist Church on open communion, Bible union, and the relations of the denomination to the Bible Society.

WASHINGTON, June 1.—In the United States District Court orders were made for the payment of Dr. Cornelius Boyle, H. B. Taylor and the administratrix of C. S. Wallach, of this city, of the proceeds of the sales of their property here, made under the confiscation act.

Under the amnesty act they became entitled to whatever sum the United States has derived from the confiscation of their estates, less the costs, which were comparatively enormous, amounting, in one of the cases, to $1,500. These parties left here and served in the Confederate army. H. B. Taylor had been a major in the Federal service.

LOUISVILLE, June 1.—The Shelbyville Female College, at Shelbyville, was destroyed by fire on Thursday night. Loss about $15,000.

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., June 1.—The Supreme Court, to-day, declared W. D. Blonham, Conservative, to have been elected Lieutenant Governor of the State in 1870, he having received the largest number of votes cast at the election then held. Mr. Blonham was sworn in.

NEW YORK, June 1.—James Gordon Bennett is dead, aged seventy-seven.

The Methodist Conference to-day elected E. O. Haven secretary of the Church Educational Society. The report of the Committee on the State of the Church, censuring sinful amusements, was again taken up, and finally adopted by a vote of 189 to 75.

The Committee on Temperance reported a series of resolutions declaring in favor of legal prohibition of the sale of liquors; that dealers should be made responsible for the woes inflicted on communities; that members of the church should not rent property for liquor stores or in any way countenance the traffic.

The Methodist Conference voted to adjourn sine die on Tuesday.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—Congress agreed to prolong the session to Monday, June 10, with the understanding that no business be done during the Philadelphia Convention.

NASHVILLE, June 2.—A sleeping car on the Nashville and Northwestern railroad overturned this morning, by breaking an axle, near Pegram station, nineteen miles from Nashville. Five passengers were in the car at the time, and Mrs. H. Weatherford, of Memphis, killed; Miss Gracy Curtis, of Memphis, had a thigh broken, and was otherwise hurt. Others escaped with slight bruises.

NEW YORK, June 3.—In the General Conference to-day the Committee on the State of the Church reported that all differences between this church and the Methodist Church South were harmoniously settled, and they proposed a committee to confer with the leaders of the Church South to bring about fraternal relations between the two churches. Several delegates spoke in favor of this project. The report of the committee was unanimously adopted by a rising vote.

NEW YORK, June 4.—In the Methodist Conference Rev. Dr. Fuller offered a resolution to establish a colored Conference in the territory now occupied by Georgia and Alabama Conferences. After some discussion the resolution was tabled.

A resolution was adopted to send a delegation of their members to confer with the Methodist Church South with a view to harmonizing all differences.

FOREIGN.

BREMEN, June 1.—The steamer Rein sailed to-day with Herr Johann Strauss and husband, the Emperor William's Cornet, Quartette and Prussian band for the Boston Jubilee.

LONDON, June 2.—The Observer states that the cabinet yesterday had under consideration the treaty of Washington and last communication from the American government concerning the supplementary article. No solution, says the Observer, has yet been arrived at which is likely to conciliate the two elements in regard to the article. A final decision from the American government is expected here within twenty-four hours.

BERLIN, June 4.—A bill will soon be presented in the Reichstag directed against the Jesuits. It is understood that it will deprive members of that order of the right of citizenship.

ESTIMATING the present population of the earth at 1,325,000,000, we may safely say that one-third of the whole are nominally Christian, having heard of the way of life by the gospel and having embraced its religion in some form. One-half of this third is included in the Roman Catholic communion. We may in round numbers state the proportions of the several religions in the following figures:

Christians	400,000,000
Buddhists	300,000,000
Other Asiatic religions	260,000,000
Pagans	200,000,000
Mohammedans	165,000,000

To take the map of the world and see where these religions are distributed, it will be soon perceived that the Christian religion is far more concentrated than the others, and that vast regions of Asia and Africa are still in the dominion of those systems that Christianity seeks to overthrow. And two facts must be counted as of great importance in the study of this subject. One is, that Christianity only is aggressive. Paganism does not send its agents to proselyte. The sword of the false prophet is no longer bathed in the blood of foes. Christianity—which is peace on earth and good will to men—is going from land to land with its triumphs of love, and asking the nations to receive it. India is already under a Christian government. The other fact is, that those nations only which are Christian make important contributions to the arts and sciences, which adorn and attest civilization. This is a great factor to be estimated in calculating the probable result of the struggle between Christianity and false religions. The majority of numbers is with the enemy. With us is the strength of fact, to say nothing of abstract truth about which we are contending.—New York Observer.

IT IS RELATED of Lessing that he was occasionally so absent-minded that once he knocked at his own door, when the servant, not recognizing her master, looked out of the window and said: "The professor is not at home." "Oh, very well," replied Lessing, composedly walking away, "I will call again."

Japan Emancipated by a Decree of Religions Toleration.

Another important stage has been reached in that wonderful revolution which has been going on in Japan during the last four years. The Mikado has issued an imperial decree abolishing the edicts against Christianity, some of which have been in force for more than three centuries. This result has been reached as noiselessly and with as little apparent outside pressure as the changes which preceded it, and which have taken the whole world by surprise. While Christians in this country were deliberating and praying in regard to the best mode of bringing the subject before the authorities in Japan, and while they were almost afraid to address the embassy, now in this country, on the subject, lest the great object in view should be impeded instead of advanced; he who has the hearts of kings in his hands, and who turneth them whithersoever he will, has quietly moved the ruling powers to take one more step in the onward progress of the empire, and allow the people to embrace Christianity if they are so disposed.

The very proclamation of this decree will be like a proclamation of the gospel from one end of the empire to the other, and we cannot but hope that important results will speedily follow. It is well known that there have been converts to Christianity under the labors of the Protestant missionaries, who have been deterred from making a public profession of their faith by the ancient edicts, which jeoparded not only their liberty, but their lives. Some of these converts have been secretly baptized. Now that the Christian religion is tolerated and Christians are protected by imperial authority, we may look for a great enlargement of missionary labor, and an increase of the fruit of those labors.

It was natural that the Buddhists, who had been recently restored in a measure to imperial favor, should resist the recent action of the government, and it is stated that when the decree was made known the Buddhist priests protested against this act. Ten unarmed priests attempted to force themselves into the Emperor's grounds to have an interview. They were met at the grand gate, and, refusing to halt, five were cut down and the others retreated. Judging from the experience of the last few years, the people will generally acquiesce in the action of the government in this important measure.—New York Observer.

OUR EXCELLENT FRIEND, the Rev. Mr. Trask, may find an "awful example" with which to illustrate his lectures against tobacco in the instance of M. Klaes, recently deceased in Holland. He was a collector not of books or paintings, but the pipes of all nations, arranged in chronological order, from the days of Sir Walter Raleigh to the present day. And, unlike some other collectors, he made personal use of the works he had brought together. He invited all the smokers of his neighborhood to attend his funeral, which we may be sure they did in large numbers, since he ordered to be given them each ten pounds of tobacco and two pipes of the latest and most approved fashion, with his name, arms, and date of death engraved on the same. The company were to smoke during the funeral services and empty the ashes of their pipes upon his coffin, which was lined with the cedar of his old cigar boxes. It also contained a packet of old Dutch tobacco, his favorite pipe, and the means of lighting the same, which shows that he did not anticipate going where such provisions were superfluous. The poor in his vicinity were to have annually, on the anniversary of his death, ten pounds of tobacco and a small cask of beer. It is calculated that this eminent person had smoked four tons of tobacco in the eighty years which he lived on earth before his pipe went out. This is a demoralizing result, we must allow; but he was probably preserved by smoke, like one of his national herrings.—Independent.

"MR. SPEAKER," said a member of the Jamaica Legislature, discussing a bill for the regulation of the timber trade, "I know these timber merchants to be most egregious rascals—I was in the timber line myself twelve years."

FROM THE WORK.

The Meridian District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Meridian District Conference closed its session in Shubuta, Mississippi, May 25, Bishop J. C. Keener in the chair. The several points of business were taken up in order, and a rigid examination made into the condition of the several charges. A good deal of valuable information was elicited as to the temporal and spiritual interests of the church in this section of our Zion, and the causes which operate against its prosperity. On Sabbath Bishop Keener preached us two very able gospel sermons. At the close of the second he came down into the altar and exhorted the church, and talked to mourners with the zeal and persistency of an apostle. May he live long to bless the church with such labors. Several persons, before the service closed, rose up and gave him their hands in token that God had blessed them that evening. Nine persons united with the church during the conference session. The people of Shubuta entertained the conference handsomely and hospitably.

WM. B. HINES, P. E.

Montana.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to address a few lines to the sisters of our church through your paper. We need holy, devout, zealous Christian women out here to counteract the sweeping influence of demoralization. What an encouragement it would be to me, standing almost alone in this wide field of labor! May God help you to decide, and open the way for you. We need praying women who are not ashamed nor afraid to pray in the great congregation. We want Sunday school teachers and others who will stand and speak for Jesus in the highways and hedges—those who can sing the sweet songs of Zion, and those whose husbands have been called of the Lord. "Go preach my gospel; go teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

Your sister in Christ,

M. C. FLOWERS.

DIAMOND CITY, MEAGHER CO., Montana Territory, May 12, 1872.

Dayton and Spring Hill, Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Our second quarterly meeting was held on Saturday and Sunday last. Having commenced with fast-day services on Friday, we continued until Monday night. Our faithful and efficient presiding elder, Rev. A. J. Briggs, was at his post in good time, and preached to the profit of the people. He left with us a revival influence, which we hope will develop into a fruitful harvest to the church.

On Wednesday the Sunday school celebration, under the direction of the prompt superintendent, Colonel L. W. Reeves, passed off pleasantly. The children were not worn out with a long speech, but marched at once from the church to the grove, where they spent the day in enjoying the innocent pleasures—of which the elegant dinner constituted a part—of this children's galaday.

All things considered, the outlook of this entire charge (Dayton and Spring Hill) is encouraging. The prospect was gloomy at first, but, thank God, the light of faith and hope begins to dawn, and we trust that before the close of the year the whole horizon will be radiant with the glory of revival power. Your paper is circulated to some extent, and but for the extreme scarcity of money would be taken more extensively. I will be able soon, however, to send you a small list of new subscribers, and in the fall a good many more. Yours, etc.,

J. MARSHALL BROWN.

DAYTON, ALA., May 18, 1872.

Brandon, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: We have had quite a revival interest in our community since Conference—several additions to the different branches of the church.

Our congregations are fine and attentive, prayer meetings are well attended, and we have inaugurated class meetings. I am happy to say that they are large, and at times very spiritual, reminding us of the early days of our beloved Methodism.

On our arrival at this station we met a very cordial reception. The official board made liberal arrangements for our comfort. They adopted the monthly plan to meet the expenses of the station; and, be it said to the credit of this liberal, kind-hearted people, we have not been compelled to go in debt for a single article for our comfort, and have considerable funds now in the hands of the treasurer of the official board. And that is not all, Mr. Editor. We are hard at work building our church, with good hope of getting it ready for Conference. We have the foundation complete, the carpenters at work, and a good portion of the brick and other material is already on the ground. My brother, can't you speak a good word for us to the liberal public. One of the most prominent and worthy commission houses in your city sent us a contribution of $100 in material last week. The name of the firm you shall know at a proper time, for I do hope our good people will remunerate by patronizing so worthy a firm. I think a good word from you might induce others to follow their liberal example. Colonel A. G. Mayers, by the election of the committee, is superintending the building. He is the proper one to communicate with. His address is Brandon, Mississippi. I noticed in your last issue that our beloved Bishop Keener was in Tennessee, dedicating a church, and collecting money to liquidate the church debt. Can't he give us a similar lift in Brandon? If so, let me know in time to give our people notice. I will insure him a warm reception and a liberal response, for you know that all the Bishop needs to influence the good people to devise liberal things is a hearing. We close with the hope that with your influence we will get an addition to our subscription, especially as we promise to do all we can to increase the number of subscribers to your most excellent paper. Your brother in Christ,

G. F. THOMPSON.

BRANDON, MISS., May 27, 1872.

Bible Work in Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: Our Bible meeting was held in the Baptist church at Greenville. The meeting was addressed by the agent, and the pastors of the Methodist and Baptist churches. That society is in fine working order; has done a good work. It is out of debt, and has a capital of nearly three hundred dollars. I would say to the preachers of all the churches in that part of the State that they can obtain Bibles from the Greenville Bible Society at cost.

I found Bro. Barker, the pastor of the Methodist church, well provided for and in fine spirits, doing a permanent work. The Methodists are building their new church, to cost about twelve thousand dollars. They expect to finish it by October. Success to their noble efforts. Bro. Dow. Perry is acting as coiporteur in Conecuh and Monroe counties. He is a most efficient agent, and is doing a good work. I do hope the ministers and churches generally will aid him in his work, not only in circulating the Holy Scriptures, but in raising money to aid the Montgomery Bible Society, which employs Bro. Perry to canvass those counties. Bro. Perry embraces in his large field Camden and Dallas counties, west of the Alabama river.

Our Bible meeting was held in the Methodist church at Tuskegee. The anniversary was both profitable and interesting. The Tuskegee Bible Society was the first society organized in the South after the war. Rev. J. Motley has been president, and has kept the depository. Through his good management the county has been canvassed, and more than a thousand copies of the word of life have been circulated. The society is about out of debt, and some capital over. The society has began again to canvass their field, and specially look after the wants of the negroes.

I found the church in fine condition—the congregation too large for the old church. Bro. Smith has a fine congregation. The Tuskegee Female College, under Bro. Price and his able corps of assistants, is in a most healthy and prosperous condition. It is refreshing to our hopes in these days of adversity and trial to see over a hundred of our young ladies, all educated and religious, going out to all parts of the State to help build up society and bless the church. I must not forget Tallassee, and my good old friend, Bro. Turrentine. I found him in the midst of a gracious revival. Bro. McCarty, his presiding elder, had been preaching, with Bro. Dowdell, for several days; both had left. Bro. Turrentine is now seventy-two years old, and was superannuated at the Annual Conference held at Montgomery year before last. The soldier remonstrated against the action of the Conference, protesting his ability to do full duty. I found his station in such a blaze of prosperity that it led me to inquire of his labors. He showed me, from his book, that he had up to the eighth of May made seven hundred and thirty-two pastoral visits; had visited all the families—Methodists, Baptists, Episcopalians and Presbyterians; talked to them and prayed with them; and, besides all this, had taught the Bible class in Sunday school, attended all his week-day prayer meetings, and preached twice on Sunday. The whole community had felt his godly influence.

THE BOW IN THE CLOUDS. Edited by the Right Rev. William Bacon Stevens, D. D., LL. D. Philadelphia: Hubbard Bros. Cincinnati: C. F. Vent. Boston: George M. Smith & Co. Auburn, New York: F. M. Smith. Octavo, 360 pages.

A most elegant volume as to binding, paper, print and engravings, and the contents are of the highest order of merit. It is a book for the afflicted, and adapted to instruct and console the bereaved and troubled. THE SCIENCE OF WEALTH. A manual of political economy, embracing the laws of trade, currency and finance, condensed and arranged for popular reading and use as a text book. By Amasa Walker, LL. D. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1872.

"The Science of Wealth" was first published by Little, Brown & Co., Boston, 1866. The present volume is an abridgment or condensation prepared from the sixth edition of that work. It is a volume not too large for general reading, and should be in the hands of the young men of the country. The author's views, so far as we have examined them, are judicious, and he handles the subject in a clear and forcible style. He deals with such features of present interest as taxation, protection, and that tremendous movement of the hour—labor combinations. For sale by R. J. Harp, Depository, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. Price, $2.

THOUGHT-HIVES. By Theodoro L. Cuyler. New York: Robert Carter & Bros. 1872.

The author is the well-known Presbyterian preacher of Brooklyn, and a prolific writer for several of the leading journals. Dr. Cuyler is a lively and entertaining writer, and always profitable to his readers. His pen is ready, graceful, light, but never flippant. "Thought-Hives" is a quaint title, but it covers a most interesting series of articles on a variety of practical religious topics, the most of which appeared originally in the Independent and other papers. For sale at the Depository, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. Price, $1.75.

ISOULT BARRY OF WYNSCOTE. Her diurnal book. A tale of Tudor times. By Emily Sarah Holt. New York: Robert Carter & Bros. 1872.

A duodecimo of 524 pages, beautifully bound in green and gold. It is a historical tale—more history than fiction—embraces persons and events of great interest, and describing a period in English history of stirring incident. The religious tone is wholesome, and especially so as to exposing the idolatry and other perversions of popery. For sale by R. J. Harp, Depository, New Orleans. Price, $1.50.

ELEMENTARY DRAWING-BOOK. By J. G. Chapman, N. A. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago. 1871. Price, $1.50, sent by mail, postpaid.

There are 87 quarto pages, containing a progressive course of practical exercises adapted to schools and home instruction. There are fifty-six exercises in the book, with full instructions and with well-executed diagrams and drawings. It is a work of much value, and one for which we know of no substitute—the best in its way that we have seen.

THE CHIMPANZEE'S COMPLAINT.

A healthy old ape from the Cape of Good Hope,
With a fine head of hair, and a tail like a rope,
On hearing that Darwin had ventured to claim
Relationship with him, pronounced it a shame.

Said he: "'Twas provoking enough to be called
A quadrumanous mammal; but nothing has galled
My sensitive nature to such an extent
As this most presumptuous claim of descent.

"This man, whose audacity made me so spunky,
Wrote a volume to prove his grandfather a monkey;
And that very man has some ancestor dead
With a prehensile tail and elongated head

"I readily grant that some men are as good
As any ourang-outang found in the wood;
But fellows like Darwin are going too far
In trying to be something more than they are.

"So I enter my protest against the great wrong.
And the Jacous Vulgaris my wail shall prolong.
Else Darwin to Ceylon would emigrate soon
To pass himself off for a second baboon."

"THE M. E. CHURCHES, NORTH AND SOUTH."

MR. EDITOR: Such is the heading of an article in the last number of the Southern Review. As far as I have seen an expression of opinion in our papers, the article has been universally approved, and its publication in the Nashville Advocate has been called for. Perhaps this universal approval ought to deter the inexperienced especially from uttering sentiments contrary to the article; however, with your permission, Mr. Editor, I will give my opinion.

After reading the article very carefully a number of times, I was forcibly impressed with some of the introductory statements, such as the following: "The coloring in which most men see events is taken from their own propossessions and sentiments. The disinterestedness necessary to an accurate judgment is rarely attained. * * * This is eminently true where men are themselves interested in the case. Prejudice warps the understanding, and prejudice is supreme where it is reinforced by interest." "Partisanship never runs so high as between parties nearly related to each other. Family feuds are proverbially bitter. * * * No friendly silence comes to hush the wrongs of an unhappy past into oblivion." How true, and yet how sad!

Our church papers are constantly setting forth the wrongs we have suffered at the hands of the Northern Church. To do this effectually, resolutions and addresses of Northern Conferences, editorials and speeches, during the war and just before, are brought out from pigeon-holes and printed in capitals and italics, that every one may see for himself how they wronged us, and how vile they themselves were. Of course our own utterances during those sad days are forgotten, or palliated by saying that we were only giving "moral support" to the Confederacy. How flippantly our writers charge the Northern Church with stealing, plundering and robbing. Even the Quarterly uses the expression "ecclesiastical plunderers," and afterward adds: "We can do no otherwise than hold the Church North, as a church, responsible for this predatory movement, (the movement upon our church buildings.) * * * This church, as a church, stands thus convicted before the world. Every particular Bishop, every partienlar preacher, every particular editor, by his silence and his acquiescence, becomes particeps criminis." Again: "The great body of the private members of the church are to be held blameless. They do not know the facts." Still the church is convicted. Truly, "no friendly silence comes to hush the wrongs of an unhappy past into oblivion."

I suppose the Northern papers indulge in equally offensive language toward us. Many perhaps believe that we are cut-throats, midnight assassins, and evil-workers generally. "No friendly silence comes." Would to God that the "silence" would come, or, at least, that the spirt of love, contrition, forbearance and forgiveness would come!

The writer in the Quarterly asks: "Does the Southern Church stand for anything as against the Northern? Does it embody any principle vital to the Christian commonwealth that the other does not? Is it, as a Methodist organization, the sole custodian of any truth of high value in the ecclesiastical constitution? * * * No church has any right to be, unless it stands for something." Here are several questions directed to the same point, and one proposition. I suppose the author means that every church should have some special duty intrusted to it, and that the Methodist Episcopal Church South is thus favored.

Of course, if a church has no duty to perform, it had better disband. But what is the great duty of the Methodist Church? I read in our Discipline (edition of 1856) as follows: "We believe that God's design in raising up the preachers called Methodists, in America, was to reform the continent, and spread scriptural holiness over these lands." Then follows some proof. Were our Bishops right when they wrote that? If right then, is it still true? Or has some change taken place? Has God changed his designs, or has the church mapped out its own plans, independent of God's designs? I think the great work of all churches is to preach salvation and spread scriptural holiness.—When our church loses sight of this great object as its special object, and becomes the champion of some ecclesiastical organic law, I think it will do well to furl its banner and retire from the contest.

But I understand from the article that every church, to be entitled to an existence, must have something specially in charge—something that no other church has—a work which no other church can do. Then he shows, by an array of facts and a number of assertions, that the Northern Church forsook the gospel and turned to politics, and afterward degenerated into partisanship; that it became lawless, assuming the power to condemn men contrary to law, or without law, as in the case of Bishop Andrew and the Rev. Mr. Harding; that their Conferences, Bishops, preachers, editors—"all, with a common lust of acquisition, strengthened each other's hands in the crime" of plundering, and then have added falsehood, evasion and hypocrisy to their other crimes. Well, that is had enough. Now I infer that the Methodist Church South, according to the author, is specially intrusted with the duty of putting down all these nefarious practices. In fact, he says as much. God "has reserved to himself a Methodist Church in this country against the time of trial. When apocalyptic portents shall shadow and darken the land, let us pray that he may have one church at least—and let us trust that he may have more than one—that shall have kept unspotted garments, and have no part nor lot with Babylon." That is the old story, in substance—"God is on our side." "He has reserved us." "We are the chosen people of the Lord." We heard the same during the war, but somehow or other we got along rather badly toward the last. Our author may be correct, however, in his statement that God has reserved us. It is a thought very full of consolation. But what has he done with others?

Now I am glad to say that I do not believe all the author's statements in reference to the wickedness of the Northern Church. I doubt if he believes them himself. I question very much if he believes that Bishop Morris, Dr. Durbin, Dr. Harris, Dr. Slicer, and a host of others, are "ecclesiastical plunderers;" "that all, with a common lust of acquisition, strengthened each other's hands in the crime" of taking churches.

I do believe that some Northern preachers have been guilty of great wrongs—that the South has been misrepresented, yea vilely slandered, by some persons. I believe that the division in 1844-45 was necessary and proper, for the reason set forth in our Discipline, (edition of 1856;) that an organic reunion is now impracticable. But these things I can believe without believing that the Northern Methodist Church is a corrupt organization, and all her preachers plunderers.

A few words as to the cause of the division of the church. I know that it is now generally denied by our writers that slavery was the cause of the division. We may hair-split about it as much as we please, but at last we have to admit that had there been no slavery there would have been no division.

Let the General Conference speak for itself. See Discipline of 1856, pages 9 and 10: "In the judgment of the delegates of the several Annual Conferences in the slaveholding States, the continued agitation of the subject of slavery and abolition in a portion of the church, the frequent action on that subject in the General Conference, and especially the proceedings of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of 1844, in the case of the Rev. James O. Andrew, D. D., one of the Bishops, who had become connected with slavery by marriage, produced a state of things in the South which rendered a continuance of the jurisdiction of that General Conference over the Conferences aforesaid inconsistent with the success of the ministry in their proper calling."

Here is a very plain and a sufficient reason for the division. Such was the state of things in the South, produced by the proceedings of the General Conference, that Methodist preachers in connection with that body could not have access to the slave-owners and their slaves. Therefore the division followed, and ought to continue until such changes take place that we can be more successful in saving souls by reuniting with the Northern Church. That time, in the opinion of many, will never come. But if it ever should come, and the Churches North and South fail to unite their destinies, they will be false to the future glory of Methodism.

FIAT JUSTITIA.

THE "ONE-MAN POWER."

MR. EDITOR: It is well known that Episcopal Methodism has suffered much from outside misrepresentations and misunderstandings of our laws respecting episcopal authority. It is the point where we are most easily assailed, and more injured in the estimation of others than almost any other. Misrepresentations here often make us misunderstand ourselves.

Episcopal authority and prerogative furnish more objection to us than perhaps all other things. Those iron-wheel and iron-heel misteachings seem to be periodical; and this is a period of their recurrence in some places.

Allow me, therefore, if the editor pleases, a few explanatory observations touching the law at this point.

In the first place, I understand that the laws of the Methodist Episcopal Church South do not confer authority or prerogatives, but rather assign or impose duties on all her officers—Bishops and all others.

Secondly, the duty of the Bishop in the making of appointments of the preachers, where those unnecessary complaints lie, is of a judicial rather than an executive character. The Bishop at the Conference annually appoints all the preachers to their several fields of labor; and in the interim changes and reappoints whenever he sees it necessary. Now this would be very likely to work hardship occasionally, and give room for those complaints, if the Bishop had power to execute such appointments—that is, to enforce his order. But he has no such authority. He makes the appointment, and there his duty in the premises ceases forever. He has not only no authority or power to make the man go to the work, but he does not and never can know officially whether he went or not; or if he went, whether he staid or preached, or how much or how faithfully. In all this matter of going to an appointment, or staying, the preacher is not responsible to the Bishop, but solely and exclusively to other departments of the church government. The Bishop's duty and cognizance of the matter ceases forever the moment he makes and promulgates the appointment.

The propriety of this measure is obvious. On making the appointment it is frequently impossible for him to know whether it will be practicable for the man to meet it or not. Some unknown impediment may exist at the time, or arise the next day. And secondly, the Bishop is not the proper person to judge of the weight of such an impediment. He is but one man, and no one man should have so much power over another. Nor is he the right kind of man. He does not stand in the same category.

The law makes the preacher himself, the judge, in the first instance, of the amount of inconvenience or sacrifice it will impose upon him. If he judges it too great he does not go. It is the duty of the presiding elder, or, if he be a presiding elder, of the preachers in the district, to know and report to the Annual Conference whether the appointed man went or not, or staid, and preached when he went. And the Conference—the whole Conference—judges of the fitness or sufficiency of the reasons, in each particular case, why the man did not go or did not stay. The Bishop has no voice in the matter. He merely presides, but has not even a vote. The Bishop makes the appointment in the nature of a judicial decision, but has nothing to do with the execution of it. The Conference has exclusive control of that.

A preacher, then, is perfectly safe and content that the Bishop make his appointment, provided always, that if he does not go to it, or does not stay, his whole Conference—men standing in the same category with himself, and liable the next hour or next day to be before the Conference on a similar question—shall judge in the case. The preachers are the men who make the sacrifices, and so are the best judges of them.

Then where is this scarecrow of great and undue episcopal authority? The Bishop has no authority at all—that is, none that can reach the man. He can write the man's name opposite a certain pastorate, and there his duty and his power cease. He cannot, as Bishop, be informed whether he went or not—that is, he cannot complain of him, or arraign or punish him for not going. The Conference gets its information, whether the man went or not, from the presiding elder, or some other member of Conference—usually from the man himself. And though, in possible cases, the presiding Bishop made the appointment himself, he has no right to express his opinion about it. To do so would give ground of complaint of him, before the General Conference, for partiality in the chair.

This check upon the Bishop cautions him to make such appointments as the man and his Conference will approve; otherwise the appointment is a dead letter.

Then where is this great, frightful "one-man power," so much talked of—I would suppose, because so much misunderstood—by our opponents? It is a mere bugbear. I know of no mode of fixing the relation of pastor and people more free from objection on the part of the incumbent, and be reasonably efficient. Some of us have witnessed its practical operation for thirty or forty years, and although there was seldom, if ever, a Conference where there were not some, more or less, who did not go to the appointment, yet I never knew a Bishop to interfere about it, or a man to be punished, or scarcely seriously complained of in such premises. The Bishop never says, "Go," "You must go," or anything of the sort, nor does he ever complain of a man for not going. Our obligations are not to the Bishop, but to the church. We never promise to obey the Bishop, but to obey the laws of the church.

These things need to be better known than they are.

ITINERANT.

For the Advocate.

INTEMPERANCE.

Intemperance, the bane of existence, the destroyer of life and happiness—how can tongue or pen portray the misery, the degradation into which it sinks its infatuated subjects!

See that home, the abode of peace and happiness, where the wife and mother, with beaming face, sits beside the bright hearth, cheerfully performing some labor of love, now and then glancing around the snug, handsome apartment, replete with evidences of thoughtful, loving care for her comfort and that of the darling little ones who stand by the window, eagerly watching for father! And when the well-known step is heard, mark the joyful haste with which they meet him to get the first kiss, followed by the smiling mother, who, if she does not get the first kiss, is always sure of the fervent, lingering hand-clasp, and low, deep-toned "God bless you," that sinks so deeply into her soul. With a happy glance at the neat, well-spread board, the arm-chair placed before the fire, and the warm slippers lying cozily beside it, he seats himself, with the babies on his knee and the mother by his side, and, throwing aside the dull cares of life, he basks in the sweet, sacred happiness of home.

But he indulges in a glass of wine now and then, believing himself too firm, too zealous for the happiness and honor of those dear ones, to ever become intoxicated. Alas, for human resolves! the time comes when those pleasant evenings are changed into hours of dreary watching for a dreaded footstep! Ah! no more eager haste now to meet the once-idolized father! But, with their little hearts bleeding from the cruel taunts of the world, and crushed by the cold and hunger that threaten their innocent lives, they crouch in the corner of the wretched building, shrinking from the expected blow!

And the wife! What is all the poverty and wretchedness which she battles with, to the bitter knowledge that the one for whom she has given the ties of childhood, and, trustingly placing her hand in his, pledged at God's altar her heart's fealty, has lost even her respect—can claim but shrinking duty!

Too well do we know and feel the truth of this picture. And how much could be added to it—the death-bed, when, the reason maddened with drink, the soul goes shrieking into the stern, inflexible presence of its Maker! The evils of intemperance are accumulating over our land. Something should be done, something must be done, to arrest its progress. We who bear the name of Christians must commence this reformation in ourselves. We must remember that we have a cause to shield from aspersion. We must cast this impurity from our lives ere we can hope to influence others. Many think it no harm to take a glass of wine now and then—partly for its strengthening influences, partly from a desire to avoid wounding a friend, or fearful of causing remark. But total abstinence must be our motto. How can we give precept without showing example?

Christians, friends, let us clasp hands in our onward march; let us encourage each other in the work that lies before us. Placing our feet upon this curse, let us crush it into the dust; and fixing our eyes upon the high, noble goal that may be ours, with a prayer upon our lips, and faithful determination glowing in our souls, let us press onward, upward, never pausing or looking backward until we receive the blessing of our Father!

REV. R. J. JONES.

IN MEMORIAM.

Rev. R. J. Jones, Sr., of the Mississippi Conference, was born in Spartanburg district, South Carolina, April 12, 1808, and died at his home, in Jasper county, Mississippi, March 26, 1872, nearly sixty-four years of age.

He was twice married—first to Miss Abigail McInuis, of Green county, Mississippi, in the year 1835; next to Miss M. J. Benge, in 1865.

In his youth his parents removed from South Carolina to Georgia; thence to Alabama. In the year 1831, at the age of twenty-three, he was licensed to preach the gospel. The next year he was admitted on trial in the Alabama Conference, and appointed to Jones Valley circuit. In 1833 he traveled Monticello circuit. During these two years his labors were in a region of country recently settled by white people, and where still remained large numbers of Creek Indians, whose hostile feelings, not yet appeased, were still more excited by the attempt to remove them from their homes. Here he met frequent obstructions in his work, had many perils and escapes, passed through various exciting adventures, and withal accomplished a large amount of good. The heroic age of Methodism had not then gone by. He had noble examples of faith and patience, and earnest endeavor in the itinerant life, on which to fix his eye. In 1834 he was admitted into full connection in the Conference, and appointed to Chickasawha circuit, which lay within the State of Mississippi. In 1835 he was on Leaf River circuit. These two last works extended over a large region of country, subjecting him to rides of hundreds of miles in order to complete their rounds. The next year (1836) he located. Soon afterward he settled in Jasper county, where he continued to reside until the day of his death. Into this county, newly opened to purchase, a considerable immigration was coming. A large proportion was of persons of education and intelligence. Especially the bar of the country was one of marked ability. The influence of Mr. Jones among these, and among people of all classes, was soon felt. Men who knew how to estimate, saw his worth, admired his character, and became his life-long friends. Doubtless these years when he was local were the most important of his life. Always exhibiting a proper public spirit, he was among the first and heartiest in establishing schools and building churches, ever ready to give, ever ready to work. He came to be looked on as a model citizen, a safe counselor, conservative in all his views—peace-making. Naturally, as a member of the community, he felt and manifested an interest in public affairs. But it was in religious matters and circles that he had the deepest concern. He preached regularly, efficiently. It seemed that the care of all the churches was upon him. Far and near he was called to perform the offices of the church—to baptize, to marry, to commit the dead to their last home.

He had great familiarity with the standard works of our theology; hence his preaching was sound, evangelical, instructive, dignified. His mind was remarkably analytical, so that he viewed in all its aspects the subject which he took in hand. He was liberal-minded toward other communions, but he loved his own church as the perfection of beauty. On all questions affecting her interests you knew what his position would be. Others might swerve, but he was loyal to the last. Ruling in his own household well, his children grew up, without exception, to be religious. He had been blessed with a considerable estate, and his home was marked for its hospitality.

In 1855, at Vicksburg, he was received into the Mississippi Conference. From that time, for six successive years, he filled the office of presiding elder on Paulding and Biloxi districts. At the close of 1861, in the midst of the war, with no one to look after his business, he felt it to be his duty to locate. Then came a season of sorrow. His youngest son, just going to enter the army, sickened and died at home. Two other sons, brave boys, fell—one, the flag-bearer of the Sixteenth Mississippi Regiment, at Sharpsburg; the other, the flag-bearer of the Thirty-seventh Mississippi, at Atlanta. And lastly his wife, a woman of great energy and strength of character, was taken away.

In the year 1868 he was received a second time into the Mississippi Conference. For the three years following he was connected with the work among the colored people. At the last session of the Mississippi Conference, because of his failing health, he was granted a superannuated relation. Through the winter he was feeble, declining. Evidently he felt that his time was short; nor did he wish to prolong it. While the outward man perished, the inward man was renewed day by day. But the summons came suddenly on the twenty-sixth of March. He arose on that morning as well as he had been for several weeks previous; was engaged in some employment on his place until ten o'clock, when he was seized with sudden and severe sickness, (congestion of the lungs,) and, returning to the house, died in less than half an hour.

Many, when they heard of his death, turned tenderly, regretfully to the past; but as for him, they felt that a useful life had closed, and that his "sun shall go no more down."

M.

JEHOIADA'S IDEA OF GIVING.

In collecting money for the repairs of the temple, which Athaliah and her sons had dilapidated, the good priest did a thing worth noticing. He had a chest placed right alongside the brazen altar in front of the temple, and in the lid of the chest was a hole bored, and into the hole the priests, selected for the purpose, dropped the coins which the people brought, either as their half-shekel tax or as the offerings for vows, or as free-will offerings to the temple of Jehovah.

When I read this story, and then read from Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians, "Upon the first day of the week, (the Lord's day, mind you!) let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him," I cannot help thinking that "giving is a part of worship!" Close alongside the great altar, where the type of the Lamb of God was offered up, was the money chest.

How exalted giving to the Lord's cause is in this light! And Paul calls it Sunday work, puts it with prayer, and praise, and Bible instruction, and all that is improving to the soul. I think that if all Christians in our land would entertain the notion of Jehoiada and Paul about giving to the Lord (and it is not their notion, but the Holy Ghost's) our spiritual temple would not be so dilapidated—thousands would flow forth from willing hearts, where now hundreds are squeezed out. Take the idea, my brother with the long purse, yes, and brother with the short purse too. Make your giving a part of your worship, and then thank Jehoiada and Paul, but above all the Lord, for making your Christian life the happier.—Rev. Dr. Crosby.

REMARKS OF JOHN NEWTON.—A Christian should never plead spirituality for being a sloven; if he be but a shoe-cleaner, he should be the best in the town.

My principal method of defeating heresy is by establishing truth. One proposes to fill a basket with tares. Now, if I can fill it first with wheat, I shall defy his attempts.

There are critical times of danger. After great services, honors and consolations we should stand upon our guard. Noah, Lot, David and Solomon fell in these circumstances. Satan is a foot-pad. A foot-pad will not attack a man in going to the bank, but in returning with his pocket full of money.

Christ has taken our nature into heaven, to represent us. He has left us on earth with his nature to represent him.

If we were on the watch for improvement, the common news of the day would furnish it. The falling of the tower in Siloam and the slaughter of the Galileans were the news of the day which our Lord improved.

Much depends on the way we come into trouble. Paul and Jonah were both in the storm, but under very different circumstances.

RAIN FROM HEAVEN.—Once a little girl, who loved her Savior very much for having so loved her, came to her clergyman with eighteen shillings for a missionary society.

"How did you collect so much? Is it all your own?" the clergyman asked.

"Yes, sir; I earned it."

"But how, Mary?—you are so poor."

"Please, sir, when I thought how Jesus had died for me, I wanted to do something for him, and I heard how money was wanted to send the good news out to the heathen, and as I had no money of my own, I earned this by collecting rain water, and selling it to washerwomen for a penny a bucket. This is how I got the money, sir."

"My dear child," said the clergyman, "I am very thankful that your love to your Savior has led you to work so long and patiently for him; now I shall gladly put down your name as a missionary subscriber."

"Oh! no, sir, please; not my name."

"Why not, Mary?"

"Please, sir, I would rather no one knew but him; I should like it to be put down as 'Rain from heaven!'"

A SERIOUS THOUGHT.—Suppose there was a book in which the whole life was recorded, each page of which contained the events of a day, and at the beginning was written: "This is the life of a rational, immortal, accountable creature, placed in this world to prepare for eternity!" Oh, what an amount of guilt would the record of each day present!—Dr. Payson.

THE STRANGE COUNTRY.

BY ROBERT BUCHANAN.

I have come from a mystical Land of Light
To a strange country;
That land I have left is forgotten quite
In the land I see.

The round earth rolls beneath my feet,
And the still stars glow;
The murmuring waters rise and retreat,
The winds come and go.

Sure as a heart-beat all things seem
In this strange country;
So sure, so bright, in a glow of dream,
All things flow free.

It is life, all life, all awful and plain,
In the sea and the flood,
In the beating heart, in the wondrous brain,
In the flesh and the blood.

Deep as death is the daily strife
Of this strange country;
All things move up till they blossom in life,
And tremble and flee.

Nothing is stranger than the rest,
From the pole to the pole—
The world in the ditch, the eggs in the nest,
The flesh and the soul.

Look in mine eyes, O maid I meet
In this strange country!
Come to mine arms, O maiden sweet,
With thy mouth kiss me!

Who goes by with a crown on his brow?
King Solomon?
He is a stranger too, I vow,
And must journey on!

O wondrous faces that up start
In this strange country!
O identities that become a part
Of my soul and me!

What are ye building so fast and fleet,
O humankind?
"We are building cities for those whose feet
Are coming behind.

"Our stay is short—we must fly again
From this strange country:
But others are growing, women and men,
Eternally."

Ay, what art thou, and what am I
But a breaking wave!
Rising and falling, swift we fly
To the shore of the grave.

I have come from a mystical Land of Light
To this strange country;
This dawn I came; I shall go to-night:
Ay, me! ay, me!

I hold my hand to my head and stand
'Neath the air's blue arc;
I try to remember the mystical Land,
But all is dark.

And all around me swim shapes like mine,
In this strange country;
They break in the glamour of gleams divine,
And they moan: "Ay, me!"

Like waves in the cold moon's silvern breath
They gather and roll—
Each crest of white is a birth or a death,
Each sound is a soul.

O what is the Eye that gleams so bright
O'er this strange country?
It draws us along with a chain of light,
As the moon the sea!

Good Words.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

The most cheering tidings are constantly coming from this land of the Inquisition, in which the gospel is now having free course. La Semaine Religieuse says:

"The Spirit of God has breathed upon this country; faithful laborers have been sowing; little by little the gospel has been progressing in the midst of many difficulties and severe persecutions; and now, religious liberty having been proclaimed, the good seed is beginning to spring up in all directions. It is no longer a few timid Christians, daring neither to affirm themselves, nor to meet together, of whom we now hear, but it is an alliance of Evangelical churches which has been formed and developed, and it is to meet at Madrid in the month of April for its second synod.

"We have received the following details in reference to this subject: From the time that the gospel has been preached in Spain without any hinderance, two groups of churches have been formed. The first had as its center the Church of Sevilla, with which are associated, under the name of the Reformed churches of Spain, all those of the south, viz., Huelva, Cadiz, Malaga, Cordova, Grenada, and Constantine. The other group, comprehending the churches of Madrid, with its stations, as well as that of Saragossa, formed a confederation apart, under the title of the Evangelical Church. These two associations have just been united in one, under the denomination of the Christian Church of Spain. To this union are attached, besides the churches which we have just mentioned, two independent congregations—one at Madrid, the other at Carthagena. It was in April, 1871, that the deputies of twelve Christian assemblies laid at Seville the basis of this fusion. A synod is to assemble at Madrid next April, to draw up a confession of faith, to establish a rule of worship, and to adopt a catechism, as well as a psalter, for the use of all the churches.

"It is only three years since religious liberty was proclaimed in Spain; but we can already point to twenty congregations, out of which a very encouraging proportion of souls are really converted to the Lord. Madrid now possesses seven evangelical chapels, of different denominations, where more than two thousand persons receive instruction every Sunday and several times in the week. Four of these churches have schools, where three hundred children receive a Christian education. On the third of September last M. Cavrasco inaugurated a new chapel in the Faubourg of Las Parmelas, where a school has also been opened, which numbered the names of one hundred and twenty pupils at the time of its foundation.

"Seville is to the South what Madrid is to the center—a center of evangelical light. We have for long known the zeal of its pastor, M. Cabrera, a converted priest; and the indefatigable activity of M. Tugwell, to whom is owing the formation of five congregations, and of schools frequented by more than six hundred children. There is also a school of theology, directed by Mr. Black, a Scotch minister, and a school for governesses.

"Valladolid also presents to us a Christian work, which prospers under the care of a young and very pious evangelist, M. Pedro Castro. The Colporteur Flores works with zeal; under his direction Saragossa also constituted itself into a church in February, 1871; and finally, at Barcelona, we find our fellow-countryman, M. Empaytaz, of Geneva, sent by the committee of Lausanne, directing a very prosperous work. Last year his schools did not number thirty children; this year the number of children on the books amounted to two hundred and two." New York Observer.

THREATENING CHILDREN.

A few days since I called on a little matter of business at the house of my acquaintance, Mr. Rasphoy. As I sat for a few moments alone in the parlor, I unfortunately heard a voice saying in sharp, passionate tones: "If I ever find you doing so again I will punish you within an inch of your life."

No reply to this awful threat reached my ear, but a moment or two afterward I heard a door shut with a heavy jar, and saw his son pass the window with a look of anger on his face not pleasant to behold. Mr. Rasphoy came shortly afterward into the room, seeming to be somewhat embarrassed as he saw me, and discovered that I had been there during this uncomfortable escapade. He, in an apologetic way, said something about "these boys being sometimes exceedingly provoking," and I passed to the business on which I came at once, so as to relieve him.

I went away thinking somewhat after this fashion: Mr. Rasphoy, if he only would reflect, has done now a foolish and even bad thing for himself and for his son. He evidently has allowed himself to get into a passion. That of itself is bad enough. He lowered himself in the eyes of his boy by losing command of himself. Then he communicated his passion to his son. The sullen and lowering look of the boy showed that very clearly. So there was a breach made between father and son. It will take time and care to bridge it over. It has made a wound that will be apt to leave a scar behind, even if it be healed. A father cannot repent that process very often without at length separating his son very far from him. The sight of that father will not be welcomed when they next meet; and it is very sad when no pleasant greeting between parent and child is possible.

I do not know what this provocation was. Very probably the boy was greatly at fault, but it was not necessary that Mr. Rasphoy should lose his temper and give a threat which by its very tone and language was fitted only to provoke the boy. I know that the reproof could have been given in such a way as to have held his son to him, even while his displeasure was clearly exhibited.

Besides all that, the threat was exaggerated, and the father never meant to fulfill it. He never intended to punish his son till he was nearly dead. "Within an inch of his life" would bring death pretty near. The boy knew perfectly well that it meant far less. Indeed I suspect that he understood it to mean almost nothing at all. He had probably heard pretty much the same thing very often before, and had known it to result in not much diminution even of his comfort. The only effect, I fear, of the threat was a diminished confidence in the words of his father, a feeling of anger aroused, and of alienation and heart-burning.

I once found my Brother John looking annoyed, troubled, and even anxious. One would have supposed that some matter of very grave consequence was oppressing him. I asked him what was on his mind. "Well," he replied, "Harry has just been to me and, in a quiet and subdued way, has been expressing his regret at something he did a day or two since. He is, you know, unaccountably careless, and I hastily and angrily threatened him with a whipping on the repetition of the offense. Now he has repeated it. He is clearly sorry for it, and I do not know exactly what to do. I do not want to whip the boy. You know what a noble fellow he is, and our system has been to use the rod for only two offenses—deliberate disobedience and falsehood. It has not been necessary to come to this for years. I ought not to have made the threat. I was provoked and foolish, or I would not have gotten myself in this predicament."

I pitied him, but did not see how to help him. I think that John will not make a hasty threat again. His boys know exactly what their father and mother mean when they declare a penalty. It follows upon the fault like the laws of nature. There is no escape. But threats are almost never heard in that household.

Indeed, threatenings ought not to be familiar in the family. It is little to say that they banish sunshine from the home. They do more. They irritate and alienate the child, while they weaken, and by-and-by destroy the authority of the parent. Love, that holds in a firm and enduring embrace, does not live in their atmosphere.—Uncle William in Christian Weekly.

MONASTIC LIFE IN ENGLAND.

After a suppression of three hundred years, monastic life has revived again in England, and its spread is one of the most remarkable signs of the times. Under the spirit of religious toleration the various ancient orders of monks, the Benedictines, Dominicans, Capuchins, Augustines, Cistercians and others have established themselves in various parts of England, and have evinced the ancient aptitude of the Roman Church for securing choice localities. One of the most noted of these modern English monasteries is Mount St. Bernard, in Charnwood Forest, Leicestershire. It was begun in 1835, and for some time there were only five monks, who lived on a little farm and tilled the adjacent land. In 1842 the present extensive abbey buildings were commenced. They are in early English style, but with the church, cloister, chapter-house, refectory, dormitory, guest-house, lavatory, kitchen, offices, etc., with massive walls and buttresses, long and narrow windows, high gables and roofs, with deeply-arched doorways, the pile presents an imposing appearance. A clock tower with a chime of bells remains to be added. The monastery owns now three hundred acres, nearly all of which is highly cultivated. The situation is very picturesque, and the land was rocky and not easily cultivated. The labor is all performed by the monks, who have made the domain profitable, selling the farm produce at a good price. The lives of the recluses are toilsome and abstemious. They are not allowed to speak to each other except in the presence of the superior; they eat no meat or animal food except milk and cheese; their daily round is toil, prayer and sleep. They work on the farm, feed the pigs, make the butter, and do their own washing. No woman is permitted to enter the sacred ground. They have made a garden of the three hundred acres. Attached to the abbey is a reformatory institution for boys. The order is the Cistercian, a branch of the Benedictines; and three hundred and ten monasteries in England, the remains of which are now among the most picturesque ruins in that land—Tintern, Netley and Fountain abbeys among them.—Church and State.

"CROWN HIM LORD OF ALL."—A Sunday school teacher was dying. The light of heaven was in his eye, and precious thoughts of Jesus and his mighty love filled his heart with a joy I cannot describe. Just before he sunk away, he turned to his daughter, who was bending most lovingly over his bed, and said:

"Bring—"

More he could not say, for no strength had he to speak more. His child looked with earnest gaze in his face, and said:

"What shall I bring, my father?"

"Bring—"

His child was in an agony of desire to know that dying father's last request, and she said:

"Dear, precious father, do try to tell me what you want. I will do anything you wish me to do."

The dying teacher rallied all his strength, and finally murmured:

"Bring—forth—the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all."

And as these words died away upon his lips, his soul flew up to join the grand company in heaven, which is ever casting crowns at the feet of the Savior, and singing hallelujahs to God and the Lamb.

EVERY LOOK, tone, gesture of a man is a symbol of his complete nature. If we apply the microscope severely enough, we can discern the fine organization by which the soul sends itself out in every act of the being. And the more perfectly developed the creature, the more significant and yet the more mysterious is every habit, and every motion, mightier than habit, of body or soul. Winthrop.

THE STORY OF AN ATOM.

The atom of charcoal which floated in the corrupt atmosphere of the old volcanic ages, was absorbed into the leaf of a fern when the valleys became green and luxuriant; and there, in its proper place, it received the sunlight and the dew, aiding to fling back to heaven a reflection of heaven's gold, and at the same time to build the tough fiber of the plant. The atom was consigned to the tomb when the waters submerged the jungled valley. It had lain three thousand years, and a month since it was brought into the light again, imbedded in a block of coal. It shall be consumed to warm our dwellings, cook our food, and make more ruddy and cheerful the hearth whereon our children play; it shall combine with a portion of the invisible atmosphere, ascend upward as curling wreath to revel in a mazy dance high up in the blue ether, shall reach the earth again, and be entrapped into the embrace of a flower; shall live in velvet beauty on the cheek of the apricot; shall pass into the human body, giving enjoyment to the palate, and health to the blood; shall circulate in the delicate tissues of the brain, and aid, by entering into some new combination, in reducing the thoughts which are now being uttered by the pen. It is but an atom of charcoal; it may dwell one moment in a stagnant ditch, and the next be flushing on the lip of beauty; it may be a component of limestone rock, and the next an ingredient in a field of potatoes; it may slumber for a thousand years without undergoing a single change, and the next hour pass through a thousand; and, after all, it is only an atom of charcoal, and occupies only its own place wherever it may be.—Hibbard's "Brambles and Bay Leaves."

YOU HAVE KILLED THAT SERMON.—The preacher labored faithfully this morning. Many were affected under the sermon. Among the rest were some of your children. Now is a good time for you to come in and help your pastor in the work upon your own family. But, alas! instead of this, you have destroyed the impressions on the hearts of those affected.

"How?" you ask in astonishment. Why, when you returned from church, instead of talking with those serious children, you began to criticise the preacher in their hearing! During the sermon you were half asleep part of the time, and reading a hymn book another part; and now your work must be finished up in a criticism of the discourse. It was too cold, or rather boisterous. The hymns were inappropriate; the prayers too common-place. All this you have to talk before these children, but a little while ago so thoughtful. When you are done they are thoughtful no longer. Your words have driven off their good impressions.

SWIFT'S HUMOR.—Dean Swift was walking in the Phœnix road, Dublin, when a thunder shower came on, and he took shelter under a tree, where a party was sheltering also—two young women and two young men. One of the young girls looked very sad, till, as the rain fell, her tears fell. The dean inquired the cause, and learned that it was their wedding-day: they were on their way to the church, and now her white clothes were wet and she couldn't go. "Never mind; I'll marry you," said the dean; and he took out his prayer book, and there and then married them, their witnesses being present; and, to make the thing complete, he tore a leaf from his pocketbook, and with his pencil wrote and signed a certificate, which he handed to the bride. It was as follows:

Under a tree in stormy weather,
I married this man and woman together.
Let none but him who rules the thunder
Sever this man and woman asunder.

JONATHAN SWIFT,
Dean of St. Patrick's.

THE REASON WHY.—Infidels should never talk of our giving up Christianity till they can propose something superior. Lord Chesterfield's answer, therefore, to an infidel lady was very just. When at Brussels he was invited by Voltaire to sup with him and Madam C——. The conversation happened to turn upon the affairs of England. "I think, my lord," said Madam C——, "that the Parliament of England consists of five or six hundred of the best informed and the most sensible men in the kingdom." "True, madam, they are generally supposed to be so." "What, then, my lord, can be the reason they tolerate so great an absurdity as the Christian religion?" "I suppose, madam," replied his lordship, "it is because they have not been able to establish anything in its stead. When they can, I do not doubt but that in their wisdom they will readily adopt it."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE American Bible Society has made a grant of Bibles and Testaments to the Southern Methodist Church, to aid it in its work among the Indians.

THE late Presbytery of Washington city adopted a resolution, by a unanimous vote, in favor of permitting women to become deaconesses in the Presbyterian Church.

THE Rev. J. W. Healy, D. D., has organized in England a Freedman's Mission Aid Society, of which the Earl of Shaftesbury is president, and the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, M. P., is treasurer.

THE printing of the entire Bible in the Esquimaux language is now, the English Churchman observes, happily completed, the concluding portions having recently passed through the press.

THE Southern Baptists have voted in council to raise $20,000 toward building a Baptist church in Rome; and they have telegraphed to their Northern brethren, who are about to assemble in New York, asking them to pledge an equal sum.

REV. ALFRED A. CURTIS, a prominent Episcopal clergyman of Baltimore, has become a Catholic, and has been deposed from his ministry by the Episcopal Bishop of Maryland. It is understood that a change was brought about through the influence of Dr. Newman, the eminent English Catholic divine, with whom Mr. Curtis has been sojourning at Birmingham.

THE National Temperance Society and Publication House reports that its receipts for the past year have been $49,348, and its expenses $49,264. It has printed during the year 25,277,478 pages of books, pamphlets and periodicals. The report complains that the work of the society is embarrassed for the lack of funds; which should not be. It is doing a valuable work and ought to be supported.

THE semi-centennial of the professorship of Dr. Hodge at Princeton, New Jersey, was celebrated on Wednesday, April 24. An endowment of $50 000 had been given the chair of Dr. Hodge's professorship. On the anniversary occasion a testimonial of $15,000 was given Dr. Hodge himself. The addresses were by Drs. Dwyea and Boardman. Dr. Hodge replied. A dinner followed the formal proceedings, at which were more addresses.

THE Esperance de Rome has the following from Spain: "The Abbe Antonio Aguayo y Molino, who has formed in Madrid a 'Central Committee of Propaganda and Organization,' intended to establish a free Catholic Christian Church in Spain, is receiving encouragement from all parts of the peninsula. Eighty-seven priests have already explicitly signified their assent to his programme, besides three hundred and ninety-eight laymen, who have connected themselves with his reform movement."

THE Jewish Messenger thinks that the fact that a Catholic nation (Italy) has sent a Jew—Isaaco Artom—as embassador to the French republic, is highly significant. It shows, on the one hand, how the talent and genius of the Jew have risen superior to the prejudice and superstition of his neighbors; and, on the other, that the era of bigotry has passed away from the hotbed of intolerance, Italy, where, a few years ago, Jews had annually to suffer the grossest indignities to please the rabble and the self-constituted deity on the throne of St. Peter.

THE Presbyterian Record reports that in most of the missions native converts of approved qualifications are under training for the ministry. Dr. Nevius, writing at Chefoo, China, says: "The three months of study of the theological class closed last week. Their examination gave most encouraging evidence of earnest study and decided improvement. The class now numbers ten. One or two others will probably be added next term. During the three months' vacation they will be employed in evangelistic labors in the interior, some of them by themselves, and others accompanying some of us."

THE Moravian missionaries in Thibet report continued advance in Christian knowledge by their convert, the Lama Sadka Gjalzan, of Lhassa. He now lives entirely in the mission house, has finally disowned the caste prejudices of the Buddhists, and "openly and boldly testifies to the lamas who visit him where and how he has obtained the forgiveness of his sins. He is more thoroughly versed in the Buddhist sacred books than any of the lamas in this region, and having a clear conception of the reasons which have induced him to embrace Christianity, his answers are all the more impressive."

AT A TIME when so much attention is being directed to the political and religious movements of Germany it may not be amiss to state what progress Methodism has already made in that powerful and highly-cultured land. The statistics of the three Methodist churches laboring there have already been published, as they were presented some time ago to their respective Conferences, and show that there are in Germany and German Switzerland more than 11,000 full and accredited members, which, with between 2,000 and 3,000 on trial, would doubtless represent between 60,000 and 70,000 hearers, and in all nearly 100,000 persons, directly or indirectly, under Methodist influence.

THE Christian Intelligencer says: "Recent intelligence from Japan is striking and most encouraging in its character. At Yokohama a daily prayer meeting has been continued for several weeks, attended by large numbers of Japanese, who were eager to have the word of truth expounded. Several conversions had occurred, and the first Christian church in Japan had been organized, under the direction of the Rev. Mr. Ballagh, March 10, 1872. It is not believed that the government will interfere with this movement. The Japanese call the Protestants 'Bible men,' and do not seem to have any special ill-will toward those who walk in the light of the Bible."

THE Mennonites of Russia, a religious sect which resembles in some respects the Baptists and in others the Quakers, and which has a colony near Berdiansk, numbering more than forty thousand souls, are proposing to emigrate in a body to the United States or British America. They emigrated to Russia from Prussia, several years ago, under the promise of the government that they should be exempted from military service, non-resistance being one of the cardinal doctrines of their creed. The Russian government is not keeping its faith with them, and therefore they propose to leave Russia. It is forbidden, however, to a Russian subject to emigrate without the consent of the authorities; and, as the Mennonites have been a very industrious and productive community, the Russian government is loth to let them go.

ACCORDING to the Weekly Review, the missionary work in India has grown to such an extent that occasion appears to have risen for separating the departments of teaching and preaching. Missionary Conferences recently held at Allahabad and Umritsur considered the subject. The result is that a committee has been appointed, consisting of the Rev. Messrs. Keene and Heerule, of the Church Missionary Society, and the Rev. Drs. Newton and Forman, of the American mission, along with Mr. Charles J. Rodgers, principal of the Christian Vernacular Education Society's Training Institution at Umritsur, to lay their opinions before the directors of all the missionary societies, and to urge upon them the necessity of relieving their missionaries as much as possible from school work, and handing it over to an educational body which represents all Protestant churches, such as the Christian Vernacular Education Society.

THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.—The American Bible Society held its fifty-sixth anniversary meeting at Association Hall on Thursday morning, the ninth ultimo, W. H. Allen, LL. D., the recently-elected president, in the chair. An abstract of the annual report was read. The receipts for the year were $689,923.47; the payments were $629,379.88. The sum necessary to meet the outstanding engagements of the society is estimated at $80,000. Seven sets of new electrotype plates have been made at the Bible House; five sets for the Arabic Scriptures are in progress at Beyrout, and one set at Constantinople. New publications at the Bible House, seven, all excepting two in foreign languages, besides others printed or authorized abroad; volumes printed at the Bible House, 1,030,255; printed and purchased abroad, 201,597; total, 1,231,852; volumes issued, 1,100,871, including 921,389 from the Bible House, in thirty-nine languages, and 179,482 abroad, the latter representing about sixty different languages and dialects; entire number of volumes issued during fifty-six years, 28,780,969. Bible Society Record: Copies circulated during the year, 419,380; number of auxiliaries reported as engaged in supplying their fields, 550. The distribution of the Scriptures in the United States during the year, apart from ordinary sales by auxiliary societies, so far as reported, is shown by the following figures: Number of families visited, 598,664; number of families found destitute of the Bible, 73,732; destitute families supplied, 40,459; destitute individuals supplied in addition, 17,391; Sabbath and other schools supplied, 1,835. Provision was made for the relief of sufferers by the calamitous fires of last autumn in Illinois, Wisconsin and Michigan. Some attention has been given to the supply of Scriptures for travelers on various railroads. Liberal grants have been made for Sunday schools through the American Sunday School Union and the American Missionary Association.

SAVING THE WORST.

Christ declares that his mission was to the lost—that "the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which is lost." By the lost he means not merely a lost world, but the most sinful and degraded in a race of fallen beings. Where all are by nature in a state of ruin, there are some already reclaimed, and others who are far below the ordinary level in their vileness and obduracy. Society itself makes the distinction, and gives its own meaning to "that which is lost." Now, as in the days of Zaccheus, the moral condition is graded, and the lowest sediment and deposit, as the world goes, is "the lost." Sin, stripped of respectability, separated from all pretensions to even a formal reverance for religion, and of a nature to sink the mind and spirit into boudage to appetite, is looked upon as peculiarly obstinate and hopeless.

There is a temptation to overlook the classes of sinners whom the Savior characterizes as "that which is lost," and to direct our efforts almost exclusively to the better sort. Christ's plan was rather to seek out the lowest, and to bring salvation to those who were commonly considered beyond the reach of reformation. And a most important truth is brought out by him, that these neglected lost ones were often the most hopeful subjects of converting grace. Publicans and harlots went into the kingdom when the more decent and respectable Pharisees rejected the message of life. The woman at Jacob's well, and the publican of Jericho received the Savior, while others turned away from him with contempt. The lost sheep, the lost piece of money and the prodigal son all illustrate this peculiarity of Christ's ministry. In a world where all are lost there is a lower deep of ignorance and vice, and it is here that he finds the most fruitful results of his labor. So it was with the apostles in their planting of the churches in such places as Corinth, Ephesus and Rome. Wesley gathered in this field of degradation, and his marvelous success was owing greatly to the fact that he carried the gospel into the lowest sinks of vice and ignorance.

Our ordinary methods do not effectively reach this element. The congregations are, for the most part, made up of Sunday school children and of those who have been religiously raised. There are multitudes who rarely enter the churches, and who, as distinguished from those who enjoy church privileges, are "that which is lost." To seek and to save them would have been the special study of Christ. A Paul or a Wesley, living in our day, would not be content with stated sermons from velvet cushions, and with music from organs and choirs, while multitudes wander at large, with no man to care for their souls. The true missionary principle is announced in the Savior's words, because they apply forcibly to those who have not the gospel in any sense. There are ruined souls who perish within sight of the church spire, but there are millions without Bibles—lost in the impenetrable shadows of pagan superstition.—Whatever Christians are doing at home, they cannot without guilt neglect these.

But, to confine our thoughts to the Christian's every-day plans and labors. We are to break forth from the shell of unbelief and mere religious routine. We are to go beyond the decent and moral worshipers, and the respectably irreligious people. There are sinners enough about us who have not been under church influences. There are fallen souls, deeply fallen in the pits of intemperance and licentiousness. There are rough and sordid natures, uncouth and repulsive developments of vice and sensuality. Shall we spend all our energies, time, money and prayer merely to conserve and hold, or shall we not rather seek and save that which is lost? Our faith in the power of the gospel to save the worst of sinners is in danger. Unless a man has been raised religiously, and has been kept from habits of vice, we have hardly any hope of him. The aggressive power which takes hold of the most ignorant, the most imbruted and the most inveterate sinners, and makes new creatures of them, is not as firmly believed as it should be. We cannot think that the primitive force of the gospel has been spent, or that its power to save the worst has been lost.

Let us by all means work—by schools, by education, by leading the children to Christ; but let us not abate confidence in the gospel, pure and simple, to convert the oldest and the most desperate sinners. The results will be according to our faith. Where there is faith in the gospel as the wisdom and power of God, there its triumphs will be displayed. It is well to use every preventive to keep men from vice—to keep them from the fire—but we must have something also which can pluck the hand from the burning. The world would become good if it would stop raising rascals; but as things are, and as they are likely to be, our need is a gospel which can take men as we find them, and make Christians of them.

OUR HOUSE.

The Depository building, 112 Camp street, New Orleans, is occupied nearly throughout with the book and publishing interests of the church. The fourth story is now used by our German brethren as office and composition rooms for the Family Friend, and the paper is printed on the ADVOCATE press. Quite an important center and depot of Southern German literature is being established here. The third story is occupied partly by the composition room of the ADVOCATE and partly for storage of paper and book stock. On the second floor is the editor's office, one room rented to a publishing firm, and the balance of the space is used by the book agent for various purposes connected with the business of the establishment. The ground floor is handsomely fitted up as a book store, and contains the most valuable assortment of standard books, literary and religious, to be found in the Southwest. There is always also on hand a complete stock of stationery, and everything usually found in the largest and best appointed book stores of New York, Cincinnati and St. Louis. In the rear of the book store is the press room where the weekly editions of the ADVOCATE are struck off, and where the almost deafening clangor of press and engine may be heard on Mondays and Wednesdays.

It will be seen from these particulars that this handsome four-story building is put to full use, and that its entire capacity is devoted to the literature of the church. Southern Methodism has here a stronghold of defense, and a fountain of power and influence, second to none of her other institutions and enterprises. The building is held for the Methodist Episcopal Church South by a board of trustees, and the charter expressly declares that it shall be devoted to a Book Depository under the control of the Concern at Nashville, to the publication of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and for mission rooms and other church purposes. Rev. R. J. Harp is the appointed agent of the Publishing House, and is besides employed by the Publishing Committee of the ADVOCATE to publish the paper for the patronizing Conferences. The business in both departments is conducted with prudence and ability, and the field of patronage and influence is steadily enlarging. From losses growing out of the war a debt of about six thousand dollars rests upon the Depository building, and steps have recently been taken to pay it. We believe that the trustees have pledges to within say thirteen hundred dollars of the required amount, and to be paid on condition that the whole amount is raised. Our friends will not, we believe, let this opportunity pass of clearing off a debt which has long been an embarrassment and burden to the ADVOCATE and the Depository. We would appeal straightly and urgently to the Methodists to meet this call at once. Let those who have given, double their subscriptions, and let those who have held back respond in this hour of need.

HELPING TOO MUCH.

The Northern Presbyterian Church has 4,347 ministers, of whom only 2,740 are in regular service as pastors or supplies. It would appear, however, that of the 4,616 churches of the denomination, nearly 2,000 of them must be without ministers. The New York Observer contends that they have too many ministers, and that a surplus of rather worthless material is due to the unwise administration of the beneficiary system. It says:

Men are fostered and forced or carried into the ministry who ought not to get in; that gratuitous education for a profession is a premium offered to incompetency and laziness, and that the ministry is now overstocked, burdened and degraded by the induction of dead weights through this agency.

There are more students of law and medicine than of theology, but no charitable aid is required to train lawyers or doctors. They find their way to their professions over obstacles just the same as those that beset the path of the candidate for the ministry.

We may be misrepresented, but we will not be misunderstood. Our position is this, which we are ready to maintain—that we have a surplus of ministers; the supply, such as it is, is greater than the demand; the beneficiary system has been so unwisely administered by the recommendations of presbyteries and the erring indulgence of pastors and officers, that hundreds of men have been helped into the ministry who might better have gone into other callings.

The trouble seems to lie in the quality, and in the distribution. Our Methodist way of doing would help in the latter, and perhaps in the former also, furnishing a better average article and distributing it to the greatest advantage. There must be a serious defect in the system where there are so many vacant churches and so many unemployed preachers.

Northern General Conference.

Rev. R. L. Dashiel, D. D., Rev. T. M. Eddy, D. D., and Rev. J. M. Reid were elected secretaries of the Missionary Society. Rev. Erastus Wentworth, D. D., of the Troy Conference, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Amsterdam, New York., and formerly missionary to China, was elected editor of the Ladies' Repository. Rev. Daniel Curry, D. D., of the New York East Conference, was re-elected editor of the Christian Advocate, at New York. Rev. F. S. Hoyt, D. D., of the North Ohio Conference, professor of mathematics in the Ohio Wesleyan University, was elected editor of the Western Christian Advocate. Rev. Arthur Edwards, A. M., of the Detroit Conference, assistant editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, was elected editor of that paper. Rev. B. K. Pierce succeeds Gilbert Haven as editor of Zion's Herald. The report of the special committee on the Book Concern frauds declares that frauds have been committed in the bindery by which losses have been sustained, and that there have been irregularities in the business management by which losses have or might have been sustained. The report acquits the agent and assistant agent from any implication or interest in the frauds that may have been practiced in the Concern, and further states that the frauds and irregularities are not of such magnitude as to endanger the financial strength of the Book Concern, nor to materially impair its capital. Quite a breeze sprung up in the Conference on the presentation of a memorial from the Preachers' Meeting of New Orleans, asking for a colored Bishop, in addition to the Bishops already elected. The memorial was referred to a special committee. Our colored friends, we have no doubt, will get conciliatory words, but no Bishop. A little hair dye and charcoal ought to make Bishop Haven entirely acceptable to the African element. The report on appointing fraternal delegates to the Southern Church, prepared by Dr. Curry, is elaborate, and provides for the appointment of two ministers and one layman to convey fraternal greetings, and also recommends the appointment of three commissioners, to meet a similar board to be appointed by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, who shall agree upon some uniform plan or principle for the adjustment of all property questions in dispute between the two churches.

Centenary College of Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: It is very desirable that the center building should be finished before the commencement occasion, which will be on the second Wednesday in July. The brick work has been completed and some of the stucco has been put on. The completion of the stucco, the coloring, glazing, plastering and painting yet remain to be done.

How the hearts of all concerned would be gladdened if we could have the finishing touch given by commencement! What confidence would be inspired in the visitor, and what an impetus would be given to all the interests of the college!

Another most urgent reason for the immediate completion of the outside of the center building is that the high and immense scaffolding was constructed of pine poles. Already twelve months have passed since it was erected, and it will soon be unfit for use, and the additional expense of a new scaffolding will have to be incurred.

Two thousand dollars would enable the contractor to complete this part of the work according to specifications. The scaffolding would be dispensed with, the rubbish removed, and the "latter house" would greet our eyes at commencement, as fresh and bright as the "former"—more beautiful because of the change of its architecture, and immeasurably more durable and permanent.

More than that sum has been promised us, and will doubtless be paid; but we need funds now. Our hearts are set upon getting the building ready for commencement; our prayers go up for this; our exertions are in this direction. We are not without hope of success.

Mr. Editor, let me say through you, to the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana, that now is the time of greatest need to their own institution. It is an important cause—it is a sacred cause. Oh! that he who hath said, "The earth is mine and the fullness thereof; the world and they that dwell therein," would open the hearts and hands and purses of his people.

Is there not some one individual possessed of sufficient love to God and his cause, of sufficient faith and ability, to contribute himself the entire sum?

Sight checks on New Orleans in my favor, as the president of the college, can be conveniently used, and will be most thankfully received and judiciously appropriated.

ADVICE is like snow—the softer it falls the longer it remains and dwells in the mind.

OUR GERMAN WORK.

MR. EDITOR: It is now twenty-six years since our church employed the first German missionary. The field assigned him was Galveston, Texas. From this the work has spread throughout the west of the Lone Star State, so that we have there, at this time, fourteen flourishing congregations, more or less, with as many houses for worship. Our Northern friends have taken two churches from us—one at Victoria, and the other at Hedwig's Hill, Mason county. The titles to these houses were not correctly worded, and our friends, finding this out, soon sent money and men to these points, appropriating, with some of our people, our property—property bought and paid for by our church. At Hedwig's Hill Bro. Grote, assisted by the members who remained true to the church which gave them spiritual birth, is building another house for worship, this time properly deeded, of course. At another point—New Fountain—our brethren, led by their pastor, Rev. Jacob Bader, are erecting a commodious church building, the old one being too small for the increased membership. At Chappell Hill and Brenham a new mission was started at the beginning of the present Conference year; and here too, if signs do not deceive me, a suitable chapel will soon be erected. Bro. Vordenbaumen, the present presiding elder, is a man of indomitable energy and acknowledged zeal; with him at the helm, our craft will assuredly make the port of spiritual and ecclesiastical success.

In Louisiana we have not been idle. In New Orleans we have three church houses and as many parsonages, whose combined value is nearly $100,000. The membership in two of these churches numbers one hundred and twenty each. The other—Soraparu Street church—though some time ago badly treated by a man who was led astray by the odor of Northern "flesh-pots," is, notwithstanding, prosperous, and promises soon to outgrow its misfortunes. At Carrollton we have a very pretty little church; but, the locality being unsuitable, the membership has never been and is now small. At Shreveport we are now making efforts to start a mission, Rev. William Lieser, the missionary, being on his way thither. Let the church pray for him and his work. It is a fine field, ripe to the harvest.

In Maryland and Virginia, thanks to the zeal and industry of our brother, Rev. E. N. S. Blogg, our work is rising out of the dust very promisingly. In Petersburg Rev. H. Ebers, a transfer from the Louisiana Conference, lately purchased a very eligible lot, which has cost $600, and is now making arrangements to erect a suitable chapel. His Sunday school, though but four months old, numbers already thirty-eight scholars. Keener mission, in Baltimore, superintended by Bro. Blogg, has a large and prosperous Sunday school; and here, too, efforts are being made to erect, by the end of this year, a church building, the name of which, I hear, will be "Keener Chapel." Pierce mission, at Hookstown, near Baltimore, is also making headway.

May we not, in view of the aforesaid, thank God and take courage? If the Lord be for us, who can be against us? Our German work is already, and will ever more be, a power in the land—a power for good. The German element is beginning to make itself felt. Let us win it for Christ—for our church.

J. B. A. ANDREWS.

NEW ORLEANS, May 20, 1872.

AN ELOQUENT EXTRACT.

The following is the conclusion of Mr. Punshon's address before the General Conference at Brooklyn:

My heart would reproach me were I to sit down without one other reference. I hardly know how to enter upon it, for as I look back to the last General Conference, and think of these four eventful years, and of the changes those years have wrought, I am as one in a dream—a dream which is bright, O so bright on its heavenward side, but which on its earthward has a rude and strange awakening—a dream which the destruction of the place in which you then met, and in which I was honored to greet you, has crystallized as by fire into an indelible memory. I seem to see the standard-bearers you have lost as they have fainted and fallen on the field—standard-bearers to whom God had given a banner that it might be displayed because of the truth, and who were worthy of the trust confided to them. I can speak only of those whom I was privileged somewhat to know, whose friendship I had hoped to cultivate—by whose example I had hoped to be inspired—but in reference to whom there is but the hopeless longing.

O for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still!

Bishop Simpson, I think of your colleagues in office who have been smitten from your side. Baker, the distinguished jurist, even then falling into the beauty of the tomb; and Clark, the acute and accomplished, the able administrator, and the preacher of commanding power; and Thomson, the Chrysostom of your church, of golden speech and golden value, whose large, child-like spirit could not harbor a thought of guile, and who seemed ever as if detained on earth only by slight and trembling tendrils. And Kingsley, the brave and brotherly, snatched away from you in the fullness of his ripe manhood, and before he had drawn upon his reserve of power, dying with the consecration upon him of his apostolic travels, and as if the sight of the Holy Land had but whetted his desire to go upward to the holy place, that from the track of the Man of Sorrows he might go to see the King in his beauty.

And then I think of others lower in office, but equal in esteem: of Mattison, who first welcomed me in Jersey City, a doughty champion against the man of sin; of Sewall, a burning and shining light, quenched, perhaps, by its own brightness, all too soon; of John McClintock, that "king of men," almost an Admirable Crichton in versatility of attainment, Melanchton in tenderness, and Luther in courage, but all whose wise, rare gifts were blent into one tribute to be cast at the feet of Him who was the Man of Sorrows, but upon whose head are many crowns; of Nadal, who drooped so soon after his friend that it seemed as if in preparing his memoir he had got too long so much for nearer communion that he must needs ascend to join him in the presence of the Master whom they both loved.

And then I think of a later loss than these—a blameless and beautiful character, whose name had an hereditary charm for me, whose saintly spirit exhaled so sweet a fragrance that the perfume lingers with me yet, and who went home like a plumed warrior, for whom the everlasting doors were lifted, as he was stricken into victory in his prime, and who had nothing to do at the last but mount into the chariot of Israel and go "sweeping through the gates washed in the blood of the Lamb." (Shouts of "Glory," and great sensation.)

Sirs, these are no common losses. I weep with you on account of them, and I am qualified to weep with you, for "a sword hath pierced into my own soul also," and I have borne my own burden of loss and sorrow; but these your comrades fell in a hallowed work, on hallowed ground. Bravely they bore their banners while they lived, but the nerveless hand relaxed its hold, and they have passed them on to others. We too must pass them on. The fight is not over. We receive unfinished labors from our fathers and transmit them to our children. Watchers in the night, it may not be given us to tarry until the morning. We can but wave the battle-flag gallantly for awhile, but our hands will stiffen, and our comrades will bury us before the fight is done. O to be kept and to be found faithful unto death! From their elevation in heaven they seem to whisper down to us: "Be followers of us, as we have been followers of Christ."

In 1870 a strange darkness came suddenly at mid-day upon the State of Connecticut, and many thought the end of the world was come. The speaker of the House of Assembly, then in session, was in his place, and when many desired to adjourn, he calmed the rising fears of the members with these words: "If this be the day of judgment, I desire that the judge may find me at my post of duty. Let the candles be brought in, and the business proceed." May God help us to be at our posts always and to the end. (Applause.)

REV. THOMAS C. M. GOLLAND, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church South of Pensacola, Florida, is in the city, soliciting aid for a parsonage for his church. He is asking for one dollar subscriptions, and we trust that he may obtain several hundred subscribers of this small amount. The object is most worthy, and Bro. Golland should receive encouragement and aid from all who love to do good.

CAMP MEETING.

A camp meeting will be held on the camp ground purchased by the New Orleans District Conference, commencing on Friday, June 21, and continuing to Friday, June 28, to which brethren, clerical and lay, of adjacent cities and country are invited.

The camp ground is eligibly situated directly upon the Gulf coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Mississippi, and within a quarter of a mile of the New Orleans and Mobile railroad.

Persons desiring to do so can build their own private tents. The trustees will provide a number of tents to rent, to parties desiring them, on reasonable terms. For general accommodation, boarding and lodging will be furnished on the grounds on reasonable terms. The railroads, to wit, New Orleans, Mobile and Texas, the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern, and the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western, will carry passengers for the camp meeting, going or returning, at half the usual fares.

Obituaries.

DIED, near Augusta, Woodruff county, Arkansas, March 10, 1872, C. W. STEAGALL, son of Rev. Henj. Steagall. He was born June 13, 1849. He was sick but a short time; was first attacked with a sore throat, at which time he said that he was going to make a long journey, and would make a safe trip. Soon after he was suddenly attacked with pneumonia, and became speechless, and remained thus till his death. Our young friend was an exemplary member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

We were well acquainted with Wesley. He attended our school nearly one year, and we found him a gentleman and Christian of the first order. C. IVES.

VERNON, LA., May 26, 1872.

REV. GREEN CALLIEN FORE was born in Washington county, Alabama, October 15, 1822, and died at his residence in Rankin county, Mississippi, April 10, 1872. He was converted September 11, 1856, at a revival meeting at Brandon, Mississippi, conducted by the late Rev. Henry T. Lewis; was licensed to preach October 25, 1856, and joined the Mississippi Conference, held at Brandon, in November, 1857. He traveled the first year with the late Rev. John R. Lambuth, and afterward was on the Greenville circuit; was located at his own request several years before his death. He was buried, with Masonic honors, at the city of Jackson, Mississippi.

He had been married three times. His first wife was Miss Appalonia McRea, daughter of the late Hon. Duncan McRea. His second was Mrs. Neely, widow of the late Olin Neely, of Rankin county. She died leaving two children by Mr. Neely, and she committed them to the care and education of Bro. Fore, who discharged his duty to them to the best of his ability. His last wife was Miss Lizzie Malone, of Arkansas, who survives him. He left an infant son by the last wife—his only child.

His conversion was most remarkable, when his surroundings, his habits, and his social and moral status are taken into consideration. His habits and associations were by no means calculated to inspire him with religious sentiments, but, on the contrary, served to stifle any aspirations of a higher or holier purpose than sensual pleasures and sinful indulgences. No one dreamed that even idle curiosity would induce him to go to the meeting at which he was converted. But he did go, and to the surprise of all became a mourner, and continued in prayer and supplication until he found peace with God. His conversion was well calculated to produce, and did produce, a profound sensation. No one doubted his sincerity, for he had the faith of a martyr and the courage of a hero.

When told by his physician that he would not live, he betrayed no fear or change of countenance. He said he was ready and willing to go if God so ordered it, and the only regret he expressed was at leaving his wife and child, whom he commended to the care and protection of him who doeth all things well. GEORGE F. THOMPSON.

CELIA BUONA, daughter of Samuel and Eliza Keown, was born in Smith county, Mississippi, September 7, 1852, and died in the town of DeSoto, Clarke county, Mississippi, May 12, 1871. Also JULIA QUITMAN, daughter of Samuel and Eliza Keown, was born in Smith county, Mississippi, November 9, 1850, and died in DeSoto, Clarke county, Mississippi, May 20, 1871. It may be seen, by reference to the above dates, that Julia was twenty years, six months and five days old; and that Duora was eighteen years, eight months and eleven days old. It will also be seen that there were only eight days between the days of their departure from this world. I have seldom if ever been called on to record such a mysterious event. It would appear that they were destined to live, die and go to glory together. I knew them from their infancy, and lived a number of years a near neighbor to their parents, and know of their having two or three serious spells of sickness at the same time. As often as twice, at least, they both lay several days, with almost no hope, on the part of their parents, of their recovery. Generally they sickened together, and they came within eight days of dying together. But, thank God, they not only died together, but they were born of God almost together. In the summer of 1855, at a meeting conducted by Rev. J. D. Hays, myself and others, they both joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and professed saving faith—I am not sure, but I think on the same day. Their parents, who spared no pains in their training and education, had a right to be proud of them. They were two as lovely, sweet-spirited young ladies as I ever knew. While modest and somewhat retiring, yet they were affable, pleasant and graceful. Duora delivered to her parents her dying charge. She sent her best wishes to all her absent friends. Turning to her father, she said: "Pa, you have been always so kind to me and everybody. I want you all to meet me in heaven." She also told them to tell her absent brother and sister that it was her dying request for them to meet her in heaven. Julia also died in great ecstasy of joy and peace. A short time before she breathed her last she looked up and said: "I see! I see!" On being asked what she saw, she replied: "I see heaven." Thus they lived together, joined the church together, almost died together, and are now in the New Jerusalem together. What a blessed thing to die the death of the righteous! F. W. SHARBROUGH.

OUR AGENT FOR LONDON AND LIVERPOOL.—Robert Babington, Esq., will represent the claims of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE during the season in London and Liverpool, and other parts of the United Kingdom.

NOTICE TO AGENTS.—The ADVOCATE accounts, recently sent out, were dated, as may be seen, in some instances as early as the fifteenth of April, and moneys which did not reach us before the time of their date were not credited, except in a few instances in which they were held for revision.

MR. E. E. F. ROSS, our resident advertising agent, is now on a brief tour through the West and North, and we commend him to the attention of our patrons, and shall be thankful for courtesies extended to him. They are assured that Mr. Ross has no other business, but devotes his entire time to the paper, and is entitled to all the consideration of one of its business corps.

THANKS TO AGENTS.—We are greatly indebted to agents for their prompt and business-like attention to the interests of the paper and their patience in adjusting our accounts. We trust they will send us all the money they can. Several thousand dollars, in the hands of agents, we need to help us through the summer. Our expenses are as great in summer as in winter, and have to be paid in cash.

WILLIAM E. COOPER & CO., agents for Singer & Co.'s Improved Family Sewing Machine, have on hand, at 89 Canal street, a full assortment of the celebrated Butterick & Co.'s patterns. The new and popular "Dolly Varden" pattern, all sizes, is now ready.

WE INVITE THE ATTENTION of our readers to the advertisement of Yut, Sing & Co., importers, via their parent houses in San Francisco, of China and Japan teas, silks, lacquer ware and fancy goods. A visit to their warerooms, No. 40 Royal street, will be found of great interest, and rendered pleasant by the courtesy of the communicative attendants.

COOPER'S WELL.—This deservedly popular watering place is now under the control of Messrs. T. C. McMackin & Co. We regard the waters of this well as containing medicinal virtues not surpassed by any in the world for the diseases for which they are recommended, and the long established reputation of McMackin as the prince of hotelkeepers is a sufficient guarantee as to the style of accommodation.

PRIVATE SCHOOL.—In another column will be found the advertisement of Miss Fannie L. Armstrong, whose school is to be opened on the first Monday in July, in the basement of the German church on Dryades street, near the corner of Felicity street. Miss Armstrong graduated at the Minden Female College during the presidency of that accomplished scholar and elegant Christian gentleman, the late Rev. J. Franklin Ford, by whom, in conjunction with the trustees, her diploma was signed. We think this is a sufficient guarantee of her competency. Miss Armstrong is in every respect worthy of patronage, and we commend her to the attention and confidence of parents.

One sip of this will bathe the drooping spirit in delight beyond the bliss of dreams. Be wise, and taste.—Milton's Comus.

Verily do the words of the inspired poet gleam with the light of prophecy; for if there is anything that is swift to operate beneficially on the human system impaired by physical ailments, it is Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Those whose lives "drag their slow length along," harassed by the petty but fretful annoyances of indigestion, dyspepsia, debility, febrile excitement, nervous irritability, exhaustion or the general suffering that results from hepatic causes, deserve the fate to which they are consigned, when, like the physician to whom the voice of sacred wisdom cried "heal thyself," they turn away from the means placed within their grasp. Price's Bitters will do the work; a vigorous stimulant, an agreeable elixir, a strengthening tonic, and a grateful adjuvant, the very universality of whose use is confirmative of their efficacy, they stand to-day stamped with the signet seal of medical approval, and radiant with the award of a high popular appreciation.

The Child's Corner.

ST. ANTHONY'S FISH SERMON.

BY JOHN W. WHITEMYER.

The Saint preached in Rome—
But no hearers did come;
Then he went by the streams—
Preached to fishes, it seems;
They, like juvenile whales,
Flapped delight with their tails.

The carps and the soles
All gathered in shoals;
They widened their jaws
With silent applause!
No sermon did ever
Please carp so well—never!

The spear-headed pike,
Of peaceful dislike,
With teeth sharp and bony,
Came to hear St. Anthony;
No sermon did ever
Please pike so well—never!

The salt of the ocean,
Our Lenten devotion,
The cod came to listen,
With eyes that did glisten;
No sermon did ever
Please cod so well—never!

The eel and the flounder,
From one to six pounder,
With neck forward reaching,
Did list to the preaching;
No sermon did ever
Please eel so well—never!

Crab, turtle and shrimps,
Most awkward of imps,
Rose from watery bed,
To learn what was said;
No sermon did ever
Please crab so well—never!

Fishes strong, fishes weak,
Both bearded and sleek,
All lifted their features,
Like sensible creatures,
In the name of the Lord,
To hear Anthony's word.

The lesson completed,
To the waves they retreated;
The eel to his gambols,
The pike to the shambles;
Though the sermon was long,
Their attachments were strong.

The crab remained odd;
More obese grew the cod;
The lobster stole coral;
Alas! for the moral
Of pulpit sensation
And strange congregation.

THE FAITHFUL SHEPHERD-BOY.

Gerhardt was a German shepherd-boy; and a noble fellow he was too, although he was very, very poor.

One day, as he was watching his flock, which was feeding in a valley on the border of a forest, a hunter came out of the woods and asked:

"How far is it to the nearest village?"

"Six miles, sir," replied the boy; "but the road is only a sheep-track, and very easily missed."

The hunter glanced at the crooked track, and then said:

"My lad, I am hungry, tired and thirsty. I have lost my companions, and missed my way. Leave your sheep, and show me the road. I will pay you well."

"I cannot leave my sheep, sir," rejoined Gerhardt. "They would stray into the forest, and be eaten by wolves, or stolen by robbers."

"Well, what of that?" queried the hunter. "They are not your sheep. The loss of one or more would not be much to your master; and I'll give you more money than you ever earned in a whole year."

"I cannot go, sir," rejoined Gerhardt very firmly. "My master pays me for my time, and he trusts me with his sheep. If I were to sell you my time, which does not belong to me, and the sheep should get lost, it would be just the same as if I stole them."

"Well," said the hunter, "will you trust your sheep with me while you go to the village and get me some food and drink and a guide? I will take good care of them for you."

The boy shook his head. "The sheep," said he, "do not know your voice, and"—Gerhardt stopped speaking.

"And what? Can't you trust me? Do I look like a dishonest man?" asked the hunter angrily.

"Sir," said the boy slowly, "you tried to make me false to my trust, and wanted me to break my word to my master. How do I know you would keep your word to me?"

The hunter laughed; for he felt that the boy had fairly cornered him. He said: "I see, my lad, that you are a good, faithful boy. I will not forget you. Show me the road, and I will try to make it out for myself."

Gerhardt now offered the humble contents of his scrip to the hungry man, who, coarse as they were, ate them gladly. Presently his attendants came up; and then Gerhardt, to his surprise, found that the hunter was the grand duke, who owned all the country round. The duke was so pleased with the boy's honesty that he sent for him shortly after, and had him educated. In after-years Gerhardt became a very rich and powerful man; but he remained honest and true to his dying day.

Honesty, truth and fidelity are precious jewels in the character of a child. When they spring from piety they are pure diamonds, and make their possessor very beautiful, very happy, very honorable, and very useful. May you, my readers, wear them as Gerhardt did! Then a greater than a duke will befriend you; for the great King will adopt you as his children, and you will become princes and princesses royal in the kingdom of God.—Young Pilgrim.

A GOOD LOAN.

I am going to tell you a story about three little children whom I met not long ago. They showed me their little wooden savings-banks, which their sick father had made for them; for he was too poor to buy tin ones, such as you sometimes see in shop windows, and such as you, perhaps, have. Each of the children had some pennies, which they had saved, instead of spending them for worthless notions that could do them no good. I asked them what they were going to do with their money. They replied that they did not just then know, but would find some use for it. Some time after this I again visited the home of these children, and picking up one of the little savings-banks found it empty. Inquiring what had become of the money, one of the children told me they had lent it away. I told them that they should be careful to whom they loaned money, else they might never get it back again. "We have lent it," said they, "to one who is ever so rich!" "What! rich, and borrowing pennies!" we exclaimed. They then told me this story:

"One day a minister of the gospel came along. He was poor, and was on his way to a neighborhood in which the people were noted for their wickedness. He was going to preach to them. While riding along, his horse lost a shoe, and he had no money to pay a smith for putting it on. The horse was getting lame from traveling without the shoe; and so we emptied our savings-banks, giving him the money. And doesn't the Bible say that if we give to the poor, we lend to the Lord? So, you see, we have put it out at interest; and we have no doubt but we shall be repaid—not, perhaps, in money, but in blessings. Besides, by helping the preacher on his way, we have helped to spread God's word, which teaches sinners the way to get to heaven."

Don't you think, children, that we might all learn a lesson from the action of these little children? Some of us are not so poor as they, and yet do we do as much? They, like the widow, gave all; we give only a small part of what we have. Let us pray that the Lord will give us liberal hearts, so that we may not refuse to give liberally, according as he has blessed us with the means, for the spreading of his word.—Gem.

BEGIN YOUNG.

In a land beyond the seas a minister met a mother in Israel, whose life had been lengthened out beyond the period usually allotted to man.

Talking with this aged disciple of the wonderful ways in which God had led her, the minister found her heart a temple of praise to him who had loved her and given himself for her. The service of God had been to her a delight. Eighty-two years she had walked in the footsteps of her heavenly Master, having given her heart to Jesus when but fourteen years of age.

Before the minister bade adieu to this aged saint, she said: "I want you to tell the children of America, when you return to them, that it will save them from a thousand snares to mind religion young. Tell them you saw an old lady of six-and-ninety years, who has spent her life in the service of the blessed Redeemer, and she has no such source of real joy as the remembrance that she early gave herself away to Jesus."

From many of the follies of youth and the sins of maturer years she had been preserved, because that in life's early morning she had sought and found the Savior. Bitter have been the regrets of many a heart that, waiting for a more convenient season, life's best years were spent in the service of Satan; but no one ever regretted that life's earliest, best years were given to him who has said: "Those that seek me early shall find me."—Messenger.

HENRY ASKING A BLESSING.

Henry had never heard his father pray. A Christian friend, while visiting the house, was invited to conduct family prayers, and also to ask a blessing at table. Henry wished his father would do so every day.

One evening only Henry and his little brother and his aged grandmother sat at the table, the rest of the family taking tea with a neighbor.

"Grandma," said Henry, "may I ask a blessing?"

"Yes," she replied, her eyes filling with tears, for she had long been a true servant of God.

"O God, bless our bread and milk. Make us good children. Bless pa, ma and grandma. Amen," said Henry. He thought no more about it but dear grandma told his father when he came home. The father's heart was touched by the example. He resolved to have a prayerless house no longer, and soon after became a Christian. Henry was only seven years old, yet see how his effort to seek God's blessing was rewarded.

RULES FOR DOLLS.

A wooden-headed doll should be careful not to hit her head against her mamma's, lest she should break it.

A doll should try to keep away from the rockers, as the rocking-chair may break loose and crush her. A crushed doll never regains her spirits.

A wax doll should avoid the fire, if she wishes to preserve a good complexion.

A rag doll should try in every way to improve her mind. Knowledge is worth more than beauty.

Often an old doll with a cracked head and a sweet smile is more beloved than a new doll with a sour face.

A doll should never be proud; for what is she, after all, but a doll? Also a doll should never be jealous when she sees another doll more finely dressed. Looks are nothing; behavior is all.

It is a bad plan for dolls to be stretched out on the floor too often, as stupid and heartless people are apt to tread on them. A doll that is trodden on is sure to go into a decline.—The Nursery.

LOOK UPWARD.—A young man once picked up a gold coin that was lying in the road. Always afterward, as he walked along, he kept his eyes on the ground, hoping to find another. And in the course of a long life he did pick up, at different times, a goodly number of coins, both gold and silver. But all these years that he was looking for them he saw not that the heavens were bright above him. He never let his eyes turn away from the filth and mud in which he sought his treasure; and when he died—a rich old man—he only knew this fair earth as a dirty road in which to pick up money.

MR. HUXLEY says the only good he "can see in a demonstration" of the truth of spiritualism is to furnish an additional argument against suicide. Better live a crossing-sweeper, than die and be made to talk twaddle by a medium at a guinea a seance."

The Farm and Garden.

FIG CULTURE.

W. H. Haynie, at a recent meeting of the Sacramento Farmers' Club, gave his idea of the cultivation of the fig in California in these words: "The Smyrna fig could be grown and cured as well here as in Smyrna or any of the countries on the Mediterranean; that they cannot be imported at less than about twenty-eight cents a pound in bulk, and there were millions of dollars' worth sent to the United States annually. We should and could supply the market. Fig trees ten years old would give on an average one hundred and fifty to two hundred pounds of dried figs a year, and two hundred trees could easily be grown on an acre—making for the acre thirty thousand pounds, which, at ten cents a pound, would give $3,000." On the same subject J. R. Johnson said he had been raising figs and marketing them a number of years; he had twenty good trees over ten years old; they average him $10 a year per tree. Fig trees must not be crowded; they do better standing large distances apart and the limbs trimmed horizontally, cutting the top of the tree off. They would run then like a grape-vine, and one tree could be made to cover a quarter of an acre. The Italians dry their figs on dry land. This gives a uniform heat, and they don't require turning, the sand becoming heated.

NOXIOUS INSECTS.—Young cabbage plants, after being transplanted, are frequently cut off at the stem by a black grub, which lodges in the ground. Whenever that is observed, search around the root of the plants, cut off, and you will find the grub a quarter of an inch under the surface, and kill it. If it is not there, it will be on the next plant to it, and near by there will be another. They are always in pairs, and near to each other. There is a small black flea in vast numbers, which eat off the leaves of young cabbages, both when they have just come up from seeds and after being transplanted. If the plants are lightly dusted over with fresh slacked lime for two mornings, while they are wet with dew, the lime will kill or drive off the fleas, and the plants will thrive. There is a greenish, mealy louse that attacks cabbages when half or nearly full grown, frequently covering the whole plant. A dusting of fresh lime, for two mornings, over the plants while wet with dew, will kill all the intruders. A large green grub, with black bands around its body, devours the leaves of carrots, celery, parsnip and parsley. It is slow in motion, and can be gathered with the hands and killed.

MARLS OF CENTRAL MISSISSIPPI.—Our friend, Colonel H. O. Dixon, has laid upon our table one of the best specimens of marl we have ever seen in this State; in fact, we think it equal to the Green Sand marls of New Jersey. This specimen was found on Town Creek, in this city, at Stewart's mill, near the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern railroad. Mr. Stewart, in digging a well, struck this bed of marl, at the depth of six or seven feet; the bed itself is seven feet thick. We are informed that immense beds of this valuable fertilizer underlies a large portion of Hinds county. There are thousands of acres of land in Clarke and other counties in southern Mississippi, and a large portion of northern Mississippi, underlaid with marl only five or six feet below the surface.

With this valuable fertilizer so convenient, there is no excuse for not raising fine crops of corn, and having an abundant supply of clover and other grasses.—Field and Factory.

RUST IN WHEAT.—"R. M. Y.," of Abingdon, Virginia, writes to the Southern Farm and Home:

"While I do not claim to have discovered an infallible cure for rust in wheat, I believe I have found the means of preventing rust in four crops out of five, perhaps more. You remember how destructive rust was to the last crop in nearly all the wheat-producing sections of the South. I raised as fine a crop as ever I had in my life, and I am an old farmer, while all my neighbors' crops were ruined by rust. I attribute my escape entirely to the fact that I top-dressed my wheat in March with wood ashes, putting on about twelve bushels to the acre. I got the idea from some Northern publication, (I forget the name,) which recommended ashes not only as a preventive of rust, but as the best manure for growing wheat. My experiment was so successful that I mean to top-dress my crop this year, if I have to buy and haul the ashes."

DRAINING ORCHARDS.—This is one of the most important things to look after in fruit culture. A subscriber from Newton county says his apples do tolerably well, but his peaches fail entirely. We are all inclined to think that his peaches fail for want of proper drainage, and the use of ashes and lime in his orchard. Most of the soils in Newton, Scott and other counties in that section of the State have a close and retentive subsoil, and very often what is generally known as a "craw-fish" soil. In such a soil no fruit trees can grow to perfection without drainage. As soon as the roots strike the water in such a soil the trees begin to fail, and if dug up, we would find that the small rootlets through which the tree takes up its nourishment had become diseased, and many of them entirely dead, having been killed by the acid water in the soil. The proper remedy for such a soil is to underdrain it to the depth of three or four feet.—The Field and Factory.

THE SWEET POTATO.—The sweet potato vine may be saved during the winter and used the following spring in propagating a new crop. I have tried the experiment during this year to my entire satisfaction. In the fall (at any time before frost) the vines may be cut in any convenient length, and placed in layers on the surface of the earth to the depth of twelve or eighteen inches. Cover the vines while damp with partially rotted straw (either pine or wheat will answer) to the depth of six inches, and cover the whole with a light soil about four inches deep. In this way the vines will keep during winter, and in the spring they will put out sprouts as abundantly as the potato itself when bedded. The draws or sprouts can be planted first, and the vine itself, can be subsequently cut and used as we generally plant slips.—Correspondence Georgia Telegraph.

DUCKS AS INSECT DESTROYERS.—When at St. Louis last we fell in with our worthy friend, Chas. Aenkler, of Waterloo, Illinois, and as he is an enthusiastic cultivator of the grape, the conversation turned, of course, upon that topic. We talked of insect depredations and the best means of preventing them, when he stated that they troubled him but little, and said that he raised over one hundred ducks in his vineyard last season. He says that it is truly wonderful with what diligence they dart after all kinds of bugs, thrips, flies and small snails, and he considers them among the best of insect exterminators. As they are also a very useful bird, lay a good many eggs, and are not "hard to take" when roasted, we made a note of this for the benefit of our readers, whom we would advise to try it.

IT IS SAID that lettuce seed scattered on the cucumber hills at the time of planting will prevent the ravages of the yellow bug; this would be an experiment easy to try. The lettuce plants could be destroyed by the hoe as soon as the cucumbers were out of danger from the bugs. The knowing ones have further said that poppies are a sure protection against every species of obnoxious fly and bug, and that Russian leather is safe against the moth that often destroys the binding of books, on account of the odor of the bark with which it was tanned. Spirits of turpentine and cedar shavings will protect clothing from the same on account of the odor they impart. It will not cost much to try either or all of these experiments, and if any should prove successful the result is worth knowing.

ACCORDING to a statement in the Atlantic Monthly for February, the value of the annual products of milk is nearly equal to the value of imports for the year ending June 30, 1871. Milk, consumed as food, at three cents a quart, is worth annually $275,000,000; butter, $195,000,000; cheese, $29,000,000; condensed milk, and whey and buttermilk used in the production of pork, $10,000,000; making a total of $510,000,000. The imports of all kinds are worth $520,000,000. So that from American cows' udders are squeezed every twelve months an equivalent to one-fifth of the national debt. All the greenbacks and the postal currency in the country could buy only four-fifths of it.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

WASHING.—Housekeepers will find it a great convenience to have two washboilers on washing day, one for reheating the suds, while the other and larger one contains the boiled clothes. It is as handy as plenty of flat-irons on ironing day. Let the readers of the Agriculturist try it and see.—American Agriculturist.

POACHED EGGS.—Boil a pint of milk. While boiling beat six eggs to a froth. Just before the milk begins to boil add half a tablespoonful of butter, and a teaspoonful of salt, and stir into it; then pour in the eggs, stir without ceasing, but gently, till it thickens—not more than two minutes. Take it from the stove or range, and continue to stir half a minute or so, and then pour it over two or three thin slices of toasted bread, which has been spread with butter, and all prepared in a deep dish before the eggs are put into the milk. This is very nice for breakfast.

HINTS TO NIGHT-WATCHERS.—A person who is sick enough to need night-watchers, needs rest and quiet, and all the undisturbed reposo he can get. If one or more persons are in the same room reading, talking or whispering, as is often the case, this is impossible. There should be no light burning in the room, unless it be a very dim one, so placed as to be out of the sight of the patient. Kerosene oil should never be used in the sick-room. The attendants should quietly sit or lie in the same room, or, what is usually better, in an adjoining room, so as to be within call if anything is wanted. In extreme cases, the attendant can frequently step quietly to the bedside to see if the patient is doing well, but all noise and light should be carefully excluded. It is a common practice to waken patients occasionally, for fear they will sleep too soundly. This should never be done. Sleep is one of the greatest needs of the sick, and there is no danger of their getting too much of it. All evacuations should be removed at once, and the air in the room kept pure and sweet by thorough ventilation.—Herald of Health.

THE SPOTS ON THE SUN.

Having studied the sun spots for about two hundred and fifty years, we have learned a good deal about them; and while it is still uncertain how the observed phenomena are to be explained, we have reached that stage which usually precedes the discovery of causes, namely, a general agreement as to the facts, drawn from large numbers of independent observations. It is established that these spots are variable in number, size, form and duration. Sometimes the solar disk is quite clear; but of 1,982 days between 1840 and 1850, during which the sun was observed, there were 672 days when spots were not seen. They have been frequently observed with the naked eye. They revolve with the sun, and at the same time have minor motions of their own. The solar spot consists principally of a dark, almost black, central portion, called the umbra, surrounded by a less dark, fringe-like tract, or penumbra. Within the umbra one or more still blacker spots are often observed, called nuclei. But black is here a relative term. Zollner says that the black umbra of a spot emits four thousand times as much light as an equal area of the full moon; and Sir John Herschel says that the Drummond light, when projected on the sun, appears as a black spot!

The photosphere, or luminous surface of the sun, presents also peculiar bright spots, streaks, threads, etc., known as faculæ, "rice-grains," "willow-leaves," etc. These cover more or less the whole surface, but appear to be particularly associated with the neighborhood of the dark spots. The dimensions and forms of the spots are very variable. Many have been observed having a diameter of 30,000 to 100,000 miles. They can be seen to form gradually, to reach a maximum, and to disappear; though some larger ones last during two or more rotations of the sun. Schwabe saw one which returned eight times, continuing 200 days. Sometimes they have the appearance of whirlpools, tending to support the opinion that they are openings in the sun's surface. Both the Herschels claim to have seen a notch in the sun's edge, as a spot is disappearing.

The theory that the spots are really rents in the glowing gaseous envelope of the sun, through which is seen a non-luminous, solid body, was held by Wilson, Bode, Herschel and Arago. Galileo suggested floating scum or scoria; and a view is now in favor, according to which the spots are due to precipitated clouds. Kirchhoff maintains that the photosphere is an incandescent solid or liquid; that certain parts of this surface undergo, from unknown causes, a temporary cooling, by which clouds are condensed above; that these intercept the rays, and cause the appearance of dark spots. Faye believes the sun to be still in a gaseous state. The photosphere, he thinks, consists of clouds which result from contact with the cold surrounding space. He calls the spots breaks and dispersions, caused by powerful ascending and descending currents. But Kirchhoff replies that on this hypothesis the incandescent interior, revealed through the spots, should certainly be luminous.

Herbert Spencer holds that the sun has now reached the state of a molten shell with a gaseous nucleus; that this shell is constantly radiating its heat, but is sustained at its high temperature by the progressive condensation of the sun's mass; that around the molten surface there exist two distinct concentric atmospheres; the lower and denser one consisting of sublimed metals and metallic compounds, and the upper one analogous to air. He explains the spots as cyclones, or whirling storms, in these atmospheres. The center of a cyclone being a region of rarefaction, and consequently of refrigeration, will be filled with a cloud, in this case, of metallic vapor; and he ingeniously shows how the observed peculiarities of form, shade and motion in the solar spots might result from such a cause. But Mr. Spencer himself declares that no theory of the solar spots can be considered as established at present.

It is pretty well demonstrated that the spots are signs of mighty solar agitations, and that these disturbances are connected with magnetic storms on the earth. Moreover, it has been shown by the Swiss astronomer, Wolf, who with incredible labor collated and discussed the whole history of the sun's spots from 1750 to 1860, that they have regularly recurring periods of greatest and least frequency; so that the sun is properly a variable star. The reader will find an interesting article, by Prof. Youmans, in the Popular Scientific Monthly for June, from which the foregoing is condensed.

"I CAN SPEAK several different languages," said a convict, as he entered a penitentiary. "No matter," said the keeper, "we have only one language here, and very little of that."

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND
ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of first-class School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—and should not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—of School and College Text-books and educators named below, which are now issuing a complete series by the eminent Southern scholars as the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books
Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,
By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicitous arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,
By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unsurpassed in elegance, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,
By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,
By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

SWINTON'S CONDENSED
SCHOOL HISTORY.
(From the Virginia Educational Journal.)
Mr. Swinton's reputation led us to examine this book. What is of most importance in the work is its extreme fairness. It is vastly superior, in this respect, to any history issued at the North that we have seen. Where accuracy seems almost impossible, he comes nearer to the truth than the others.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The weather has been clear and warm, and from every direction we receive favorable crop accounts. In fact, the entire aspect of the cotton-growing region presents a cheering prospect.

The river is 4 feet 4 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the thirty-first ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi.... bales.	1,164
Lake	1
Arkansas	141
Mobile	927
Total	2,253

On Saturday there was about the usual inquiry for the medium and higher grades, but a stronger demand for low ordinary to strict ordinary inclusive, and 1,450 bales changed hands at the quotations of the previous day for the latter and at an improvement of ⅛@¼c. in low middling and the higher grades, good ordinary closing at previous rates, low middling at 23½@24c., and middling at 24⅛@24¼c. On Monday the supply of low middling and middling was limited, and factors held those grades at materially higher prices, from which they refused to make any concessions. Under these circumstances holders of imperative orders for those kinds were compelled to advance their offers, and sales were made at 23½@24c. for low middling and 25c. for middling, showing an improvement in the former of ¼@⅛c., and in the latter of ⅝@¾c. The lower grades, at the same time, were about ¼c. dearer. The business was confined to 950 bales. On Tuesday the market was unusually dull, but toward the close buyers came forward and took nearly 1,600 bales, mostly of the lower grades, which swelled the day's business to 1,800 bales. The low cottons are reported to have been in accordance with our figures, but quotations for the medium and better qualities are adjusted more from the views of brokers and factors than from actual sales, and must be regarded as nominal. Orders, however, could hardly be filled at any less.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 945,388 bales, against 1,365,941 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,136,521 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 72,840 to France, and a decrease of 821,910 to Great Britain, and of 321,129 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Low ordinary	18½ @ 19¾
Ordinary	19¾ @ 21¼
Good ordinary	22¼ @ 23
Low middling	24¼ @ 24½

SUGAR.—The market has been very dull since our last review, and only a small portion of the receipts were sold. On Tuesday 52 hhds. were sold on the landing at 7c. for inferior, 9@9½c. for good fair to fully fair, and 11¼c. for choice yellow clarified. City refinery sugar is selling on orders for the country at 10½@11½c. for yellow clarified, 12⅝@12⅞c. for white, 13⅛@13¼c. for crushed and powdered, and 14c. for cut loaf.

MOLASSES.—Only a few small lots have come in from plantation, and a few bbls. prime reboiled sold on Monday at 52c. ₱ gallon. City refinery is jobbing at 30c. for inferior, 40c. for common, 50c. for fair, 55c. for prime, 60c. for choice, and 80c.@$1 ₱ gallon for golden sirup.

CORN.—The market has been well supplied with sack corn, and the demand is good, but at prices a little easier for buyers. The sales embraced 10,500 sacks at 70@71c. for mixed, 73@74c. for yellow and 75c. for white. Corn in bulk is offering at 60c. ₱ bushel and there are orders here for Liverpool and for Glasgow, but they cannot be filled, owing to the want of freight room.

OATS.—On Tuesday 3,000 sacks sold at 53c. for Ohio river, 53c. for St. Louis and 55c. for choice Western.

BRAN—Is in good supply, but the demand is limited and the market is dull, though without any decline in prices. On Tuesday 200 sacks sold in lots at $1.25 ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—The market has continued dull and is still more depressed. On Tuesday 100 bbls. mess sold on private terms, and 75 do. at $13 ₱ bbl. It is retailing at $13.25 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—On Tuesday the sales were confined to 25 casks shoulders at 5½@5¾c. ₱ lb. Shoulders are quoted at 5⅝@5¾c., clear ribs 7½c., clear sides 7⅞@8c. ₱ lb.

HAMS.—On Tuesday 10 and 20 tierces choice sugar-cured sold at 12¼@12½c. ₱ lb. Ordinary, or brands not generally known, are dull at 10½@11½c. ₱ lb., as in quality and brand.

LARD.—On Tuesday a lot of 40 tierces refined sold at 9¾c. ₱ lb. Packers' in tierces is quoted at 8¾@9c., refined 9¼@9¾c., kegs 10½c. ₱ lb. for kettle-rendered, and 11c. for refined.

BREAKFAST BACON.—The supply is fair, without much demand. Western commands 10@10½c. ₱ lb., as in quality.

BEEF.—The supply continues light, hence the demand is small. Texas commands $11@12, Western $15.50@16 ₱ bbl. Western is scarce.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 113⅜@113⅝, (against 114⅜ at New York,) and closed at 113⅝@113¾, (against 114⅜ at New York.)

The sales of silver have been confined to small lots, including $300 in American half dollars on Saturday at 108½; $1,000 on Monday at 109; and $1,000 on Tuesday at the same.

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JUNE 13, 1872. NO. 24.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, June 5.—The General Synod of the Reformed Church in America met in Brooklyn this afternoon. The session is likely to continue ten days. An organization was only effected to-day.

Vicksburg, June 5.—J. Hornthal, an old merchant of this place, died this morning.

Richmond, Va., June 5.—The International Typographical Union today selected Montreal as the place of their next annual meeting. Boston was the principal contesting city. A resolution was adopted condemning the practice of making religious or political sentiments qualifications or disqualifications for employment, and that subordinate Unions be recommended to petition Congress for the abolition of the Government Printing Office. A resolution was offered that all subordinate Unions are recommended to admit female printers to membership upon the same footing as males.

San Francisco, June 5.—Oregon election returns are incomplete, but they indicate that the Republicans have carried the State with a sufficient majority in the Legislature to insure the election of a Republican United States Senator.

Philadelphia, June 6.—In the National Republican Convention today the vote for General Grant was unanimous. In casting the votes of the delegations, each chairman made a little speech, which was received with great good humor. The following is not among the most extravagant: Mr. Popham, of Virginia, said: "Her (Virginia's) Republican people, marching forward under her banner, sic semper tyrannis, intends next autumn to put her armed heel on the head of the Democratic party. The gods are just, and Virginia must and will be redeemed."

The convention united in singing "John Brown" when the nomination was announced. After the hurly-burly had subsided, a motion was made to suspend the rules, and nominate the Vice President; carried. Pennsylvania nominated Senator Wilson; Massachusetts seconded the nomination. Indiana nominated Colfax; Michigan seconded the nomination; Mississippi also seconded this nomination. Mr. Lynch said it seemed to him as if the spirit of Lincoln was here, and he remembered what that patriot said on one occasion: "It is not a safe time to swap horses."

After the adoption of the platform, Virginia nominated John F. Lewis, colored; Texas nominated E. J. Davis. The vote stood, Wilson 364½, Colfax 321½; Virginia changed to Wilson, which gave him the nomination. The convention then adjourned sine die.

Galveston, June 6.—The employees on the Houston and Texas Central railroad struck on account of a new order of the company, called the "Death Warrant," which relieves the company of all damages on account of any injury to or death of any employee which may be caused by neglect or fault of any other employee of the company. The company discharged all employees who signed a declaration against the "death warrant." Ten engines are at Hempstead, reported disabled by the removal of portions of their works. Great excitement prevails, but no act of personal violence committed. All trains except those carrying the mails have been stopped.

New York, June 7.—The Grand Lodge of Masons has appointed a committee to revise amendments to the constitution.

John Lanahan, of the Methodist Book Concern, was arrested to-day for libel, and bail fixed at $50,000. Bail not forthcoming.

New York, June 8.—Dr. Lanahan was released from prison this afternoon on $5,000 bail.

Preparations of all trades union are being made for a grand parade on Monday.

The printers threaten to join the eight hour movement early in June.

Baltimore, June 8.—The clerical committee, before which the charges against Dr. Huston were investigated, consisted of Rev. Nelson Head, D. D., of Leesburg, Virginia; Rev. A. R. Crenshaw, of Fairfax, Virginia; Rev. T. E. Carson, of Winchester, Virginia; Rev. P. A. Wisner, of Rockville, Maryland; Rev. J. M. Spangler, of Baltimore; with the Rev. Dr. Rodgers, presiding elder, as president of the investigation committee. The report acquitting the accused was signed by all the members of the committee.

Jackson, June 8.—Judge William Yerger, the eminent Mississippi jurist, died last night.

Baltimore, June 8.—The Clerical Committee by which charges against the Rev. Dr. Huston, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, have been investigated, after a session of deliberation, lasting through the entire night, to five o'clock this morning, declared him not guilty of the charges.

Cincinnati, June 9.—A terrible tornado passed over Bellefontaine and vicinity last night, tearing up trees and unroofing houses in the towns of DeGraffe and Quincy, Ohio. The latter place was nearly destroyed and fifty persons injured. At DeGraffe ten or twelve buildings were blown down, the Methodist church being utterly destroyed. Mrs. Roll and two children were killed.

Washington, June 10.—A conference resulted in the withdrawal of the Democratic members, and the adoption by the remainder of a modification force bill, requiring an application of ten instead of two voters to secure Federal supervision at any voting precinct, and limiting the number of United States marshal's posse.

St. Louis, June 10.—An immense crowd attended the baptism, by immersion, of Miss Smiley, the Quakeress preacher, who hereafter will preach as an evangelical minister.

FOREIGN.

Paris, June 5.—Marshal Vaillant is dead, aged eighty-two.

Bombay, June 8.—A steamer has arrived from Zanzibar with news which puts the safety of Dr. Livingstone beyond doubt. Conriers had reached Zanzibar from the interior with positive intelligence that Dr. Livingstone had arrived at Unyamyemke. Mr. Stanley (Herald explorer) had left that place with letters from the great explorer, and was near the coast.

Florence, June 10.—Inundation on the Po has rendered twenty-two thousand persons homeless in the Province of Ferrara alone.

Nominations for State Offices.

ACTION OF THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

The Democratic Convention yesterday, the eighth instant, refused to ratify the ticket for the executive offices of the State which had been made up, after full conference, by committees appointed for the purpose by the Democratic and Reform Conventions. The ticket was thus constituted:

For Governor—George Williamson.

For Lieutenant Governor—B. F. Jonas.

For Attorney General—H. N. Ogden.

For Auditor—Allen Jumel.

For Superintendent Public Education—Robert M. Lusher.

For Secretary of State—S. D. McEnery.

Before action upon the ticket, the name of McEnery, the nominee for Secretary of State, was withdrawn.

The following ticket was then, without consultation with the Reform Convention, adopted by that of the Democrats:

For Governor—John McEnery, of Ouachita.

For Lieutenant Governor—B. F. Jonas, of Orleans.

For Attorney General—H. N. Ogden, of Orleans.

For Auditor—Allen Jumel, of Iberville.

For Superintendent of Education—R. M. Lusher, of Orleans.

For Secretary of State—Alex. Boarman, of Caddo.—Picayune.

The Southern Review.—We are reading the proof slips of the forthcoming July number of the Southern Review. We advertise its patrons of a rich number, and advise those whose names are not on the list to order it without fail. The April number has been considered the best that has appeared. So far as printed, the next number, we think, is even better.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

FRATERNAL.

The following discussion took place in the Northern General Conference on the appointment of fraternal delegates to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

The report on the fraternal delegation to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, to bear the fraternal greetings of the Methodist Episcopal Church to the General Conference of that church at its next ensuing session, was taken up and read. The report provides that such commission shall be appointed by this General Conference, and shall consist of two ministers and one layman.

Dr. Curry moved its adoption.

Dr. Hibbard said that he rose to speak on this subject with very great diffidence. He thought that this proposed action would not satisfy the Church South. There are certain facts in connection with this matter that we may as well realize first as last.

The Church South, it is well known, demand of us that we meet certain clearly specified questions and settle them, and until that is done it was his opinion that there is no use in our taking any action in this direction. Let us meet these points fairly and settle them, and then he doubted not that coalescence would be a comparatively easy matter.

Rev. W. H. Black, of Kentucky, said that if he understood it aright, and he thought he did, the paper under consideration does not propose unity with the Church South, but only fraternal relations and correspondence, and his opinion was that the only way we can ever come to an understanding with that church is to appoint just such a delegation as this report calls for. He had been many years alongside of that organization in his State, and he felt that the report recommends a step in the right direction. He hoped it would be adopted.

Hon. B. R. Bonner believed the time had fully come in the history of the great Methodist families in the United States when all differences should be forgotten. (Applause.) He had some experience with the brethren of the Church South. For ten years he struggled with others to build up the Methodist Episcopal Church on slave soil. Opinion was formerly strongly against us, and we encountered much opposition and some persecution; but things have now changed, and he thought the time had fully come when our church can afford to approach the brethren of the South and hold out to them the olive branch. There are some obstacles in the way of our Southern brethren approaching us which are not, perhaps, realized fully by us.

They did approach us in 1848, and we did not receive them, because circumstances surrounded us then that prevented it; but those circumstances are changed, and it is easy for us now to approach them. He thought duty and Christian feeling require the church to take this course.

Dr. Hibbard said that he thought some action rescinding the action of the General Conference of 1848 would be necessary before these approaches will prove availing, for by that action we declined to receive their fraternal delegates as such.

Rev. J. Braden said that Dr. Hibbard had made mainly the speech which he wanted to make, but he wanted to say further that, having spent some years in the South, he had a very strong desire for union between the two great branches of Methodism. He had often talked with ministers and leading members of the Church South on this subject, but every approach was met by reference to the fact that their delegates had been rejected by us in 1848. They understood that we refused to receive them, and they looked upon that as an indignity offered to their church.

It is true that we only declined to receive that delegation in their official capacity because we were in such circumstances then that we could not do otherwise than we did. We did then, however, receive that delegation as individuals, and tried to treat them kindly. Circumstances have changed since that day, and we can now approach these brethren with our fraternal greetings at least. He had talked with many in the Church South, and among them with Bishop Paine, and he said with tears that he greatly regretted the position of affairs between the two churches, and greatly desired that there might come a change for the better. This feeling is widespread through the South.

Dr. Curry thought that the report meets the case as fully as it can be met, and makes just the provision which should be adopted. We are not prepared to take back our action. We did right in 1848 as we were then situated, but the situation had changed since that time, and we now ought to be willing to commit ourselves to the changed circumstances. There were things then that made it impossible for us reasonably to act otherwise than we did, and we do not repent of that action, for we are not under conviction that it was wrong. Let the history remain as it is. We are now speaking for 1872. We will make no confessions, and we ask them to make none, but we are ready to forget differences and shake hands.

Dr. Akers said that in 1844 there was a certain committee of nine that has gone down into history. He knew one of that committee yet living, and he stands now before this Conference. That committee acted conscientiously. He had lately been in the South and had seen old friends, and among them some in high standing in the Church South, and the general feeling there is one of friendship. He hoped the report would be adopted.

Judge Caldwell favored the report. It is a practicable proposition on our part. We ought to send our fraternal greetings to the Church South. The members of this Conference from the South very generally agree upon this, and they are the parties most directly interested. Those old issues are past, and he did not propose to fight over those old battles. One of the great objections we hear in the South is that here are two great bodies of Christians, and who claim to be very much alike, yet they are ever fighting one another; and when we approach men and ask them to unite with the church, they say in reply: "Why ask us to join the church? We are at peace now, but if we join the church then we must be involved in your quarrels."

Let us take this action proposed. Surely, if we are Christians, we may make this proposition of friendship and brotherly intercourse seventy times seven, if necessary. If not, we do not deserve the name of Christians. (Applause.)

Dr. Slicer said: Suppose we reject this report, what then? Do we not put ourselves in the position of having met everybody else with fraternal greetings excepting the largest body of sound Episcopal Methodists on our own soil? He would not at present agitate the question of organic union with the Church South, but we can certainly agree to work side by side, and shoulder to shoulder, and preach the same grand truths, and maintain the same kind of an organization.

We ought to think more of our points of agreement, and less of our differences. We can afford to be "distinct as the billows, but one as the sea." This is a matter in which we cannot lose anything, and we may gain much. It is always safe to love people, and always safe for Christian denominations to love each other, and thus shut tight the mouths of infidel scoffers, and make them see how these Christians love, and be compelled to admit that though they may differ in matters of administration, they love each other. He hoped the report would be adopted.

Rev. D. Stevenson said that the substance of the last speech he made in his Conference of the Church South was a word for peace. When the division of the church occurred in 1844 he was a student, and took his place in the Church South. After the war he felt that he ought to withdraw from that church, and he did so and returned to the Methodist Episcopal Church. He felt that the unhappy differences between these two churches should be healed, and he should rejoice if he could be of some instrumentality in bringing this about.

As to the action of the last General Conference, it will be remembered that a commission was appointed to the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, and they were also authorized to treat with any other Methodist bodies who might desire union with us. One of our Bishops, with another member of the commission, went to the Church South, but they were not received as duly accredited fraternal delegates, for that church felt that their mission was not to them. They were, however, kindly received and courteously treated as brethren.

He believed that the hearts of many of the Methodists of the South are yearning for fraternity. Let us, then, send these men to them. Let them go kindly and lovingly, and he believed that from that day there will be fraternity of feeling and intercourse between these two great churches.

The previous question was moved, but the call was not sustained.

Dr. Matlack had two or three facts to which he wished to call attention. First. He might safely assume that, with the exception of our editors, no man has given more attention to what has been said at the South upon this subject than himself.

Second. There is not the slightest occasion for the introduction here of any such resolution of retraction as that indicated by Dr. Hibbard. There has never been in the South any demand that that action should be rescinded. The position which they assumed after their visit to us in 1848, and which they have since maintained, was that they had made their last overture, and that we must now be the approaching party.

Third. As to the feeling with which this action will be responded to, he had no doubt it would be cordial and friendly. In his intercourse with leading men in the South he had heard enough from their own lips to satisfy him that we have only to take this action, and our delegates will be received with open arms and warm hearts.

Another fact, and one more of a personal character, he wished to refer to. It was this, that when the Bishop sent him to the South, he went with this policy, to which he had adhered—to do nothing to hinder this good work of unity. He said then that he should never write a word or do an act that should lay a straw in the way of the unification of Methodism in America. Statistics show that the Church South is increasing, and the hopes of any who may have looked for her disintegration are doomed to be disappointed. The true policy, then, for both that church and ours, is to recognize all the facts and act accordingly.

Dr. Hibbard rose to a personal explanation, and said that he did not desire anything, only that we should understand the point he stated, not as a motion but as a fact, that if we shake hands with the Church South, as he heartily wished we might do, we must meet and obviate their objection to our action of 1848 on the same subject. He expressed personally no opinion, but only stated the fact.

Rev. E. Q. Fuller spoke in favor of the report. He thought the question involved a very important one, and one having not a little bearing upon our work in the South. He believed the report right, and the action it proposes very much to be desired. Having been himself for some years in the South, he wished to say that he believed there is a great and growing tendency among all classes toward fraternization.

The previous question was moved, and the call was sustained.

The report was then adopted by a rising vote, the Bishops and others on the platform participating in it by request of Bishop Janes. Only two in the Conference stood up in the negative. A fraternal delegation of two ministers and one layman is therefore to be appointed to visit the next session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The remainder of the report, relating to church property, was withdrawn by the committee, after which the report as a whole was adopted.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE.

Mr. Editor: On June 1, 1872, the District Conference, Selma district, Alabama Conference, adopted the following:

Whereas, Centenary Institute is the oldest Methodist school within the bounds of the Alabama Conference, and has been a blessing to the church in years past, and is still active in training the young for usefulness here and glory hereafter; therefore,

Resolved, That we commend again that old and valuable school to the favor and patronage of the Methodists and people of the district.

The conference requests the Nashville and the Southern Christian Advocates to publish.

There are now in Madrid two thousand Protestant worshipers, and the number is increasing regularly.

Promises may get friends, but it is performance that keeps them.

THE SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.

Mr. Editor: In the District Conference, Selma district, Alabama Conference, on June 1, 1872, the Committee on the State of the Church made the following report, which was unanimously adopted:

The presence of the president of the Southern University among us, and frequent allusions to that institution during the discussions in this conference, have directed the attention of your committee to its claims upon the favor and patronage of the church. On inquiry we find that but very few young men from this district are pursuing their studies at that school, while quite a number are abroad in other institutions. This ought not so to be.

1. Because the Southern University is now the only recognized Methodist Male College in Alabama.

2. Because it was founded in faith and prayer, and has repeatedly been owned of God in the presence and baptism of the Holy Ghost.

3. Because the standard of scholarship is as high, and the mode of instruction is as thorough there as in any institution in the country, and are all that the church can possibly desire.

4. Because the moral and spiritual wants are attended to while the mind is in training for the great duties of life.

5. Because war, and a preparation for it, are entirely ignored there, and the principle is recognized that the gospel is a gospel of peace, and that when it prevails over all the earth, and governs the hearts and minds of men, the sword will be beaten into the plowshare; therefore,

Resolved, That it is the sense of this District Conference that every consideration of denominational pride, religious interest, and regard for the salvation of our sons demand that we should give to the Southern University a generous and cordial support.

The Nashville Christian Advocate and the Southern Christian Advocate are requested by the conference to publish.

A YOUNG LADY MURDERED.

Mr. Editor: One of the most horrible tragedies known to the annals of civilization occurred near our quiet little town on last Monday evening. Sister Catherine Hutchins, a young lady of about eighteen summers, was murdered by one Perry Gill, a young man to whom she was to have been married the next day.

It appears that they had been engaged to be married for some time, but Gill, fearing that she did not intend to marry him, resolved on taking her life. Consequently on last Monday evening, while the unfortunate victim was dipping water from the spring, which was a short distance from the house, this heartless villain walked up within a few feet of her and shot her. The whole load of shot entered her neck, and, ranging down, came out at her breast. Every effort is being made by the sheriff and citizens to arrest the murderer, but up to this time nothing has been heard of him.

Sister Hutchins embraced religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South last September; and though she came to a horrible and untimely death, we have reason to hope that she is now walking the Elysian plains of heaven.

FROM THE WORK.

Selma District Conference.

Mr. Editor: The Selma (Alabama) District Conference was held in Orrville, May 29 to June 1.

Bishop Keener presided. The attendance, both of ministers and laymen, was good. The reports from most of the circuits and stations were encouraging. The religious services were well attended by the citizens of Orrville, and were profitable. On Sunday night twenty or more young persons were at the altar for prayer, and several professed conversion and joined the church. Bishop Keener endeared himself to all by his labors in the conference room, in the pulpit, and in the altar among the penitents. The citizens of Orrville entertained the delegates most hospitably.

John W. Portis, John M. Jeffries Fred. H. Smith and P. G. Wood were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, and G. D. McConnell and W. E. Kennedy alternates. The next District Conference will be held at Uniontown.

Lord Campbell once expressed the great pleasure it would give him to sentence any author to be hanged who published a book without an index.

SUMMER CALM.

A summer silence sits upon the lake—
No sound of plashing oar, no herd-boy's call,
To wake the mountain echoes. A soft haze,
A dreamy haze of pale and liquid gold
Hangs o'er the placid waters; glow so pure,
As scarce to touch with dire the ruby specks
That gem the troutling's back.

Now comes the low
Of wandering kine, knee-deep within the flood,
And now the hum of the brown-armored bee,
Laden with spoil of the rich scarlet flowers
That glint amid the sedge; now with sharp "whirr"
The purple dragon-fly skims idly on.
His brief existence all an easy dream.
The fish-hen-heron beside the reedy pool
Poised on one leg, with eager head drawn back,
Scans the clear surface of the dimpled lake,
And strikes unerringly his silver prey.

Above the broad flags their sturdy pennons wave
And gently rustle as the kingly swan,
With arched neck and snowy plumes, sails by;
Above fine forget-me-nots their petals hide,
And water-lilies in their chaste white cups
Veil their gold-fringed eyes; a glorious calm
Lies on the bosom of sweet Windermere,
Fraught with the tender balm of summer peace.

All the Year Round.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

Mr. Editor: A good deal has been written lately about the education of the ministry. Like sensible men, and according to the true genius of Methodism from its foundation till now, all that have written agree in attaching very great importance to this. True it is that some extremists have argued, within my hearing, against educating the ministry on the ground that "knowledge puffeth up." While acquiescing in this as regards some little minds, I hold that such are not fit for preachers, nor, in fact, for teachers of anything under the sun. Genuine education begets humility as surely as it opens new fields of thought unexplored, and depths unfathomable.

Your late correspondent "C." has written wisely and well, and I heartily indorse nearly all he says. But is his biblical school practicable and cheap in the existing state of our country? And, what is more to be feared, would it not turn out stereotyped ministers, (not preachers,) with sermons "cut and dried" for every occasion? He unwittingly points out the tendency of his plan in his last clause: "And this would be the best nucleus for the University."

When a man hears the voice of God, "Go preach my gospel," if he confers with flesh and blood, saying, "I am not sufficiently learned," does he not thereby set up his judgment against that of his Creator? He can always find many more ignorant than himself, at least in the way to happiness and to heaven. Let him go and preach to these, studying diligently meanwhile.—Then, with the proper guidance and help, he would learn more rapidly than he could if confined within college walls, seeing that he would have immediate and urgent use for every particle of knowledge obtained under these circumstances.

The two methods of learning to preach nearly resemble the two most common ways of acquiring a foreign language: one by committing the whole grammar "by heart" and afterward applying it in translating; the other by copiously applying each rule as soon as learned, and, when practicable, mixing freely with those who speak the language. While the sentence of this age of progress is loudly in favor of the latter plan, shall we Methodists revert to the old and exploded way of "stuffing?"

Do not regard the term "old fogy," which is so often hurled at those professing my sentiments, as at all opprobrious; but it strikes me that it is far more applicable to those who favor the method of educating ministers universally in vogue before the days of Luther, and nearly so till the time of our great reformer.

It seems to me that just as other denominations are beginning to see the efficiency of our system as carried out fifty years ago, the men of "progress" in our church are advancing back to the landmarks of the fourteenth century.

Without depreciating the usefulness of other denominations, both sides to this question agree that Methodism has done more to enlighten, as well as to purify the world, than any other branch of Christ's church within the same time. Why, then, abandon our polity for one that has been tried long with less effect?

The only tenable argument in favor of such a course lies in the fact that our plan is not carried out, and therefore we see many shamefully ignorant men disgracing our pulpits. Sadly true! But where rests the blame, and what is the best remedy? A careful student of our history for the past forty years will perceive that since the first agitation of a theological seminary in our church there has been a gradual decline in the standard of education among our elders. Not that a less comprehensive course of study is prescribed by our Bishops, but that the examining committees are becoming more and more lax, partly influenced by the seminary idea, and partly by a man-fearing spirit. (This last might also be found among seminary professors by a moderate search.) How often do we now hear of a candidate being turned back or refused admission on account of a want of studiousness? I fear that our presiding elders do not fulfill their whole duty in giving needed instruction to the undergraduates. Once to be a presiding elder was an honor and a high responsibility. Now we occasionally hear the question mooted whether they are not "fifth wheels." Too many of them do neglect their most important duty.

Our plan of educating ministers has been very "effectual in the pulling down the strongholds of Satan." It is not carried out at present. Which is wisest, to bend all our energies to revive this plan, or to substitute one proved less efficacious and certainly more expensive?

Our General Conference has done all that is necessary to open a way for the theological training of boys, in providing for biblical chairs in our already numerous colleges. Let our whole church rally to the support of these noble institutions, and no longer send her sons and daughters to Catholic or infidel schools because they pretend to be cheaper. As to men who feel called to preach, they have no time for delay. It is dangerous. In my humble estimation, one-third of the money requisite to establish and keep up a theological or biblical school, as proposed, would suffice to form a fund in each Conference for supplying all undergraduates, who need such help, with all the standard theological works, Bible dictionaries, books of reference, etc., etc., which would really help them to become useful preachers.

Our pulpits need more earnest, hortative and practical preaching, and less metaphysical disquisition. There is in our church a felt need of the power that accompanied the ministrations of our fathers. Let us not turn back to Egypt for it, but seek it where alone it may be found—at a throne of heavenly grace. It is this lack of power, and not of rhetoric, that causes our Zion to languish and her beauty to consume away.

Let the members of our Quarterly Conferences exercise the moral courage to refuse license to those who do not give evident tokens of the grace of God reigning within; let our Annual Conferences not fail to rebuke or even to expel the unworthy; and let all our preachers and people cry aloud unto the Strong for strength. Then shall the solitary place be inhabited, and the desert shall blossom as the rose. May God hasten the day!

Young Layman.

A FATHER TO HIS SON.

Dear William: Being now about to leave on my long trip, and in view of the uncertainty of life and the possibility of our never meeting again in this world, I have thought it my duty, as your father, to address you a few lines in the way of counsel and advice, humbly trusting that whether I live to return safe home again, or die away from home, God may bless it to your good.

You are now, my son, setting out on life's eventful journey, and your character and destiny for this world and the next are involved in that one life, on the threshold of which you now stand. Let me entreat you to pause and ponder. Survey the scene before you, and learn your destiny, your dignity, your duty. O should there be no plan laid down, no purpose formed for such a course? Shall your life be aimless, objectless, meaningless? Shall you trust to the incidents and casualties, as they spring up, for your scheme of action? Shall you float down the stream of existence, like chips or straws, and be at the mercy of whatever can lay hold on you? Shall mere chance form your character, select your objects, guide your conduct?

Remember, you can have but one life, and all, all, for time and for eternity too, is staked upon that one cast of the die, and embarked in that one adventure. "The wheels of time are not made to roll backward," nor is the experiment for eternity ever to be repeated. A misspent life can never be spent over again. A fault committed in reference to the end of existence can never be rectified. It is a mistake on which death sets the seal of eternity—a mistake which will require everlasting ages to understand and deplore. In view of these solemn truths I would earnestly entreat you to select an object and aim worthy of pursuit, and hold it up and say: "For this I live." And let that object be such as will preserve an undying and unchanging importance through every change of circumstances. You, perhaps, may inquire: What object meets these views? I answer: Religion alone. And where can we find anything that answers so well to the noble faculties the great Creator has given to man, however corrupted and enslaved they may be by sin? With this for our object, we are living for something worthy our nature; something congruous to our powers of intellect, will, heart, memory and conscience; something that will make us conscious that we are not living below ourselves; not only living really for immortality, but, in the fullest sense of the term, it is the only way to do so. "Godliness is profitable for all things, having the promise of the life that now is, as well as that which is to come." The beautiful allegory of Solomon will be found true: "Wisdom (religion) is more precious than rubies; and all things thou canst desire are not to be compared with her. Length of days is in her right hand, and in her left hand riches and honor. Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. She is a tree of life to them that lay hold upon her: and happy is every one that retaineth her."

Religion will be the guide of your youth, the comfort of your manhood and the staff of your old age. If you succeed in life, it will preserve you from the snares of prosperity, and if you fail it will be your solace and comfort in adversity.

Should you be exposed to the temptations of bad company, it will be your shield; or if you should live much alone, it will be the comforter of your solitude. It will guide you in the choice of a companion for life, sweeten the cup of connubial bliss, and survive the rupture of every earthly tie. It will refresh you with its cooling shade amidst the heat and burden of life's busy day, be the evening star of your declining years, and your lamp in the dark valley and shadow of death, and then rise with you as your eternal portion in the realms of immortality. Like its Divine Author, "it is the same yesterday, to-day and forever."

When the great Wizard of the North (as Sir Walter Scott was called, on account of the enchantment of his pen) was in his last illness, he said to his son-in-law: "Lockhart, be a good man—be a religious man." "Read to me," said he to the same near relative. "What book, sir?" With a look of surprise, almost of rebuke, the dying novelist and poet said: "There is only one book that will suit me now." Take the advice of that extraordinary man—"Be a religious man." And O, could the great poet speak to you from that world to which his lofty spirit has passed, with how much deeper emphasis would he say: "Be a religious man." In that one short sentence is comprehended more true wisdom, more real dignity, more genuine philosophy, more pure happiness, more unfading honor, than can be learned from the hundred volumes of his bewitching pen.

"Remember now," my son, "your Creator in the days of your youth." Yours is a halcyon season, if you did but know it. Religion will guard you from the snares to which youth are ever and everywhere exposed. It will comfort you in sorrow, guide you in perplexity, cheer you in solitude. I speak from experience, for it has done all this for me. And there is another thing it will do for you: it will save you from doing harm, and enable you to do good. None will be poisoned by your principles, nor seduced by your temptation, nor corrupted by your example. "My unkindness has murdered my wife, my principles have corrupted my friend, and my extravagance has beggared my boy," was the agonizing and remorseless confession of a dying infidel and libertine. What mischief you may do, what ruin you may inflict, if you are not religious, you cannot conceive, and would shudder to know. But, on the other hand, true piety will necessarily make you a philanthropist. You will imitate him of whom it is so simply but sublimely said: "He went about doing good."

Religion is patriotism; and he who seeks to spread it, as well as to practice it, is in a double sense a patriot. This will be your employment if you fear God. You will in some way or other seek to make bad men good, and good men better. The voice of God and the times say: "Do something—do it." Catch the inspiration of the command, and determine to leave the world better than you found it.

I now bring this somewhat long letter to a close by reminding you that there may be no time to lose in making up your mind on this momentous theme. Life is the most uncertain and death the most certain thing in man's history. "Youth is mortal as fourscore." Presume not on long life. You have followed some of your young companions to the grave, and ere long the same last offices of friendship may be performed for you. They lie in "the congregation of the dead;" they have given up the Ghost; and where are they? O, to those who are prepared, it is a sublime thing to die: they shall begin the year on earth and end it in heaven. But how indescribably awful the reverse to those who have neglected to glorify God by a life of religion, who have lived in vain as regards another world, and lost the sublime end of existence. Will they not exclaim, in the first moment of waking up in another world: "I have lost my life, for I have lost my soul." Such have committed a mistake which, I repeat, will require an eternity to understand and an eternity to deplore. From that mistake may God, in his great mercy, preserve you by bringing you with clear intelligence, deliberate resolution, inflexible purpose and prayerful dependence to adopt and ever maintain the Apostle Paul's choice of an object of existence, and say in reference to the salvation of your immortal soul: "This one thing I do."

Your affectionate father, B.

For the Advocate.

THE GREAT COMMISSION.

Mr. Editor: In the Advocate of May 2 Dr. R. Abbey calls our attention to the explanation we gave, some time since, of certain terms in what is sometimes called the "great commission," and says: "I give it a different interpretation from what he does." But when we come to the point, he further says: "I agree with Bro. Dowling that, regarding these two verses a 'commission,' in the sense he does, and taking the words literally, the thing commanded has not yet been done, for no nation has yet been brought into the church." Thus it will be seen that he gives "it a different interpretation from" us, and at the same time "agrees with" us—admitting our standpoint. Then the main point at issue between us is as to whether it is a "commission" in the "proper sense," or in any sense, or "a lesson of instruction on the subject of preaching generally and in detail." Well, whether we call it the one or the other will not amount to a great deal while we agree as to the subject-matter it contains, and rights and privileges it imparts.

In so far as preaching is concerned, we heartily agree with the doctor that "years and centuries before" the giving of this great commission "thousands upon thousands of divinely-commissioned ministers preached to 'all the world,' or all who would come and hear, all the doctrines and conditions of salvation we now preach." We also maintain that preaching has ever been the primary and chief instrumentality employed by the "God of grace" in giving to all men an overture of mercy. Thus it is shown by the Apostle Paul that preaching, or "the work of the ministry," is the point in which all the gifts of Christ to the church find their unity in "perfecting the saints." Let us read the whole passage: "And he (Christ) gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God," etc. In this it will be seen that Christ sustains an equal relation to apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers "in the work of the ministry," because he gave the one as well as the other. Besides this, the prophecy of the prophet and the miracle of the apostle were subordinated to the higher and nobler work of preaching, and that, too, preaching the gospel. Paul again says: "The Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed." And again: "For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them; but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." Therefore it was in the light of these precedent facts that Christ gave to the apostles—and gospel dispensation—the instruction contained in the "great commission" or "lesson," incorporating broader authority with commensurate privilege, and furnished the pleasing assurance of the divine presence "always, even unto the end of the world." As the presence of Christ was essential to the success of the gospel preached by the apostles, so it is now; and as preaching was the pre-eminent work in the "commission" then, so now. Hence the substance of that charge, "generally and in detail," is still in force upon the mind and heart of every truly-called preacher.

It is in this commission, and in this only, that we find the authority and formula of baptism. Before this period it is very probable that a different formula of baptism was in use. But now Christ enlarges the sphere of action of those who are to go forth and preach or teach, and specifies one portion of their work as that of making "disciples," and shows the ceremony of initiation to be baptism, and that baptism is to be "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

Now, wherever this formula is recognized and used, there is certainly a manifest admission, at least, of the authority contained in what we call the great commission.

We are satisfied that Dr. R. Abbey uses the above formula when he baptizes any person. Will he be so kind and good-tempered as to tell us why he uses it in preference to any other?

We do not presume to give Dr. Abbey light upon the subject in hand, but merely to explain more at large than heretofore.

The Advocate—Reading and Enterprise—Catholicism and the Negroes—Crop Prospects, Etc.

Mr. Editor: I am always glad to get the Advocate. Some say it is not so good as it used to be; others that it is just as good, and others again that it is better. So the conclusion is that the Advocate sustains itself. At any rate, I find that all who take it and read it are loth to give it up, and I find also that where it is taken and properly appreciated it is a mighty power in a community. The effects are visible in the conversation and in the ready response to the calls of duty.

It is very observable, at the present, that reading and enterprise generally go together. This is very natural. It throws mind in sympathy with mind, and thus begets united effort. There are some individuals in communities always out of harmony with others on subjects of public enterprise, because they have been so wrapped up in themselves as not to be acquainted with the public wants; and so it is with some communities in reference to the church at large. These communities or individuals are not ready to respond to the public enterprises of the church, because they are not well enough acquainted with the movements to be in sympathy with them. No doubt, at the present, by the increased circulation of the literature of the church, the spirit of public enterprise prevails much more generally than at any former period; but still there are communities, and many individuals belonging to the church, who scarcely know that we have a Publishing House, or even the existence of any of our periodical literature. This fact calls loudly for increased circulation. And this lack of circulation is not confined alone to the poor. I heard of a man, the other day, who gives a hundred dollars annually to support his pastor, and didn't know the name of the editor of the Advocate, and still less did he know about the paper. Of course such men as this will give any way when appeals are made to them, but it is best to be informed; and the majority of men will have to be crammed with information on the subject before they can see the least degree of propriety in it. Some men are willingly ignorant on these subjects. They take the papers, but do not read them. They will take the Advocate out of the office, together with several secular papers; the latter will be eagerly read, the former not noticed. These men are intelligent. They can tell you who is most likely to be President, who is best suited for Governor, all about the phases of political parties, and their leaders; they are conversant with the markets, and they even know all the most popular writers of fiction, and their latest works; but with church affairs they are very unfamiliar. No wonder Zion languishes.

Our section seems destined to be cursed with the blinding errors of Catholicism. Its efforts are directed chiefly in the way of its surest success—among the negroes. They are attracted by flattery, and bewitched by superstition and idolatry, until they become bound and fettered, and are then made easy instruments for either political or religious purposes—perhaps for both. The negroes are quite numerous in this parish (Morehouse.) This would afford a great field for the operations of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America. I think they prefer to be taught by sensible colored preachers, (who are very scarce here,) and by those who do not teach imported doctrine.

The spring was late opening, but the crops are growing off well, and up to the present are well worked. The negroes work better than usual, the planters are in good spirits, and the times are propitious for a prosperous year. May the Lord give us faith and zeal to gather a rich spiritual harvest. Yours truly,

A WHITE JONQUIL.

Mr. Editor: While taking a walk in the woods with a friend, one evening, I saw a jonquil lying directly in my path, its beautiful white petals all crushed and soiled. Some one, callous to its delicate beauty, lying there so helplessly, appealing so strongly to all that is heaven-born in our natures, had crushed it, with ruthless feet, into the dust, until it was hardly discernible from its surroundings.

Poor little flower! As I picked it up tenderly I thought how its former beauty and fragrance would have been appreciated had it fallen into the hands of one sensible of its pure loveliness.

So it is with many lives: born to bloom unseen on life's highway, or, worse fate, to have their loveliness mercilessly crushed into the dust and left there—unless some one crosses their paths, and, appreciating the fragrance they would have possessed had they adorned their true sphere, raises them to their heart, endeavoring to cherish into life a semblance of their former beauty.

But there are so many that would pass them by with indifference—so few would stoop to pity or protect! That little flower was right in my pathway, or I had not seen it. I think God led me there to teach me to throw the broad mantle of charity and sympathy over those poor, bleeding human flowers dropped carelessly from lives unable to understand them, into the mire, and crushed down, down, until not one atom of beauty remains, not one distinguishable feature from the miry surroundings, and they are lost to us forever!

How we all need that "charity that hideth a multitude of sins!" Aye, we all wish to imitate our dear, gentle, forbearing Savior; but do we "pluck the beam from our own eyes before we try to cast out the mote from our brother's?"

The Bible Emphasizes Service to Christ.

This is the real teaching of that misunderstood paragraph in Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians, iv, 11-13: "And he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for (unto, or in order to) the work of the ministry, (service, ministration,) for (in order to) the edifying of the body of Christ." Though the two Greek propositions are translated by the same English word "for," they are not the same, nor have they the same force. Accordingly the vulgate renders: "Ad consummationem sanctorum, in opus ministerii, in ædificationem corporis Christi." The teaching of the passage is plain, that these respective gifts of apostles, prophets, etc., are meant to secure the perfecting of the saints in serviceableness. Conybeare and Howson translate thus: "He gave some to be apostles, and some prophets," etc., "for the perfecting of God's people to labor in their appointed service, to build up the body of Christ."

The secret of success in reaching men lies partly in studying the law of adaptation. In watching a wheelwright at his work, I observed how careful he was never to draw his spoke-shave or drive his plane against the grain: yet how often in our endeavors to influence men are we careless about the fitness of times, occasions, places, ways and means. We do not make a study of human nature and the particular methods of approach adapted to each new object of effort, and so we often work against the grain.

The highest reward of service is perhaps the privilege of having been of service. Napoleon gave his soldiers, after a famous battle, a simple medal inscribed with the sentence, "I was there," and the name of the bloody field, yet money could not buy from his veterans this little memorial of their parts in the campaigns of the great warrior. To have been a soldier in the wars of God, under the leadership of Jesus, will of itself be honor enough to a redeemed soul. Let us remember Horace's line: "Exegi monumentum perennius ære—I have reared a monument more enduring than brass."

He who stops learning must stop preaching. The moment we cease to acquire we become unfitted to impart. Even the stores of knowledge gathered in past years lose their freshness, their vitality, their vitalizing influence, when accumulation no longer goes on. Hence Dr. Bellamy's maxim was: "Fill up the cask!" Then you will get a good stream, tap when or where you will; who wants stagnant water? Or, as the new president of the Michigan University said in his graceful inaugural: "No man can produce attractive and nutritious food for others by incessantly threshing in the same monotonous way, the very same straw which, for an indefinite period, he has been turning over and over, and pounding with his pedagogic flail."

The attempt to make conscience approve a course, dictated by inclination rather than duty, is like trying forcibly to make a magnet point a certain way. If it does point in any other direction than toward the magnetic pole, you have only disordered the delicate instrument and made your compass untrustworthy. This reminds us of a remark of Dr. William Adams, that "some men follow conscience only as a man follows a wheelbarrow, which he pushes before him with all the energy of a determined will!"—Interior.

A clergyman once said: "When I come to die I shall have my greatest grief and greatest joy—my greatest grief that I have done so little for my Lord Jesus, and my greatest joy that my Lord Jesus has done so much for me."

Be rigid to yourself and gentle to others. So said Confucius.

ETERNITY.

Eternity! How long art thou!
To thee we wing our onward flight,
As flies the arrow from the bow,
As bounds the war-steed to the fight,
Fleet as the courser skims the ground,
Or winged vessels homeward bound.

Eternity! Even as a sphere
No end and no beginning shows,
No first, no last in thee appear—
Thou hast no start, thou hast no close.
Thought's baffled pinions vainly try
To sweep thy range, Eternity.

Eternity! How long, how wide!
A ring whose ever-widening round
Expanding still, as cycles glide,
Finds not, and ne'er shall find, a bound.
Dread Ring! thy center's name is "Ever,"
While thy circumference is "Never."

Eternity! Thou endless day!
If once in every thousandth year
There came a bird, and bore away
A single grain from off this sphere,
Till all had vanished, hill and plain,
Eternity would still remain.

Eternity! How long thou art!
If from the eye, each thousand years,
One solitary drop should start,
Till ocean's cup o'erbrimmed with tears,
Till earth with all her hills was drowned,
Still art thou there, without a bound.

Eternity! While God is God,
So long shall hell and heaven remain.
Think on the dismal, dismal load
Of endless years dragged out in pain!
But oh! how golden-winged their flight,
When spent with God in fields of light!

The Demands of the Trades Unions.

Can it be true that the grocers of the land have petitioned their respective Legislatures to be allowed to sell sugar, flour, coffee and other goods at only fourteen ounces to the pound, charging, however, the same price as heretofore? Or that the cloth merchants have demanded that they should furnish only thirty inches of cloth to the yard, with no abatement of prices? If so, it would only be parallel with the modest request of the mechanics, who insist that eight hours, instead of ten hours, shall constitute a day's work, and that the same daily wages shall be paid after the reduction as before. The only similar instance which comes to our recollection is in the matter of the so-called "quarter" at private schools. This, in our childhood, used to mean three months, or a quarter of a year, or at least twelve weeks; but the teachers found a way to secure a whole quarter's vacation, and yet to have in the year four quarters of tuition as before, to be paid for by the parents! This was accomplished by calling ten weeks a quarter. Why did they not change the name to "term?" Similarly, fashionable music teachers, who give two lessons per week, call twenty lessons a quarter. A day's labor in old times was from sunrise to sunset; which, in summer, made a wearisome period of fourteen hours. Then twelve hours came to be considered the proper average; but as even this period left little time for family duties, and was over-exhausting, it was properly reduced to ten hours. Now the unreasonable demand of the trades unions is for eight hours and no reduction of wages! Did the mechanics ever hear of the old comparison of a hard bargain to a jug-handle, because it was all on one side?

They do not seem to understand that a freshet in a river near the source will soon swell the stream all the way down; that if the water in a lake rises at one end, it will rise as surely at the other, because, under the law of gravity, it must find its level. The price of production regulates not one market alone, but all markets. If three dollars per day secures only eight hours of work, instead of ten, as heretofore, then it will cost the community twenty-five per cent. more to gain the results of mechanical labor which are now obtained. We utterly disregard the absurd pretense that men will do as much work in eight hours as in ten, because ten hours are not so exhausting a period as to diminish a man's strength perceptibly toward the end. Moreover, the superintendent of the United States arsenal at Rock Island, where the experiment has been tried, reports that no such result has been obtained. But if the labor of mechanics is to cost twenty-five per cent. more, somebody must pay that advanced price. If it be said that the capitalist who erects buildings or engages in manufactures will be compelled to do this, it is plain that he, in turn, will look to others to reimburse him, and not in vain, either; for he will add to it the rent of his buildings, or to the price of his goods. And so the mechanic, who thinks he has gained by his new eight-hour scheme, will soon find that he is mistaken, when he comes to hire a house, or to buy clothing, or to pay for food. If, under the new arrangement, the capitalist's money obtains less labor, so also does the mechanic's money obtain fewer goods. In this manner the whole community pays more than formerly for what it needs, and who is the gainer? The boy who takes money out of one pocket and puts it into the other seldom makes the mistake of thinking that he has become the richer thereby. Why should intelligent mechanics fall into this delusion? Capitalists invest money in improvements in order to make a profit, and that profit must be paid, in the end, by those who are compelled to use the results produced. And who are they but the mechanics themselves, who must not only receive wages from the sale of their labor, but must also become purchasers of what others have to sell—houses, food, clothing, tools?

The difficulty is, that in the social state no one body of laborers can be independent of others. Raise the rate of wages (or, which is the same thing in effect, reduce the hours of labor) for one class, and the same process must go on till all have received a similar increase; because no class will be inclined, or could afford, to have the additional expense come out of its resources. As the farmers, for instance, are necessitated to use mechanics to build their houses and barns, and to manufacture their clothes and implements, any diminution of the hours of mechanical labor will add to the cost of a farmer's living and work; and so he must add correspondingly to the price of his hay, fruits, roots and grain. And thus the process goes round the circle of production. Society is like the human body: if one member suffers, all suffer with it.

The trades unions must learn that it is simply impossible to arrange business for the interest of only one part of the community. If they dislike the present rate of wages they can refuse to work; only they must not interfere with the equal rights of others to continue working. If any considerable number of them think that ten hours is a longer time than they can devote to labor for others, let them not undertake to dictate what shall be a day's labor for all mechanics, but arrange for themselves simply, according to the time they are willing to give to their employers. Why not agree on so much per hour, and then work and receive pay for as many or as few hours as they shall choose? Would not that be justice? Why should one who is willing to labor only six hours, be paid as much as he who labors in the same kind of work for eight hours? And why should the man who feels exhausted, or who is called away by other demands, at the end of eight hours, be paid the same wages with him who toils through ten hours? So much as to the abstract equity of the matter. We know that, in practice, employers who have contracts to fulfill by a given date must require those in their service to work a stipulated time; and thus there must be an agreement as to what shall constitute a legal day's work. And since, in this land, there is ordinarily work enough to supply all who seek it, with ten hours of labor per day, what is to be done to meet the deficiency of production throughout the country should the eight hour scheme be generally adopted? The effect would be to retard progress in all departments, to make a scarcity of industrial products, to raise prices, to increase by twenty-five per cent. the cost of living to all classes, and thus to leave the poor as poor as ever. And, as to the two hours of time saved each day, there is serious reason to doubt whether it would generally be wisely used. A few would devote it to self-improvement; the mass would spend it in idleness or dissipation.—Advance.

JEBEL MUSA was found by Mr. E. H. Palmer to correspond entirely with the requirements of sacred history as Mount Sinai and the locality of the giving of the law. At its northeastern extremity the spacious Plain of Er Rahah embraces an area from the base of the mountain to the watershed or crest of the plain, large enough to have accommodated the entire host of the Israelites, estimated at two million persons, with an allowance of about a square yard for each individual. This more than satisfies the conditions of Bishop Colenso's calculation—"an area of two hundred and one thousand one hundred and eighty square yards for the adult males of the congregation packed closely together"—about one-tenth of the real space on the Plain of Rahah, as ascertained by actual measurement. Of course it follows that there was abundant room here for the whole congregation, allowing the assembly on this occasion not to have been a representative one—of heads of families only. It is not required that this scene was the site of the camp, for we read in Ex. xix, 17, that Moses "brought forth the people out of the camp to meet with God." Merely standing-room, then, for the Israelites as spectators is required, together with space for movement; for at one time the narrative reads, "Ye came near and stood under the mountain;" and at another, "They removed and stood afar off." In their camping ground the people, no doubt, were scattered over a wide region, occupying many of the neighboring glens, valleys and mountain-sides, where water was to be found and pasturage most abundant. This, indeed, forms the second requirement, and is more than satisfied by the character of the place. We are told that "the neighborhood of Jebel Musa is the best watered in the whole peninsula, running streams being found in no less than four of the adjacent valleys." The height even of the mountain is spoken of as a well-watered basin or plateau in the center, surrounded by numerous peaks, of which two only, at the extremities, are prominent in altitude or position. Behind the Convent of St. Catherine a rough flight of steps up the deep ravine leads to a little recess in the rocks, where there is a cool and limpid spring. Hermits were wont to make use of rock troughs for the collection of rain-water, as the source of their supply, one of which exists still on the very summit of Sinai. Near the chapel of Elijah a splendid cypress is growing; and near the narrow glen of Ras Sussafeh is a little chapel of the Virgin, beside which grows an osier, from whence is derived the name of this portion of the mountain. Besides such proofs of a sufficient supply of water at the present time, there are indications of its greater abundance in former ages. In many parts of the peninsula traces appear of large colonies of Egyptian miners, whose excavations and smelting furnaces still remain. To maintain these, a large amount of wood, both for fuel and for timber, must have been consumed, which could not have been brought from a distance, and therefore must have been found at hand. As forest after forest disappeared, for these purposes, the rains, of necessity, became less frequent, until, with the extinction of trees, the fertility of the land ceased. In a mine of Wady Umm Themaim the laborers had propped up the roof with a branch of shittim wood, which is still standing where they set it up, dry and brown with antiquity, but as perfect in every other respect as when first placed there, perhaps before the great Pyramid itself was built. A third condition is that the Mount of Sinai should be prominent or even isolated. The people "came near and stood under the mountain," Deut. iv, 11; and again, "they stood at the nether part," Ex. xix, 17.; and in Heb. xii, 18, Sinai is described as the "mount that might be touched." Here again Jebel Musa answers in every way to the description, being a distinct mountain block, about two miles in length and one mile in breadth, with a narrow valley on either side. It is so separated from the adjacent mountains that it would be easy to "set bounds about the mount," Ex. xix, 23. The "nether part of the mount," or the bluff of Ras Sussafeh, rises so abruptly from the plain that one may literally stand under it and touch its base.—Independent.

MR. PITT IN A FROLIC.

Great men need to unbend and have a good frolic, as well as other people. The younger William Pitt was noted for dignity of person and for power of overawing associates. But he could play as well as rule.

One day he was in a high frolic with Lady Hester Stanhope, James Stanhope and William Napier.—They were struggling to hold him down and blacken his face with a burnt cork, when a servant announced that Lords Castlereagh and Liverpool, two of his associates in the cabinet, had called on business. He said, coolly, "Let them wait in the outer room," and went on with the sport. But finding himself overmatched, he said: "Stop. This won't do. I could easily beat you all, but we musn't keep these grandees waiting any longer."

His associates washed his face, hid the basin behind the sofa, and the grandees were ushered in. The manner of Mr. Pitt suddenly changed. His tall, ungainly, bony figure seemed to grow up to the ceiling—his head thrown back, his eyes fixed immovably in one position, as if gazing into the heavens, and totally regardless of the two bending figures before him. He was cold and haughty; they humble and supplicant. In a few minutes Mr. Pitt bowed them out, and then, turning round with a hearty laugh, caught up a cushion and commenced the battle again.

CLING CLOSE TO THE ROCK.

A long train of cars, fourteen or fifteen, were recently passing over the Alleghany mountains, on their way eastward. They were crowded with passengers. As the iron horse snorted and rushed on, they began to descend, and needed no power but the invisible power of gravitation to send them down with terrific swiftness. Just as the passengers began to realize their situation, they came to a short curve cut out of the solid rock, a wall of rock lying on each side. Suddenly the steam whistle screamed, as if in agony, "Put on the brakes, put on the brakes," but with no apparent slackening of the cars. Every window flew open, and every head that could be was thrust out to see what the danger was, and every one rose up in their places, fearing sudden destruction. What was the trouble?

Just as the engine began to turn in the curve, the engineer saw a little girl and her baby brother playing on the track. In a moment the cars would be upon them. The shriek of the whistle startled the little girl, and every one looking over could see them. Close to the track, in the upright rock, was a little niche, out of which a piece of rock had been blasted. In an instant the baby was thrust into this niche, and as the cars came thundering by, the passengers, holding their breath, heard the clear voice of the little sister on the other side of the cars ring out: "Cling close to the rock, Johnny; cling close to the rock!" And the little creature snuggled in, and put his head as close to the corner of the rock as possible, while the heavy cars whirled past him. And many were the moist eyes that gazed, and a silent thanksgiving went up to heaven.

Now, children, please sing the following hymn:

Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee:
Let the water and the blood,
From thy wounded side that flowed,
Be of sin the perfect cure,
Save from wrath, and make me pure.

Should my tears forever flow,
Should my zeal no languor know,
This for sin could not atone:
Thou must save, and thou alone:
In my hand no price I bring,
Simply to thy cross I cling.

While I draw this fleeting breath,
When mine eyelids close in death,
When I rise to worlds unknown,
And behold thee on thy throne,
Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee!

WE GATHER from an exchange that the Church News is disposed to accept as one proof of the divine origin of the Episcopal Church, the fact that it has been able to survive so many years of suffering from quartette singing. Bishop Griswold's plaint, near the close of his life, is quoted with reference to the matter, "Forty years long have I suffered from this generation." And it is added: "Certainly never was there a body which has struggled along more wearily under the incubus of languid praise than we have." Our "Church" friends are not the only ones who have suffered from this vampire that sits on the breast of the congregation, and sucks out its spirit, in stopping its breath. Our entire American Christendom groans, being burdened, and cries unto Heaven: "How long?" How would it do to abolish singing altogether in the churches, until these quartette tyrants have all gone off into the great world as Minstrels, Families, and 'Onians of various sorts, and then quietly begin all over again with Old Hundred, Coronation, and good old "Glory be to God on High?"—Christian Union.

NEITHER HOPE NOR FEAR.—Mr. Owen visited Alexander Campbell, at Bethany, to make arrangements for their discussion on the evidences of Christianity. In one of their excursions about the farm they came to Mr. Campbell's family burying-ground, when Mr. Owen stopped, and, addressing himself to Mr. Campbell, said, "There is one advantage I have over the Christian; I am not afraid to die. Most Christians have fear in death; but if some few items of my business were settled, I should be perfectly willing to die at any moment." "Well," answered Mr. Campbell, "you say you have no fear in death; have you any hope in death?" After a solemn pause, "No," said Mr. Owen. "Then," rejoined Mr. Campbell, (pointing to an ox standing near,) "you are on a level with that brute. He has fed until he is satisfied, and stands in the shade, whisking off the flies, and has neither hope nor fear in death."

DR. G——, of Sycamore, Illinois, riding in the country one day, saw a sign upon a gate-post, reading thus: "This farm for Sail." Stopping his horse, he hailed a little old woman who stood on tip-toe hanging out clothes. "I say, madam, when is this farm going to sail?" "Just as soon, sir," replied the old lady, placing her thumb to her nose, "as anybody comes along who can raise the wind!" The doctor drove thoughtfully on.

WE NOTICE a society has been organized in this country to co-operate with the English "Palestine Exploration Society," which is engaged in making searches for the ruins of ancient Jerusalem. It has recently made some very valuable discoveries. Having sunk shafts to the depth of one hundred and eighty feet, through debris composed of shattered arches, broken columns and rich pavements, the workmen, at the depth of one hundred and twenty-five feet, came upon an ancient bridge, which learned archæologists believe to be the bridge on which Titus held a conference with the beleaguered Jews. Thirty feet below this was a curiously-wrought pavement, and, twenty-four feet lower, still another. The result of the researches has fixed many disputed localities mentioned in the Scriptures, and tends to sanction what have been regarded as the wildest romances of Josephus. The present city covers a dozen old Jerusalems, which, like Pompeii, are ready to yield up their treasures to pick and spade.—Christian Standard.

THE correspondent of the Guardian writes that the new reformation in the Roman Catholic Church in Germany is at present the most active in the southern part. The chief obstacle is the almost certain excommunication and suspension of those priests who avow their faith. Of course none but those who are full of zeal and courage will brave this penalty. But where the priests go, the congregations in whole or part go with them, and such congregations are acknowledged by the State as Alt Catholic bodies. But in other cases a few members unite in a society, and when such a society becomes numerous enough, it applies for a church edifice for worship. In case the people are pretty equally divided, both parties are allowed to worship alternately. We have as yet no very accurate statistics respecting the number of those connected with the Old Catholic movement. But it is plain that the movement rather gains than loses in extent, and apparently also in depth. It is somewhat remarkable that the congregations are all in South Germany and the Rhine provinces.

THE WESLEYAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of the British Wesleyan Missionary Society was held in Exeter Hall, London, April 29, the Earl of Shaftesbury in the chair. The China Mission Breakfast, as it is called, was on the Saturday previous. From the report read it appears that in China the society has 9 preaching places, 8 missionaries and assistants, 7 catechists, 13 day school teachers, 2 local preachers, 147 members, (with 11 on trial,) and 11 day schools, with 338 scholars. The report at the Exeter Hall meeting showed a total of £110,763 as the home receipts of the year; the affiliated Conferences and the mission districts raised this sum to £148,585. The report, read by the Rev. G. T. Perks, M. A., spoke of the operations of the society in Ireland, France, Switzerland, Germany, Italy, Spain and Portugal; the Colonies, India, China, Africa, Australia, Fiji, etc. The total number of members of the church in connection with the foreign missions under the care of the British Conference was 72,129, an increase of 1,665. In connection with the affiliated Conferences there were 96,475, exclusive of the membership in the "home work" in Canada.

DR. CORE, writing to the Watchman and Reflector from Rome, notes the progress of the Baptist cause in Italy. He says: We have opened four meetings in this city. They are held at No. 9 Vicolo Gaetana, near the Ponte San Angelo; No. 108 Via del Tritone, a few steps from the College of the Propaganda; No. 46 Piazza Traiana, opposite the famous column of the Emperor Trajan, and finally at No. 3. Vicolo del Cinque, in the part of the city lying beyond the Tiber, the Trastevere. Our college is now at No. 72 Via Babuino; six students are preparing themselves for the preaching of the gospel to their countrymen. We also have meetings at Tivoli, Albano, Velletri and Civita Vecchia. Baptist churches have been organized in the following cities: Rome, 60 members; Bari, on the Adriatic, 75 members; Civita Vecchia, 20 members; Bologna, 60 members; Modena, 20 members; and finally La Tour, in the Waldensian Valleys, 34 baptized believers. An attempt is now being made at Leghorn to form a New Testament church. This is encouraging work for the first year, and gives fair promise that Protestantism, as represented by the Baptists, is destined soon to become an important element in Italy.

THE JESUITS.—It is well known that the Jesuits are the mainspring of the movement in behalf of the Pope's infallibility, and that they are trying to organize the Roman Catholic populace in all countries against all civil governments that oppose the supremacy of the Pope. The movement of Bismarck to exclude them from the inspectorship of schools was based on this conviction, and it would not be wonderful if he should strike a blow at their establishments and lead other nations to do the same. Certainly there has commenced a movement to this effect among some of the European powers. We take from the John Bull, for April 27, the following important statement:

"Italy.—According to the Gazetta d'Italia, negotiations are now going on between Germany, Austria and Italy for the abolition of Jesuit establishments in the several countries. The first two powers are disposed to adopt this measure, but Italy has still not arrived at a decision in the matter. M. Visconti Venosta, the Italian minister of foreign affairs, considers that the expulsion of the Jesuits would be a violation of religious freedom, and has declared that, rather than give his consent to the proposed measure, he will resign. The so-called 'freedom of the church,' the Perseveranza says, is 'nothing but the abandonment of the parishes and the lower clergy to the unlimited despotism of the Bishops and the Jesuits.'"

Italy, above all other nations, ought not to resist this movement, for the Jesuits are aiming once more to enthrone the Pope at Rome, and once more to enslave and divide free and united Italy.

WESLEYAN HOME MISSIONS.—The report of the Wesleyan Home Mission fund shows that in 1859, only twelve years ago, the Conference authorized the appointment of six ministers as home missionaries on a new plan; these have been steadily increasing in number until the Conference of 1870, when seventy-eight home missionary ministers were appointed. The evident necessity and importance of the work has had an influence upon the minds of many of the Methodist people; for the income from all sources in 1858 was £12,043, which, however, has been growing until during the past year it has reached the amount of £30,290. This, however, the report states, was "partly consequent on the reception of some large legacies, and of exceptional receipts, which, being deducted, shows the increase from ordinary sources to have been £26,599, an increase on that derived from the same sources in the preceding year of £991. Thus in twelve years there has been an increase of nearly £15,000, or taking the actual income of last year from all sources, of £18,266." It is impossible to tabulate the amount of spiritual blessing which has been conferred on the circuits in many instances by promoting efforts for the spread of the gospel; for those who endeavor to water others are sure to be watered themselves. But there are some tangible facts that can be presented to the notice of the inquirer. These missions have promoted the erection of one hundred chapels, at a cost of £200,454. At the mission stations fifty-four ministers' houses have been provided. Fifty-six home mission stations having answered their purpose, are now included in ordinary circuit arrangements, and others are now in a course of transition. Above all, thousands have been converted and added to the Methodist societies by these home missionary labors.

CONSCIOUS IMMORTALITY.

Christ has brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. It is a truth revealed to us, and confirmed by various arguments addressed to the reason. But it is also revealed in us if our experience is truly spiritual. The inward assurance of pardon, and the witness of the Spirit ordinarily enjoyed by the Christian, are to him the earnest of the heavenly inheritance. Beyond the fact of adoption, they carry with them the distinct consciousness of immortality. The dismal suggestions of materialism are dispersed by the realization of Christ in us as the hope of glory. Such a declaration as, "For we know that, if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," has the flavor of a lively spiritual experience. It is not the result of careful argumentation, the collocation of reasonable probabilities, nor altogether the authority of an outward revelation, but rather the utterance of the religious feeling, overbearing all doubt. It is such knowledge as the converted soul has through the direct operation of the Holy Spirit—a seal and earnest of the future life in himself.

This consciousness of immortality is strong or weak in proportion to the power and depth of the Spirit's work in the heart. With a lively sense of the love of God shed abroad in the heart, there are no misgivings; but when the religious state is low, dark and harrowing doubts are apt to spring up. When the tide of faith and love returns, these terrible shadows and fearful spectres of skepticism fly as the night before the dawn. The thought of possible annihilation and of blank nothingness is the occasional plague of some. They recur to the general evidences of the Christian system, they read Dr. Dick and other writers on the future state, and recall their previous experience in order to fortify their convictions; but the tormenting suggestion returns. Religion, as a living power in the soul, is the true remedy for all such troubles. The love of God felt within, shed abroad by the Holy Spirit, burning as a passion on the altar of the heart, dispels the gloomy apparition.

To unbelievers, as an argument for immortality, it may not be worth much, but to the children of God it is of inestimable value. By watchfulness, prayer and holy living they may have in themselves the resurrection power, and an adequate answer to all the sophistries of infidelity. This consciousness of immortality is born in us when we are born again, and its uniform and vivid realization depends upon the maintenance of a high state of grace. Paul uses the language of this experience when he affirms: "Though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." There is here the feeling of immortality—a distinct conception of the soul as living and deathless, although connected with a body rapidly going to decay and ready to sink into the grave. The spiritual triumphs over the material, and is no more a part of the body than is the bird a part of the cage in which it is imprisoned. Whatever revelation and philosophy may declare against materialism, the believer has in himself the refutation of its claims. It is enough that he feels the renewing and invigorating influence in the inward man, and that his faith lays its grasp upon "the things which are not seen."

With this sense of immortality it is not wonderful that the fear of death is overcome, and that the last enemy has no terrors to the believing soul. To him the crown and scepter have departed from death as the king of terrors, and the grave can boast no longer of its victories. The bondage of this fear, which rests so galliugly upon the world, is broken, and mortality, in anticipation, is already swallowed up of life. It is a consolatory thought that the feeling of immortality strengthens with the near approach of death, and that its sublimest manifestations are usually reserved for the final hour. The dying Christian is radiant with the glowing light of the heavenly shore, and he is surprised to find such riches of grace and comfort in the parting moment. With this blessed assurance and earnest of the better life, the believer's sickness and death are as a progress, through scenes of ovation and victories, to the crown and the inheritance of the skies.

FRATERNITY.

On our first page will be found the discussion which took place in the Northern General Conference on the adoption of the report from the Committee on the State of the Church, recommending the appointment of a fraternal delegation to the General Conference South. In the original report, as it came from the committee, is the following passage, which was struck out by the Conference:

Your committee have also investigated the subject of church property in dispute between the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church South; and believing that no general rule can be prescribed in advance that will apply with justice in all cases, we therefore recommend the following action by the General Conference:

Resolved, That where conflicting claims exist to the same church property, we advise that they be adjusted, as speedily as possible, by negotiation, compromise, or arbitration by the parties more immediately interested, upon the principles of equity and Christian charity.

Resolved, That the General Conference appoint a board of three commissioners, to meet a similar board to be appointed by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, who shall agree upon some uniform principles or plan of adjustment.

The report, as adopted, declares the purpose of the Northern Church to occupy Southern territory in perpetuity, but also that they desire to avoid all unfriendly rivalries with their Southern brethren. About the past there is this suggestive paragraph:

Respecting whatever intercourse there has been between us and them since the beginning of the separate existence of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, we do not propose to say anything at this time. We are content to let past events go into history or be forgotten, as the case may be; and, recognizing that church and its people as a portion of the great Christian and Methodist family, we wish them abundant success in their efforts to promote the cause of Christ and his gospel.

The substance of the Conference action is thus expressed:

To place ourselves in the truly fraternal relations toward our Southern brethren, which the sentiments of our people demand, and to prepare the way for the opening of formal fraternity with them, be it hereby

Resolved, That this General Conference will appoint a delegation, consisting of two ministers and one layman, to convey our fraternal greetings to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at its next ensuing session.

The property question is ignored—one of the most serious bars to fraternal intercourse. What sort of brotherly love can there be so long as they have unjust and unlawful possession of our property? For instance, here in the city of New Orleans they hold three churches, the lawful property of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, by virtue of a military order. Our Northern friends say that "we are content to let past events go into history or be forgotten, as the case may be." The stubborn facts of history are scarcely consistent with forgetfulness. Retracting nothing, admitting nothing, restoring nothing, they come to us with fraternal salutations! Their words can go for little so long as their actions smack of anything rather than brotherly kindness. As things now stand, the official recognition of fraternal relations is surrounded with serious difficulties. There are obstacles in the way which the Northern General Conference has taken no effectual steps to overcome. In the Southern Church we believe that there is little concern felt on the subject. The brother who avers that our senior Bishop shed tears over the matter must have had something in his own eye. The Church South is intent upon her own mission, attending to her own business, and prospering greatly. The persecutions and wrongs heaped upon her by the Northern Church have fallen out to the furtherance of the gospel.

COME!

The camp meeting opens, near Biloxi, on the twenty-first. Ministers and people from abroad are cordially invited to attend. Arrangements have been made for entertainment at reasonable rates.—None need stay away for fear of lack in this respect. We understand that ample preparations are being made for board and lodging. Half-fare rates are assured by the railroads. The seashore is breezy and salubrious. Therefore come. Come praying. Come for a blessing. Come to work for God and for the salvation of souls. If we come in the right spirit, a fire may be kindled which shall spread until the country is in a blaze of revival power. For particulars see notice of the Board of Trustees.

BISHOP KEENER, after quite an extended tour, returned home last week, to remain but a few days. He is to dedicate the new Central church in Memphis on the sixteenth, and we believe he hopes to be at our lake-shore camp meeting, which begins on the twenty-first.

Bishop Pierce, in a note from Abingdon, Virginia, June 6, says that he is out on a long campaign in East Tennessee and West Virginia, and that he will return to Georgia in July.

The following, from Bishop Paine, appears in the Raleigh Christian Advocate. All will sympathize with the venerable Bishop in his infirmities, and approve his course in refraining from other labor than meeting his Annual Conferences.

Bro. Bobbitt: Please announce in your paper that I have reluctantly given up the idea of attending District Conferences within the bounds of the Annual Conferences over which I presided last year. Since my return from the Baltimore Conference I have had two very painful attacks of rheumatism, and my physician and friends, as well as my colleagues, dissuade me from going so far, and being so long from home.

I trust, however, to be able to be at the Conferences assigned me in the recently published plan of episcopal visitations.

ACQUITTAL OF DR. HUSTON.—Our telegraphic dispatches announce that the committee of investigation has concluded its labors, and that Dr. Huston has been acquitted of the charges brought against him.

FORGETTING of accounts payeth not debts; nay, the interest of a forgotten bond runneth up with God, interest upon interest.

SEASHORE CAMP MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: On Saturday last I visited the site of the seashore camp ground. Found a large shed going up for congregational uses within a hundred yards of the shore—a very breezy spot, not unlike the one where the Master often stood while speaking to the people. There is an inspiration in the place, and I doubt not the preacher who is so fortunate as to stand up in that pulpit will surprise both himself and friends; and as for those who shall hear the musical cadence of the deep mingling with the great sentences of God's word, and the impassioned cries of God's ministry, who shall be able to express their rapt attention?

It will cost from $10 to $20 to procure a tent large enough for one family, and which can be had at a day's notice. Churches and congregations can, for $100 to $150, get up ample accommodations in common, with apartments for gentlemen and ladies.

The committee have secured a commissary table, which will furnish food already cooked, and be served at very reasonable rates.

Camp begins on Friday, June 21.

TRUSTEE MEETING AND COMMENCEMENT.

There will be a meeting of the Board of Trustees of Centenary College of Louisiana, on Monday, the eighth of July. It is to be hoped that the preachers of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences will support this institution with their presence on the occasion of its commencement exercises, Wednesday, the tenth of July.

PLAN OF THE PUBLISHING HOUSE.

We announced last week that the design for the outside of the Publishing House was completed; and a magnificent one it is. The architect has now finished his design for the interior of the house, which is every way satisfactory. The entire front is 117 feet, the agent having, by advice of the Book Committee, purchased a corner lot, running back 125 feet to our line, which gives us the entire front, whereas before we had only 61 feet front, our ground running back to the river 224 feet. He also purchased a portion of 14 feet on the river, running about half way up our southern line; this makes our property a perfect parallelogram. The outlay for this additional ground, together with the cost of improving it, will be about fifty thousand dollars. This amount has been provided for by the lease of three stores—mentioned in our last week's issue—for a term of five years, at ten thousand five hundred dollars a year. We consider this the best financiering the agent has done since he has been in his present responsible position, as, at the end of the five years specified, this additional property will be paid for without any outlay to the church, or encroachment on the subscription for the rebuilding of the house. In this connection, we again call attention to the appeal of the Bishops for aid in the work of rebuilding; they have made a call for ten thousand dollars, and we hope their appeal will meet with a prompt and generous response from all parts of the connection. The contracts for the stone and brick-work have been made, and the remaining contracts will be let out without delay. We expect to be in the house by the first of January. It will be one of the noblest edifices in the land. The location is all that could be desired, and all the arrangements will be of the most satisfactory character.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE Committee on Episcopacy of the Northern General Conference made the following report on the transfer power. Certainly a sensible and judicious document.

The Committee on Episcopacy respectfully report to the General Conference that, having considered the resolution referred to them suggesting regulations in regard to transfers, it is their judgment that this whole subject is absolutely under the control of the Bishops, to whom pertains the right not only to transfer pastors, but to determine all the details in connection therewith.

ALL visible greatness of mind grows by looking at an invisible greater.

IT IS dangerous dressing for another world before the looking-glass of this world.

DANCING.

The Richmond Christian Advocate touches this subject briefly and to the point, as follows:

Dancing is a disturber of the churches. Our friends of the Protestant Episcopal Church annually manifest much concern about the indulgence of their members in this amusement. It appears to be an incurable evil among them, and we think it always will be if they continue to handle it so tenderly. Bishop Johns, the venerable and pious senior prelate of this church in Virginia, in the late council at Norfolk, proposed, we are told, "a most sweeping resolution against what he calls 'round dances,'" but "after a most learned and thorough discussion, the Bishop's austere views were modified by the adoption of a resolution that, in the judgment of this council, all members of the church should discountenance the practice of promiscuous round dances, and that our ministers, by their pastoral influence, and by faithfully executing the canons bearing upon the subject, should discountenance and restrain it."

What is a round dance? We asked this question in our office and a friend answered: "It is a dance in which people hug each other." Ah, that is the point at which the council aimed. Don't dance round, don't have a round dance; dance square, dance angular, but dance without hugging. There must be no "swinging of corners," no "waltz," no "german," if the element "round" is in them. The younger brethren and sisters who see no harm in dancing, and who are too often encouraged in their views by sedate papas and mammas, who think dancing promotes gracefulness and polite manners, will not find it hard to whip round this "loose-worded canon." What is a "round dance" in an Episcopalian sense? What is a dance at all but a frivolous, worldly amusement, mixed up with lascivious glances and touches that cannot fail to bring in other and greater evils and sins. Dancing, wine-drinking, operas, theater-going, these are the paths that lead to ruin. Let every Christian church pronounce squarely and emphatically against them all; let it be known that they all belong to the world and not to the church; and let Christian parents, responsible to God for the proper training of their children, see to it that they go not in these flowery and seductive ways of folly, sin and death.

Dancing—round, square and angular, if there be such—breeds anything but modesty, purity and spirituality.

CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS.

Our confrere of the Western Methodist is having a little rest and recreation. Writing from New York city, he gives some items of interest about Dr. Deems and his church:

In the evening we went to the Church of the Strangers, and were glad to find Dr. Deems in the pulpit—the services already commenced. The church—a princely present from Commodore Vanderbilt—is a commodious and handsome structure, and it was well filled with hearers—the pastor being quite popular in the city, and attracting, besides, many strangers, particularly from the South. Dr. Deems was in a happy, grateful mood, his son, a young gentleman of fine attainments and great promise, having during the day arrived in the city after a year's absence in Europe, spent chiefly in Berlin, where he has been pursuing his studies in medicine and surgery, and attending the lectures of the most renowned professors in that city. The father asked the congregation to unite with him in thanksgiving to Almighty God for the preservation of his son from the dangers of the deep, and for his safe return to those who loved him; and from many hearts the tribute of gratitude ascended to heaven. Dr. Deems, as is his habit, preached an elegant and thoughtful sermon, the line of thought being quite similar to that pursued by Dr. Fowler in the afternoon, and also by Dr. Foster, who occupied Dr. Deems' pulpit in the morning, and to whose sermon repeated reference was made by Dr. Deems in the evening. They all set forth the doctrine of faith as it is taught in God's word, and so emphasized it as to make the impression on my mind that some special cause was at work, leading the religious public of the city to clearer and truer views of the great doctrine of Protestantism. Dr. Deems is doing a good work, and for his labors there is a wide field, as well as an open door. He should have the prayers and sympathies of his brethren throughout our connection.

THE Southern Christian Advocate announces the death of the Rev. Francis Cook, a venerable local preacher, who died at Marietta, Georgia, May 10.

THE soldier wastes his strength who fights his shadow.

THE ADVOCATE.

Expressions of appreciation and approval from intelligent and highly respectable sources will doubtless be as gratifying to the members of the patronizing Conferences, and to many friends deeply interested in the prosperity of the paper, as they are encouraging to us in our arduous and ever-pressing duties and toils. We introduce a few extracts from letters received from brethren representing different parts of the territory in which the paper circulates. They will pardon the liberty taken with their private letters.

Rev. L. P. Meader, of Mississippi, says: "I do not forget to press the claims of the ADVOCATE, both publicly and privately. I know its worth and feel its power. Nearly everybody wants the paper. They say it is cheap enough; but some are taking other papers, and cannot take it just now."

Rev. T. B. Walden, of Springfield, Louisiana, says: "As long as I live, and your paper exists, I shall continue to try to secure subscribers, because if I could get the people to read the ADVOCATE I would feel certain of a revival, for those who read it are sure to attend church, pay the preacher and keep the Sabbath. * * * I hope to have the trouble of sending for the paper for every family residing in the bounds of my work."

Rev. C. B. DuBose, of Alabama, says: "I hope, before a great while, to make good my promise to put the ADVOCATE into every Methodist family in this circuit. I am working and praying to that end. God help me!"

Rev. J. W. Medlock, of Louisiana, says: "I take this opportunity to say that I am interested in the circulation of the ADVOCATE for many reasons. It is cheap enough, well conducted, excellent for the family, and a great evangelizing agent. I never fail to present its claims. I do it religiously. * * * Its weekly visits are heartily enjoyed, and I am due you thanks for your timely and excellent leaders."

Rev. J. S. Parker, of Mississippi, says: "I think the ADVOCATE one of the best and ablest papers in the United States. Every family should have it." In a more recent letter the same writer says: "I have placed the ADVOCATE in every Methodist family in my work, and will try to extend the subscription outside."

Rev. John Ritchey, of Mississippi, says: "I notice quite an improvement in the moral bearing, social harmony and attendance at church, as well as a spirit for public improvement generally, since the ADVOCATE has been circulated here. May the Lord grant you success, and may that success reach the whole church."

Rev. William Price, of Texas, says: "The weekly visits of the ADVOCATE are hailed with sincere gratitude. It ought to be taken by every Methodist family in the bounds of the patronizing Conferences. But few comparatively take a religious paper. They fail to appreciate the value of heavenly wisdom. Many complain of hard times, poverty, etc., yet some of them find money to spend for many things not half so valuable as the ADVOCATE. May God bless your enterprise more abundantly."

Rev. W. P. Kimball, of Louisiana, says: "Allow me to congratulate you on the rapidly-increasing popularity of the ADVOCATE in this section. It is pleasant as well as easy to be agent for a paper which speaks for itself more effectively than agents can do, as does the ADVOCATE."

The above are a few among the many expressions of approval which we have recently received.

R. J. HARP,
Publishing Agent.

DURING the entire of last week two political conventions—the Democratic and the Reform—were in session in New Orleans. These bodies contained many able and good men, but they were not able to unite on a common ticket for State officers. Louisiana and New Orleans are at the last gasp, well-nigh bankrupt and ruined, and it does seem that the honest men of every party might somehow unite for the salvation of the State.

CAMP MEETING.

The approaching camp meeting of the New Orleans district will commence on Friday, the twenty-first instant, and continue to Friday, the twenty-eighth, at the camp ground, two miles west of Biloxi, situated immediately upon the gulf coast, a quarter of a mile only from the railroad. A good station-house and platform are being built at the railroad opposite the camp ground, at which the cars will stop at all times to put out or take in passengers or freight. From the station a good road leads direct to the encampment.

Friends preferring it are advised to come a few days before the meeting and erect their own tents, for which space will be assigned them. For others desiring to hire, tents will be erected for rent, at from $10 to $20 for the week, proportionate to the size of the tent. Persons tenting are expected to provide their own lodging and other accommodations, except meals, which, if they prefer, can be had at the public boarding tent.

Provision for a public boarding tent has been made, on the following terms: Breakfast, fifty cents; dinner, seventy-five cents; supper, fifty cents; per day, $1.50. Lodging will be provided at fifty cents per day.

The following railroads have agreed to carry passengers and freight to and from the camp ground at half the usual fare, to wit: the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas, the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern, the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western railroads, and the Attakapas Mail and Transportation Company, on their boats between Iberia and Brashear; and on the lines of stages of Colonel J. B. Price ministers of the gospel will be conveyed free.

A person coming to camp meeting on any of these routes will pay full fare for his ticket, retaining the same after it is punched by the conductor, and at the camp meeting will receive the indorsement of the committee thereon, which will make it good for his return trip free.

Ministers attending the camp meeting, to participate in the exercises, will be entertained without charge.

Hacks will be running from Biloxi to the camp ground hourly, at reasonable fare.

Married.

At the residence of the bride's father, in Jackson county, Mississippi, June 5, 1872, by Rev. T. B. Phillips, Mr. GEORGE W. TAGENT and Miss LAVENIA LADNER.

Obituary.

CAPTAIN W. H. BOWEN was born in Fayetteville, North Carolina, May 27, 1794, and died at Union Church, Jefferson county, Mississippi, February 2, 1872, at the age of seventy-eight years.

He was one of the few remaining links which bind the past to the present age. Early he began an active and energetic life, and through every phase of fortune and change of life, down to hoary age, he was characterized by cheerful and enduring toil, maintaining a genial and happy flow of spirits in every circumstance by which he was surrounded.

Early in life—on the twelfth day of April, 1818—he led to the marriage altar Miss E. K. Brockington, of Stony Hill, South Carolina. Together, in love and affection, they walked the pathway of life for fifty-five years, sharing each other's joys and grief, and mutually encouraging and sustaining each other in all the varied scenes through which they passed. To them were born eleven children, nine of whom, with commingled tears, they followed to their graves, comforted by full assurance that each had gone sustained by a lively trust in Christ. The remaining two are now members of the Mississippi Annual Conference. May God bring them to the same peaceful end.

In his old age he followed, with tottering steps, the companion of his bosom to her calm resting place in the grave.

Her Bible became his solace and comfort. Her book-mark lay in the Bible, marking her progress in the constant and yearly perusal of the word of God. After her death his mind was fixed upon the eternal world. Every memento of his departed wife was sacredly treasured and placed near his bedside; and as often as he remembered her he lifted his heart to God and sighed for the land of rest.

Worn down by age, he lay for a year helpless, but calm and reflective, always grateful for the constant and unremitting attentions of his son John and his wife. His theme was the future, where he would rejoin his departed family in the bosom of God.

Many friends revered and honored his name for his unselfish and useful life.

Telling as long as his physical powers endured, he was still sought for his matured and sound advice to the last days of his life. An honored member of the Masonic fraternity, and almost a life-time member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he was borne with the honors of each to the spot he had long since marked for his last resting place, where he now sleeps in hope of the resurrection morn. Thus hath God led to peaceful graves eleven of the family, leaving two still on Zion's walls, with priceless treasures inviting them to faithfulness and endurance in the great warfare of life. May they, at the close of earthly toils, be brought to the same peaceful end. W. G. MILLSAPS.

OUR AGENT FOR LONDON AND LIVERPOOL.—Robert Babington, Esq., will represent the claims of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE during the season in London and Liverpool, and other parts of the United Kingdom.

MR. E. E. F. ROSS, our resident advertising agent, is now on a brief tour through the West and North, and we commend him to the attention of our patrons, and shall be thankful for courtesies extended to him. They are assured that Mr. Ross has no other business, but devotes his entire time to the paper, and is entitled to all the consideration of one of its business corps.

THANKS TO AGENTS.—We are greatly indebted to agents for their prompt and business-like attention to the interests of the paper and their patience in adjusting our accounts. We trust they will send us all the money they can. Several thousand dollars, in the hands of agents, we need to help us through the summer. Our expenses are as great in summer as in winter, and have to be paid in cash.

CAMP MEETING COTS.—Light, Portable, Convenient and Cheap.—Go to camp meeting! Take your cot! Call at the office of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and see it. Price, $1. See advertisement of G. P. Farwell, No. 80 Claiborne street, between Common and Gravier, headed "Portable Cots."

BELLS.—We have never seen better bells—sweeter in tone, more faithfully made and more free from all objections—than those manufactured by Messrs. E. A. & G. R. Meneely, of West Troy, New York. But few manufacturers have a more enviable reputation, or one better deserved, than the Messrs. Meneely, to whose advertisement, in another column, we take pleasure in calling attention.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

A Card.—Having opened a business at 157 Poydras street, for the purpose of supplying Families and Hotels with Fancy GROCERIES, and every variety of Domestic and Imported Fruits, and having such facilities as will enable us to compete successfully with any other establishment of the kind in the country, we respectfully solicit the patronage of our friends and the public generally, assuring them that we are determined to give perfect satisfaction.

The "Dog Days" and their Danger.—At this season of the year the blood is apt to become impure, the appetite poor, the skin sallow, the body enfeebled, the system relaxed, making it susceptible to attacks of Chills and Fever, Rheumatism, eruptions of the skin and the development of the effects of the injudicious use of calomel. All this trouble may be avoided by the use of a few bottles of Dr. Tutt's Sarsaparilla. It is harmless in its effects, but a powerful enemy to diseases. Try it, and you will find it a friend in need.

Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills move the Bowels to a healthy action, not acting, as it were, mechanically, but they stimulate the secretions, and in a healthful and natural manner expel all impurities without weakening the body.

Dr. Tutt's Hair Dye does not Injure the Hair.

Charles H. Reed, Real Estate Broker, No. 87 St. Charles street, buys and sells all sorts of city and country property.—Mortgages made promptly. Various pretty Cottages in choice locations are offering on long terms. Has for sale the finest Building Sites in the city, and, being largely interested himself, can speak confidently on all matters pertaining to the sale, rental, appraisement and management of real estate.

One sip of this will bathe the drooping spirit in delight beyond the bliss of dreams. Be wise, and taste.—Milton's Comus.

Verily do the words of the inspired poet gleam with the light of prophecy; for if there is anything that is swift to operate beneficially on the human system impaired by physical ailments, it is Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Those whose lives "drag their slow length along," harassed by the petty but fretful annoyances of indigestion, dyspepsia, debility, febrile excitement, nervous irritability, exhaustion or the general suffering that results from hepatic causes, deserve the fate to which they are consigned, when, like the physician to whom the voice of sacred wisdom cried "heal thyself," they turn away from the means placed within their grasp. Price's Bitters will do the work; a vigorous stimulant, an agreeable elixir, a strengthening tonic, and a grateful adjuvant, the very universality of whose use is confirmative of their efficacy, they stand to-day stamped with the signet seal of medical approval, and radiant with the award of a high popular appreciation.

The Enemy Surrenders.—The dragon slain by St. George, and the snake that stopped the march of Regulus, were mild nuisances compared with CHRONIC INDIGESTION and its accompaniments; yet this foe of health and life, with all the brood of bilious and nervous ailments of which it is the parent, surrenders to BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

WE DESIRE TO CALL THE ATTENTION of our friends and the public generally to our large and well-assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and

The Child's Corner.

BEAUTIFUL CHILD.

Beautiful child by the mother's knee,
In the mystic future what wilt thou be?
A demon of sin, or an angel sublime—
A poison Upas, or innocent thyme?
A spirit of evil, flashing down
With the lurid light of a fiery crown—
Or gliding up with a shining track,
Like the morning star that ne'er looks back.
Daintiest dreamer that ever smiled,
Which wilt thou be, my beautiful child?

Beautiful child in my garden bowers,
Friend of the butterflies, birds and flowers,
Pure as the sparkling crystalline stream,
Jewels of truth in thy fairy eyes beam;
Was there ever a whiter soul than thine
Worshiped by love in a mortal shrine?
My heart thou hast gladdened for two sweet years
With rainbows of hope through mists of tears—
Mists beyond which the sunny smile,
With its halo of glory, beams all the while.

Beautiful child, to thy look is given
A gleam serene—not to earth, but of heaven;
With thy tell-tale eyes and prattling tongue,
Would thou could'st ever thus be young.
Like the liquid strain of the mocking-bird,
From stair to hall thy voice is heard;
How oft in the garden nooks thou'rt found,
With flowers thy curly head around,
And kneeling beside me with figure so quaint!
O who would not dote on my infant saint!

Beautiful child, what thy fate shall be,
Perchance, is wisely hidden from me;
A fallen star thou may'st leave my side,
And of sorrow and shame become the bride—
Shivering, quivering, through the cold street,
With a curse behind and before thy feet;
Ashamed to live, and afraid to die,
No home, no friend, and a pitiless sky,
Merciful Father—my brain grows wild—
O keep from evil my beautiful child!

Beautiful child, mayst thou soar above,
A warbling cherub of joy and love;
A drop on eternity's mighty sea,
A blossom on life's immortal tree—
Floating, flowering evermore,
In the blessed light of the golden shore.
And as I gaze on thy sinless bloom,
And thy radiant face, they dispel my gloom;
I feel He will keep thee undefiled,
And his love protect my beautiful child.

Beaufort Advocate.

The Child Teacher.

Backward and forward in her little rocking-chair went Lillie Lee, now clasping her beautiful waxen baby to her bosom and singing low, sweet lullabies, then smoothing its flaxen curls, patting its rosy cheeks and whispering softly, "I love you, pretty dollie," and anon casting wistful glances toward her mother—a lovely-looking woman, who sat in an alcove window, busily penning some thoughts. After what seemed a very long time to the little daughter, Mrs. Lee pushed aside the papers, and, looking up, said pleasantly: "I am through for to-day, Lillie; you may now make all the noise you can." Scarcely were the words uttered ere the little one had flown to her and nestled her head on the loving heart, saying earnestly: "I'm so glad, cos I wanted to love you so much, mamma."

"Did you, darling," and she clasped her tenderly. "I am very glad my Lillie loves me so. But I guess you were not very lonely while I wrote; you and dollie seemed to be having a happy time together."

"Yes, we did, mamma; but I got tired, after awhile, of loving her."

"And why?"

"Oh, cos she never loves me back."

"And is that why you love me?"

"That is one why, mamma; but not the first or the best?"

"And what is the first and best?"

"Why, mamma, don't you guess," and the blue eyes grew very bright and earnest; "it's cos you loved me when I was too little to love you back—that's why I love you so."

"'We love him because he first loved us,'" whispered the mother, and fervently she thanked God for the little child teacher.

"What makes you so quiet, Lillie, to-day? Why don't you sing and play? Are you sick, darling?"

"Yes, mamma."

"Where, my sweet one?" and Mrs. Lee opened her arms widely to receive the delicate form.

"Here, mamma." The child's hands were pressed to her heart. "It's so full of tears I'm afraid it will burst."

"And why, Lillie?"

"Oh, for poor Susan. She was wicked, I know, to steal from you; but, mamma, if you send her to jail, as you told her you would, she'll grow wickeder yet, cos no one there'll tell her how to be good."

"What shall I do with her, Lillie?"

"What would you want her mother to do with me, if I was her little waiting maid, and had been wicked?"

"'Whatsoevor ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them,'" whispered the mother, and again she thanked God for the little child teacher.

"Mamma!"

Lillie had been quiet and thoughtful a long time, and there was a very serious look now hovering over her brow.

"What, dear?"

"Have you forgiven Mrs. Mann for the naughty things she said of you?"

"No, I have not, and I never shall;" and the mother's eyes flashed haughtily.

"Not if she is sorry, and promises never to speak so again of you, or any other friend?"

"No, sorry or not sorry; promises or no promises; I shall never forgive her."

"Mamma, you can never say the Lord's Prayer, then."

"'Forgive our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us,'" whispered the mother, and again she thanked God for the little child teacher.

"You cry all the time now, mamma. What makes you?"

"Because, Lillie, your dear father is so sick, and I fear he must die."

"But if he dies he'll go to heaven, won't he, mamma? And once there, he'll never be sick any more, but always so well and happy, waiting for us to come; won't he?"

"Yes, dear."

"Then we oughtn't to cry, mamma."

"Yes, Lillie; but will you not cry to see him dead and buried, and me here all alone?"

"Yes, but I'll cry just as I would if he were going off a good way to find a new home for us. We will go to him, mamma."

"'And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know,'" whispered the mother, and she thanked God fervently for the little child teacher.

* * * * * * * * *

"Mamma!"

Very faint and tremulous were the tones, and they quivered upon the thin, pallid lips.

"What, darling?"

And the mother bent tenderly, lovingly, almost despairingly, over her dying child.

"God was good to make me sick, wasn't he, mamma?"

"Do you think so, precious one?"

It was her last earthly idol that lay shattered before her, and her yearning, almost broken heart would not let her say: "I think so."

"Why, yes, mamma; he knew I wanted to see my dear father, and I couldn't unless I died. When I am dead, and you feel so lonely and sad, find some poor little girl who hasn't any one to love her, and make her your daughter, and then you'll be happy."

* * * * * * * * *

"Kiss me, mamma, and take me in your arms. I am very cold. Is this dying?"

"Yes, Lillie, you are almost there."

There—there—the white lips were still—the blue eyes closed. She was there.

Another angel in heaven.

"Of such is the kingdom of heaven," whispered the mother. "In death, as in life, my child is my teacher."—Christian at Work.

My Little Neighbors.

There chanced to be a convenient "flat"—a notch in the cherry tree—just on a level with my window, and within easy eye-shot. It was one of April's last days, charming with dark and bright, when they came to look at it. Just married, evidently; oh! so deferential to each other, and so full of confidential plans. I never knew that birds were in the habit of making a bridal tour, but this pair must have done so, for they went away and stayed two or three days. When they appeared again they set to work in earnest. It was great fun to watch them. I very soon observed that the brown madam was the better bird in all practical matters. Mr. Robin made a great show of helping, and no doubt meant well, but he was always putting his clumsy foot in it. Once I saw him bring a long white rag and deposit it with an air of triumph, and saw her promptly kick it out the moment his back was turned. That was delicious! The rejected scrap caught on a twig, and fluttered there half the summer. I used to wonder what he thought of it, and whether they ever had any explanations.

The nest was finished at last, quite to my lady's mind, and she settled down in it. Then what a change came over the busy little body! Day after day she sat in the midst of the shining and the singing, never stirring, never speaking, but so alert and expectant, she seemed the very soul of the tree. The bonny brown head was just in sight among the blossoms, and always turned toward my window. She had time enough to study her neighbors, the giants, if she thought them worth the trouble; which is doubtful. Poor Mr. Robin, meanwhile, was not so patient. Having nothing to do but to enjoy himself, of course he soon found out that self was but a shallow little person. What was going on in that nest was all he could think of. It was a pretty sight to see him venture near whenever she flitted away in search of the needful bite and sup. But how she would scold if she found him there! One would think she might have borne her honors a little more meekly, though I dare say he needed putting down.

I watched him once through a private ecstasy that was almost the death of him. Madam went to take her airing, as usual, and he was on the spot directly. He perched on the edge of the nest, and looked down into it reverently, admiringly. He looked till fatherly pride began to rise. He had a share in those wonderful things, albeit the making was past his comprehension. "My wife's eggs!" Pride swelled higher and higher. He looked up to the sky, he looked down into the nest, he cocked his head on this side, then on that side, challenging all the world to produce such a treasure as his. I don't know what would have followed in another minute—I think nothing less than spontaneous combustion; but here the whirr of returning wings broke in upon his rapture. He was gone in a second; but not far, for such a song as came next minute from a neighboring tree! It was a glorified robin that was singing. Not a word about himself, I am sure; it was praise of the little wife that made the song so sweet.—Carl Spencer, in Christian Union.

The Saw of Contention.

"O, Frank, come and see how hot my saw gets when I rub it! When I draw it through the board awhile it's most hot enough to set fire to it."

"That's the friction," said Frank, with all the superior wisdom of two more years than Eddie boasted.

"Yes," said Sister Mary, who was passing; "it's the friction; but do you know what it makes me think of?"

"No; what?" asked both the boys at once.

"Of two little boys who were quarreling over a trifle this morning, and the more they talked the hotter their tempers grew, until there is no knowing what might have happened if mother had not thrown cold water on the fire by sending them into separate rooms."

The boys hung their heads, and Mary went on.

"There is an old proverb which says: 'The longer the saw of contention is drawn, the hotter it grows.'"

"I tell you what, Frank," said Eddie, "when we find ourselves getting angry let's run out and use the saw Kriskringle brought me, and then we won't find time for the saw of contention."—Young Reaper.

The Farm and Garden.

Hints for the Month.

This, like every month, should be a busy one to the industrious farmer. The crop is to be stirred often with hoe and plow. The principle was to turn earth to cotton with the plow, level off the earth about the plants, and draw any surplus toward the middle, taking out all weeds and grass; now the land is stirred often by the cultivators—so often that in ordinary seasons there is not much grass to kill. Cotton, in the large portion of our country, begins to shade the earth; but, weeds, grass, or none, the land should be stirred often—every ten or twelve days—and kept up until cotton picking. Much corn is laid by, and peas should be planted in every corn field, either for the grain, forage crop, or as a shade to the land. We repeat here what we have written scores of times: peas can be sown so as not to make many; therefore, if the pea is wanted; step-drop say six to ten peas every two feet and work them once, then trust to Providence the crop. Corn should be laid by as level as is practicable; less surface exposed, and easier to stir the earth. Small grain now demands attention and some judgment. We are certain that wheat for grinding makes more food and better flour if cut when grain has passed the milky state. If the small grain be needed for a food crop to stock, we would cut even before turning, so as to reserve some nutriment in the stalk or stem—stalks cure in small "cocks;" house always; stacking is careless. We have cut oats from the tenth to the fifteenth of June, plowed land well, drilled peas thin, or step-dropped six to ten peas about a step, cultivated with turn-plow and hoe, and made a good crop. We have made after oats full a two-thirds crop of corn. We have sowed largely of turnips in corn and cotton for sheep and cattle in the winter. One year a friend gave to us "drawlags" of a new sweet potato yam variety on the seventh of June; when dug, one weighed one pound sixteen ounces, and another over two pounds. Really, on low ground, well broken up and harrowed through, we would not fear to grow even two tons of Hungarian before frost. We would sow three pecks per acre, with all the leached and unleached ashes we could control. Many who sowed Hungarian will find it in full bloom along in latitude of and below Vicksburg; we hope it will be cut as the bloom falls. It is not safe to feed ripe seed to horses or mules; acting on the kidneys, it has killed many animals in the Northwest. We have so often told how to cure hay that we will not repeat; but we must say, don't follow the old way, to remain in sun and dews two or three days and nights; no business in sun over four or five hours. Cut, and let the hand or hands be some three hours ahead of those who rake into cocks. Never let it lie out in dew. Open out next day for an hour or two for the sun to dry off the sweat. Even thus early we are preparing for the turnip crop by manuring and plowing. Generally the cow-pen system suits the country best. Make a cow-pen in the spring where the turnip crop is to be made. Plow thoroughly in June, and keep cattle on until time of planting. Our friends do not appreciate the turnip crop; we are sorry it is so, and we hope our reproof will be taken kindly. Sow turnips so as to feed all cattle daily. An acre of turnips and one of Hungarian grass, with cattle well sheltered, will give more joy to the household than two bales sold to New England or Old England. Prepare largely.—Philips' Southern Farmer.

Subsoiling.

There can be no objection to the subsoil plow on any soil, if used at the proper time, i. e., when the ground is not too wet; and I consider it a most important implement in corn culture. In the year 1868 I subsoiled eight acres of land, the subsoiler, with two mules, following the two-horse plow. The subsoil was a tenacious red clay, which the turning plow would not go in to, and did not turn up more than five inches of soil; then the subsoiler did its work by going five or six inches more, making a deep mellow soil for the corn. The consequence was that the land produced, in the judgment of my neighbors, thirty-five or forty bushels of corn, and the best crop, they say, ever raised upon the land in any season; yet, as you well remember, we had no rain from the sixth of July to some time in October. The only fertilizer used was coal ashes, save one acre thinly manured with stable and farmpen manure. In breaking up this land for oats last spring, with a double plow, it sank into a mellow subsoil with great facility, and my plowman asked me if there was no danger of plowing too deep. The crop of oats harvested from this land was an excellent one.—Dr. T. Pollard, in Southern Planter and Farmer.

Underdraining.

"Mr. S. G. Foster, of North Welton, Maine, in an essay delivered on January 30 last, before the local Farmers' Club, said: We must underdrain and subsoil our land if we would get rid of the trouble with wet or dry seasons; by the term subsoil I do not wish to be understood as advocating the throwing up on top of the land a portion of the subsoil, but simply stirring it up and leaving it where it now is. The advantages of underdraining and subsoiling are that, if thoroughly done, they will nearly free us from any inconvenience from an unusually wet season by absorbing and conveying from the land all surplus water; while in an unusually dry season, the ground being light and porous to a greater depth than we usually have, it will hold more moisture, and, as the top of the ground dries, this moisture is drawn upward and prevents the roots of crops from being dried up. A piece of ground trodden hard will not absorb water to any amount. If we would keep the dirt stirred often among the crops in dry seasons it would draw more of the moisture from the air than if allowed to get dry and hard. In fact, I believe we may by some study and experiment in draining and subsoiling, connected with a judicious stirring of the ground around growing crops, become independent of any inconvenience or injury resulting from a wet or dry season."—New England Farmer.

"I admit there is an apparent absurdity in recommending the drainage of dry land; for, as one of your correspondents states the case, it is irrigation and not drainage that is wanted in this country. I claim that underdraining is irrigation, in that it tends to a more equal distribution of moisture by utilizing the rain-fall as it passes through the soil, instead of running off; and from the fact that the drains and lower portions of the soil are condensers of moisture, being colder than the atmosphere. It is plain enough that in draining wet land the surplus water will follow the law of gravitation and run off, and the same with dry land in a wet time; but in a dry time the moisture rises by capillary attraction. Hence a well-drained, deep-tilled soil, when the surface is parched by the extreme heat, will draw moisture from below."—Pick and Shovel, in Exchange.

Relative Value of Feeds.

The following tables, taken from the Rural Alabamian, show so concisely the relative values of different feeds, that we transfer them to our columns without hesitation. The usual amount of cotton-seed meal for a feed is one quart, which should be mixed with wheat, bran, shorts or ship stuff.

CORN.
Flesh-forming principles	15.192

Heat-producing principles	73.376
Fat-producing principles	8.179

This exhibits at a glance the relative value of corn and corn-fodder as feeds. The former is much the richest in the three requisites of a good feed—flesh-producing, fat-producing and heat-producing principles. The next is Emmons' showing up of

COTTON-SEED MEAL.
Flesh-forming principles	41.025
Heat-producing principles	17.044
Fat-producing principles	16.005

These are the four leading feeds of the South, and, as the tables show, the greatest of these is cotton-seed meal. True, it falls below the others in its heat-producing principles, a thing of no great importance at the South, but it greatly overreaches them in both its flesh and its fat forming principles.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

POTATOES.—Always add salt to the water while potatoes are boiling; boil moderately, not violently, and let them be only well covered with water.

HARD-SCRAMBLED.—Put two teaspoonfuls of butter into a frying pan. Beat six eggs. Season with pepper and salt. When the butter is very hot, but not scorched, put in the eggs; stir until it thickens, and serve hot.

FRIED EGGS.—The fat left after frying ham, or that which is left in the bake-pan after browning a ham, is better for frying eggs than lard or butter. See that it is boiling hot, but not discolored, and drop the eggs in one at a time. Let them cook half a minute, then dip up some of the boiling fat from the pan, and pour over them. Continue to do this till they are done, and it will not be necessary to turn them over, which endangers breaking the yelk. Two and a half minutes should cook them sufficiently. When dropping them in, hold the cup into which you break each one close to the pan, and let the egg slip in as easily as possible, so that it will not spread in a ragged surface over the pan.

THE New York Tribune says: "We have just received a recipe for the cure of diphtheria, from a physician who says that of one thousand nine hundred cases in which it has been used, not a single patient has been lost. The treatment consists in thoroughly swabbing the back of the mouth and throat with a wash made thus: Of table salt, two drachms; black pepper, golden seal, nitrate of potash, alum, one drachm each. Mix and pulverize, put into a teacup half full of water, stir well, and then fill up with good cider vinegar. Use every half hour, one, two and four hours, as recovery progresses. The patient may swallow a little each time. Apply one ounce each of spirits of turpentine, sweet oil, aqua ammonia, mixed every hour, to the whole of the throat, and to the breast-bone every four hours, keeping flannel to the part."

How Lithography Was Discovered.

The art of printing on stone, or lithography, was invented by a German named Sennefelder. The case is only another instance of what a thinking man does, where ordinary people march blunderingly on, never seeing what is of great advantage to the world, and contains their own fortune.

The tradition runs that Sennefelder's mother, a poor washerwoman, told him to keep an account of the pieces that she washed. Poverty made paper scarce in the family, and the young man, trying to contrive some substance on which to make the record, traced some letters upon the smooth surface of a stone lying near. It was soft enough to be easily scratched by a sharp metal point, and hard enough to retain the impression. So on that stone his accounts were kept. But Sennefelder was not a dunce. He knew of printing and how it was done. The idea soon followed that this stone might be used for taking impressions as well as wood or metal. The notion once fully conceived, he worked faithfully to make it a hard fact, and, after a lifetime of experimenting, he saw his cherished invention almost perfected. When he was seventy-five years old, he, with his own hand, produced a work nearly equal to anything ever seen in lithography. He lived several years after that, and the hundredth anniversary of his birth was celebrated, in both Europe and America, on the eighth of November, 1871.

The stone used for lithographing is remarkable for its absorptive powers and affinity for all greasy substances, which give it its great value. It is found only in Bohemia, Germany, though an inferior article has been found among the mountains of Kentucky.

ABOUT QUICKSILVER.

One of the most curious properties of quicksilver is its capability of dissolving or of forming amalgams with other metals. A sheet of gold foil dropped into quicksilver disappears almost as quickly as a snowflake when it falls into water. It has the power of separating or readily dissolving those refractory metals which are not acted upon by our most powerful acids. The gold and silver miners pour it into their machines holding the powdered gold-bearing quartz, and although no human eye can detect a trace of the precious substances, so fine are the particles, yet the liquid metal will hunt it out, and incorporate it into its mass. By subsequent distillation it yields it into the hands of the miners, in a state of virgin purity. Several years ago, while lecturing before a class of ladies upon chemistry, we had occasion to purify some quicksilver by forcing it through chamois leather. The scrap remained upon the table after the lecture, and an old lady, thinking it would be very nice to wrap her gold spectacles in, accordingly appropriated it to this purpose. The next morning she came to us in great alarm, stating that the gold had mysteriously disappeared, and nothing was left but the glasses. Sure enough, the metal remaining in the pores of the leather had amalgamated with the gold, and entirely destroyed the spectacles. It was a mystery, however, which we could never explain to her satisfaction.—Nichols' Fireside Science.

PARISIAN TORPEDO BOATS.—These boats are cigar-shaped, and shot-proof against the rifle and mitrailleuse. In the bow is the rudder, and in the stern an observatory, with a peep-hole about the size of a thaler; the funnel is hardly three feet above water, and of very small diameter. The whole boat is about forty feet long, and the only parts above water are the funnel and observatory. The bridge is on a level with the water, and protected by a double shield. It is of a gray color, and very fast. It will carry torpedoes whose construction is unknown, dash into an enemy's fleet, especially at night, blow up the ship, and make away again. Should it prove a good sea-going boat, and England ever dared to thwart Germany, the prediction in the "Battle of Dorking" will probably be realized. Three are already finished, and in the port of Dantzic; three unfinished, destined for Kiel, and a number more under construction.

M. SIDOT states in Comptes Rendus that when pure sulphide of carbon is placed along with granulated silver or other metal in a strong glass bottle, and then vigorously shaken, electric sparks are seen inside the bottle. If water be poured on the bottle while these are manifested, they cease at once; but recommence if the shaking be repeated. By an exposure of several months' duration to strong sunlight in a sealed tube, pure sulphide of carbon decomposes into a solid, flocculent, reddish matter, and a peculiar gas, whose nature has not yet been determined.

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will recommend them to all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers, unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

SCHOOL HISTORY.
(From the Virginia Educational Journal.)
Mr. Swinton's reputation led us to examine this book. What is of most importance in the work is its extreme fairness. It is vastly superior, in this respect, to any history issued at the North that we have seen. Where accuracy seems almost impossible, he comes nearer to the truth than the others.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

We have again to notice an inanimate market, and from nearly every branch of the wholesale trade we hear complaints of increasing dullness. The receipts of sugar have been more liberal, but the demand has been sluck, and prices have shown but little change. Nothing of any moment has been done in molasses. Flour has been nearly at a stand-still, with no demand excepting in a retail way.

We have nothing to add to the remarks in our last issue on the crop prospect. The weather has been clear and warm, with daily showers, and from every direction we receive favorable crop accounts. In fact, the entire aspect of the cotton-growing region presents a cheering prospect.

The river is 4 feet 8 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the seventh instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales.	1,027
Lake.....	3
Mobile.....	92
Total.....	1,122

On Saturday the sales were confined to 118 bales at about previous rates. On Monday the demand continued limited, and, with a decline of 1/4c. at New York, prices ruled still more in favor of buyers, low middling selling at 24@24 1/4c., and middling at 25@25 1/4c. The sales embraced 404 bales. On Tuesday, under the decline reported at Liverpool and New York, factors evinced a willingness to meet the demand more freely, which stimulated the movement, and several buyers coming forward who had previously stood aloof, the sales summed up 1,100 bales, partly at previous rates, but mostly at a decline of 1/8@1/4c. A high style of ordinary, approximating strict, sold at 20 1/2c., a similar description of strict ordinary at 21 1/4c., styles between strict ordinary and good ordinary at 21 3/4@21 7/8c., low middling at 24c., and middling at 25@25 1/4c.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 946,963 bales, against 1,371,875 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,153,805 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 61,355 to France, and a decrease of 851,203 to Great Britain, and of 327,068 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Low ordinary	18 1/4 @ 18 3/4
Ordinary	19 1/4 @ 21 1/4
Good ordinary	22 1/4 @ 22 3/4
Low middling	24 @ 24 1/4
Middling	25 @ 25 1/4

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JUNE 20, 1872. NO. 25.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, June 12.—The English government will favor an eight months' recess of the Geneva Board of Arbitration. The United States will neither favor nor oppose a recess, unless England agrees to the supplementary article. In case the recess is denied, England will not present her case.

NEW YORK, June 13.—The State superintendent of public institutions decides that refusal to read the Bible shall not exclude a child from school.

LOWELL, MASS., June 14.—In a meeting of official delegates of the Young Men's Christian Convention, this morning, the Rev. T. A. Fernley, of Pennsylvania, offered a resolution pledging the convention to resist to the utmost all attempts to exclude the word of God from the public schools of this nation, and where it is temporarily excluded to use special efforts to put the Bible in every Roman Catholic family. Considerable discussion and confusion was excited by the proposition, which finally passed.

COLISEUM, BOSTON, June 17.—The Jubilee was opened to-day in the presence of an immense audience. An address of welcome was delivered by Hon. W. Gaston, mayor of the city, which was followed by the oration of the day, delivered by General N. P. Banks. These preceded the concert.

BOSTON, June 18.—The Coliseum was somewhat better filled this afternoon. The performance commenced with the choral, "Now may the will of God be done," given by a full chorus, organ and orchestra.

One of the attractions of to-day's programme was the debut of M'me Peschka Leutner. She sang an aria from "Magic Flute," accompanied by full orchestra. At the close the whole audience rose and applauded.

M'me Arabella Goddard was warmly welcomed on her first appearance in this country, and played a piano solo, "The Last Rose of Summer."

After an intermission the Grenadier Guards' Band, under the leadership of Daniel Godfrey, made their appearance and were received with tremendous cheering by the whole audience.

The organ played the English anthem. After the applause had subsided, M'me Rudersdorff was led to the rostrum by Gilmore. The British national anthem was then performed; the final chorus was accompanied by the Grenadier and all other bands and the organ at full power, while the bells of the city and cannon were brought into requisition. The enthusiasm was immense, and Gilmore resigned his baton to Godfrey, who conducted the performance on a repetition in answer to an encore. Godfrey retained the baton and conducted the Grenadier band through the "Star-Spangled Banner," with full cannon accompaniment, causing great outbursts of applause and cheering for the Red Coats. The "Anvil Chorus" was next performed, with the usual accompaniment, and the concert closed by singing the "Missionary Hymn." There is no question of the perfect success of the enterprise.

HARRISBURG, PA., June 18.—The smallpox has broken out in Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pennsylvania, and many students are leaving for home. There are several other cases in the town.

BALTIMORE, June 18.—About two hundred cases of smallpox are reported a week, and it is increasing.

FOREIGN.

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 13.—Cholera has appeared in the southern parts of Russia, and vessels thence are quarantined.

PARIS, June 15.—The Protestant Synod, now in session here, has just passed through an unusually animated discussion, which resulted in a schism of the church. M. Guizot, the leader of the orthodox party, maintained the authority of the Scriptures, while the Rev. Mr. Coquerel, who is at the head of the liberal party, justified certain divergences relative to divinity and the resurrection of Christ. The liberals, demurring at the action of the orthodox majority, withdrew from the synod.

Negotiations with Germany for the gradual evacuation of France, as installments of indemnity are paid, are proceeding satisfactorily

LONNON, June 17.—The Rev. Norman McLeod, the well-known author, is dead, aged sixty.

BERLIN, June 17.—The bill directed against the society of Jesuits, depriving its members of the rights of citizenship, passed its second reading in the Reichstag to-day, after seven hours' debate—183 to 107.

GENEVA, June 17.—Count Sclopis, president of the Tribunal Arbitration, did not propose the adjournment of the courts on Saturday, as it was reported he would do. The summary of the British argument was accompanied by the protest reserving the right of England to withdraw from arbitration, if negotiations with the American government in relation to indirect claims fail to result satisfactorily to the government of the former country.

The proceedings before the Tribunal of Arbitration are carried on partly in English and partly in French. Hopeful expectations of the result of the arbitration are raised.

The Board of Arbitration met at two o'clock this afternoon. The first part of the session terminated at three, when all except the arbitrators withdrew. The latter remained in consultation till four o'clock, when they adjourned. The result of the deliberations of the board are absolutely unknown.

ROME, June 17.—The twenty-sixth anniversary of the accession of Pope Pius the Ninth to the pontifical chair was celebrated in this city yesterday in a becoming manner by the faithful. Four thousand persons, representing all nations, proceeded to the Vatican and presented a congratulatory address to his holiness, who, upon appearing before his visitors, was greeted with loud cheers.

DEATH OF GEN. DANIEL W. ADAMS.

Two of the gentlemen connected with the Picayune were in company with General D. W. Adams yesterday, the thirteenth instant, at three o'clock, and he was apparently in good health. In a little over an hour after he was dead!

Just before four o'clock he returned to his office on Carondelet street. A young gentleman in the office called his attention to some papers to be filed in the United States Court this morning. He at once commenced writing a brief, with clear head and steady hand. Suddenly his head fell forward. General P. O. Hebert, who was in a rear office, was called in, and a physician was sent for. Dr. Brickell came in a few minutes and prescribed, and General Adams speedily revived. Dr. Brickell directed him to remain quiet awhile, then to go home and take the prescription that he left. General Adams had complained of having felt slightly unwell for several days. Shortly after the doctor's departure, he said, suddenly, that he felt very sick, and asked for a physician. Dr. Brickell could not be found, and in a few moments after the general quietly expired. His body was soon after removed to his lodgings on St. Charles street, near Julia. His age was about fifty-four years.

The news of his sudden death quickly spread over the city, and elicited everywhere expressions of general and sincere regret.

General Adams was a son of Judge Adams, long president of the Union Bank at Jackson, Mississippi, and the entire family always holding a very prominent and influential position in our sister State. Daniel and Wirt Adams, brothers, both received excellent collegiate educations, and selected the law as their profession, and speedily enjoyed the large practice to which their eminent abilities entitled them.—Picayune.

JOHN BUNYAN was once asked a question about heaven, which he could not answer, because the matter was not revealed in the Scriptures; and he thereupon advised the inquirer to live a holy life and go and see.

AN EDITOR, on being told that there were two columns of obituary notices for the next day's paper, said they could not go in unless they were cut down to small die-mentions.

UNBELIEF hides Jesus from us, so that when we sin, though he be standing close beside us, we cannot see him; but "he standeth behind the wall."

THE life of a Christian is an habitual course of calling upon God. To live without prayer is the surest mark of a Christless soul.

A GERMAN describes a person noted for his inconsistency as "a sheutleman vat is very elastic in his brains."

FROM THE WORK.

Sparta Circuit, Louisiana Conference.

MR. EDITOR: God is prospering this portion of his vineyard. It seems to be a gradual increase, as we have had no protracted meetings as yet. People seem to come decided and calmly to join the army of the Lord.

My ecclesiastical year, according to statistics, is just half out. My presiding elder has just been with me the second time, preaching with power. God is with us and is blessing us. Nine persons have joined the church, and four more have applied for membership, who will be received on convenience. Five children have been solemnly dedicated to the Lord. Two Sabbath schools are in operation, with fifty-two children in attendance. Twenty-five copies of the Visitor are taken, and $14.40 have been raised for the cause. Our second quarterly meeting convened at Castor church, and was a time of sitting together in heavenly places.

PHILIP ALLEN, P. C.

Jackson Circuit, Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I entered upon the work early in the year. I found the people very kind and accommodating, and some good Christian people, but did not find Methodism what I thought it ought to be; neither is it now. But, by the blessing of God, I believe I am safe in saying it is improving.

At first the congregations were small and cold in most places. They are increasing, and at some places the houses are filled to overflowing. Again, there was no preaching except what the pastor did; now we have two local preachers, and preaching four times on Sundays, instead of twice, as before.

We have seven prayer meetings. They are doing a great work. Revival of religion has been kindled in the church, and Methodism is beginning to unfurl her banners to the breeze, and feels the power of God to the consuming of sin.

I have commenced to take up the collections ordered by the Conference, and they have been responded to with liberality, and I believe, by the blessing of God, that we will be able to meet our assessments. WM. SCOTT WADE, P. C.

GROVE HILL, June 1, 1872.

Delhi Circuit, Louisiana Conference.

MR. EDITOR: My second quarterly meeting for this year took place at Delhi, May 25 and 26. My presiding elder, Bro. Daves, was promptly at his post. The congregations were large, and exhibited rather more than their usual interest in the great things of eternity. The meeting was closed on Tuesday night, with expressions of regret on all sides. If we could have continued the exercises for a week or more, there is no telling now what the result would have been.

My second quarterly report was scant—only eighteen accessions to the church and seven baptisms in three months. But there is at least one reason why it is so small, and that is, the bad state of my health. I have been to all of my appointments so far, and preached, baptized, opened the door of the church, held a class meeting or two, looked after the prayer meetings and Sunday schools; but pastoral visitation has been very much neglected.

At the beginning of the year I commenced to preach to the children sermons only fifteen minutes long, and have been so well repaid that I have kept it up once a month ever since.

This field is white unto the harvest, but the laborer is not able to put in the sickle. I think if we had the preachers this whole country would surrender unconditionally to the waving banner and sword of Immanuel. Very truly in Christ,

JAS. E. BRADLEY.

FLOYD, June 5, 1872.

Lake Charles Circuit.

MR. EDITOR: The second quarterly meeting was held at Lake Charles, on Saturday, June 1. Present and presiding, Rev. B. F. White, presiding elder, assisted by Rev. J. G. Worley, preacher in charge. Divine services were held daily for five days. Result: seven persons joined the church, four on conversion and three by application, and fifteen converts joined the colored church near Lake Charles. Five white and five colored children were baptized. A deep and solemn interest was manifested in the hearing and preaching of the word.

Until about two years ago there had been no regular Protestant preaching at Lake Charles for many years. During those two years Rev. Thomas Mullett and Rev. J. B. Denton labored faithfully to rebuild the walls of Zion here. When our last quarterly meeting commenced we had but ten members of the church. Now we have learned not to despise the day of small things; and with a steadily increasing population, soon to be more than doubled by the completion of the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas railroad, we confidently anticipate a permanent and prosperous church organization. We have a Sunday school, with a fair library, and averaging an attendance of twenty-five scholars.

Bro. Worley is doing the full work of two preachers, earnestly and thoroughly. He obeys conscientiously the precept: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

The colored church, near town, is in a flourishing condition, and was represented by one of its own members in the Colored General Conference at Monroe. By its works, no less than by its professions, it manifests a zealous attachment to Methodism. RECORDING STEWARD.

The Demopolis District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Demopolis District Conference convened at Bladon Springs, May 30, and was presided over during the session by the presiding elder, Rev. S. H. Cox. Reports from all the charges were read, showing the work in good condition. The assessments for the support of the ministry are, on nearly every work, in excess of last year. The Sunday school cause is notably prosperous. In this department the Gaston circuit appears to have made more progress than any other, although some follow hard after. The preachers have been better paid than at the corresponding period of last year, the receipts varying from one-fourth to something over one-half the assessments. The prospect is that but one or two charges will report a deficiency at the close of the year. Even they may pay out. More than usual attention has been given to the collections ordered by the Conference. One work reports the whole apportionment for Bishops, Conference fund and missions raised. Others show considerable progress. Unless the other districts rise above their last year's figures, the Demopolis district will stand above grade number five at Eufaula.

The ADVOCATE is generally circulated, and would be more extensively taken but for want of mail facilities at certain points. In the matter of church literature, Livingston station leads the van, and of this station it is noteworthy that the pastor reported at the conference nearly every male member willing to pray in public or to lead a prayer meeting. Of course they are in good condition, and will have a revival and bring up a full financial report. In material improvement—and the spiritual report is equally favorable—the Bladon Springs circuit reports surprising progress. A few years ago it was looked on by some as the Botany Bay of the Conference. Now it stands a first-class circuit, ready, if circumstances demand, to support "a man with a wife and fifteen children"—I follow copy. A new church has been built at Bladon Springs, which, when completed, will reflect credit upon all that part of the country. This was accomplished by the untiring exertions of the pastor, who, amidst many discouragements, worked as only Bro. Powers can, and gave his individual note for material and work done. The people on Sunday morning indorsed that note with a subscription of over $1,300, being nearly $200 more than asked for. That church will be finished in style.

The Gainesville circuit reports progress ahreast of the foremost. A new church is being built at Gainesville—said to be, in design, a gem.

From all the other charges we have good reports, but nothing of such special interest as to require insertion here.

The following laymen were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference: D. H. Smith, J. M. Mason, S. S. Mellen and Henry Ware. Alternates: George H. Cole and A. W. Cockrell.

The next District Conference is to be held at Eutaw.

A gracious influence rested upon the community at Bladon Springs. The meeting was protracted, and we expect to hear of gracious results therefrom.

R. B. CRAWFORD, Sec'y.

A WRITER, describing the exodus from Eden, says: "The devil drove woman out of Paradise, but he could not drive Paradise out of woman."

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

THE BOOK OF PROVERBS. Part First—The Hebrew text, King James' version, and a revised version, with an introduction and critical and philological notes. Part Second—The revised version, with an introduction and explanatory notes. For the American Bible Union. By Thomas J. Conant. New York: Sheldon & Co. 1872.

This work displays much learning and industry, and the first part, which contains the Hebrew text, King James' version, and a revised version in parallel columns, will be a great convenience to the critical reader. The publishers state:

"For the use of scholars, and of ministers of the gospel and others to whom the Hebrew text is familiar, the two parts are bound together in one volume, the first part being incomplete without the other. For the common English reader, the revised version, with introduction and explanatory notes, is bound in a volume by itself, and for his use is complete in itself, having no dependence on the other division of the work.

"In the revised version the translator has scrupulously followed the original Hebrew, representing in English the exact sense of the sacred text, and its poetic spirit and form. In his explanatory notes he has not drawn from commentaries already before the public, preferring that his work should be his own contribution to the subject, rather than repeat the views of others."

Parts first and second, bound together, make a quarto of about 230 pages. For sale by Kain & Co., New Orleans.

SERMONS OF REV. C. H. SPURGEON. New York: Sheldon & Co. 1872.

We have great respect and admiration for Mr. Spurgeon as a man of large results in the work of Christ. His sermons are, judging them by their effects, the best in the world, but as reading matter we regard them as rather poor stuff. A sermon delivered for immediate popular effect, and largely extemporized, can hardly be of value as a permanent contribution to religious literature. These sermons are read extensively, however, and we bid them Godspeed so far as they are free from predestinarian error. For sale by Kain & Co., New Orleans.

PAUL OF TARSUS. An inquiry into the times and the gospel of the apostle of the Gentiles. By a Graduate. Boston: Roberts Bros. 1872.

The author is a terse writer, and a thinker of much vigor and acumen. His plan and method are happy, and his filling up is suggestive and instructive. There are, however, doctrinal statements which diverge widely from orthodoxy, and theological views which may lead the reader astray. Prof. Seely, of Ecce Deus celebrity, has been mentioned as the author. Whoever he is, he is a most powerful and accomplished writer. There is no index, no table of contents. For this omission the author should be heavily fined. Kain & Co., New Orleans.

THE LIFE THAT NOW IS. Sermons by Robert Collyer. Boston: Lee & Shepard. New York: Lee, Shepard & Dillingham. 1872.

Robert Collyer is the great Unitarian preacher of Chicago. His peculiar theology is perceptible in these sermons, though not generally prominent. Bating this leaven of false doctrine, the sermons bear the impress of a rich and vigorous mind, and of a heart full of kindness and sympathy. The style is pure, simple, and abounding in anecdote and illustration. If this gifted man had stuck to the Wesleyan theology of his youth he would have been a far better and greater preacher. For sale by Kain & Co., New Orleans.

OUR FOUR BOYS. By Julia A. Mathews. New York: Robert Carter & Bros. 1872.

A splendid book for boys, and by a fascinating writer. The boys are fine specimens of youthful life and character, on their travels by land and by water, telling what they saw, and recounting many an incident and adventure. A 12mo of 324 pages. For sale at the Depository, 112 Camp street. Price, $1.10.

LIONEL ST. CLAIR, OR UNDER THE BANIAN TREE. By L. A. Monereife. New York: Robert Carter & Bros. 1872.

Another little volume for young people, handsomely illustrated, and fresh and sparkling as the dew. The moral and religious lessons inculcated are good For sale at the Depository by R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. Price, seventy-five cents.

HEART TO HEART are hymns by the author of "The Old, Old Story," published by Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., New York—a little volume filled with many sweet and delightful hymns. "I Love to Tell the Story" is worth more, by a thousand times, than the cost of the work. For sale at the Methodist Depository, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. Price, twenty cents.

THE CHRISTIAN MARRIAGE CEREMONY. Its history, significance and curiosities; ritual, practical and archæological notes; and the text of the English, Roman, Greek and Jewish ceremonies. By J. Foot Bingham, D. D. New York: Anson D. F. Randolph & Co. 1871.

This is a beautiful volume, 12mo, 322 pages, on tinted paper. The contents are both curious and edifying, and supply a vast fund of information, historical, doctrinal and legal, concerning the marriage ceremony. For sale at the Methodist Depository, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. Price, $1.75.

BIBLE LORE. By Rev. J. Comper Gray. New York: Dodd & Mead, publishers.

This is also a beautiful 12mo, tinted paper, and filled with instructive matter. It tells about rare manuscripts of the Bible, ancient versions, celebrated commentaries, famous English translations, the authorized version, peculiar words and phrases, the literary features, and many other things, both in and about the book. A valuable work, and of convenient size, for all readers. For sale at the Depository, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. Price, $1.25.

BEDE'S CHARITY, by Hesba Stretton, published by Dodd & Mead, New York, is an English story, well told, and exposes the wrongs and sufferings of the destitute and unfortunate. Whoever reads it will be better religiously for doing so. For sale by R. J. Harp, Depository, New Orleans. Price, $1.50.

THE July number of Old and New, issued June 15, repeats the highly successful experiment of last year, and is an educational number. It contains a graphic account of life at the famous Round Hill School, established and conducted by George Bancroft and Dr. Cogswell; a comprehensive view of the whole range of instruction now given at Harvard University; other papers upon topics of educational importance, and a college directory, giving the name, locality, course of study, faculty and number of students of one hundred and seventy-five or more of the principal collegiate institutions of the United States, being an extremely convenient reference list. Mailed, post paid, on receipt of thirty-five cents, by the publishers, Messrs. Roberts Bros., Boston.

WE HAVE RECEIVED APPLES OF GOLD, bound in paper, containing the numbers from January to July. It makes a beautiful little volume for the children. Published by the American Tract Society, Boston, and by Hurd & Houghton, New York.

AMONG the June periodicals received are Arthur's Ladies' Home Magazine, the Children's Hour, the Southern Magazine, the Household, and Appletons' Journal of June 1.

PHILIPS' SOUTHERN FARMER and the AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST for June have been received. Both excellent numbers, and full of matter for the season.

TEXAS RAILROADS.—The Marlin Telegram says that the railroad from Marlin to Waco will be completed before the time specified in the contract, which is October 1.

Track-laying on the Waco Tap will soon begin.

The Houston and Great Northern railroad is now running to Trinity, seven miles this side of Trinity river. The Rush Observer says it is one of the smoothest roads to travel upon.

The Jefferson Times says there is very good news from the Trans-Continental railroad. E. B. Hart, secretary of the company, telegraphs to Colonel B. B. Grafton that active operations will soon commence, and that the work will be prosecuted with vigor.

The Dallas Herald says that the contract for the grading of the Central road from that city to Rawlett's Creek has been given to Hyatt & Sou, late contractors on the Houston and Great Northern, and from thence to Red river to B. O'Connor & Sons. The work is to be done by the fifteenth of November next. The connections of the Central and the Kansas roads will be made about ten miles below Preston, and by the first of January next.

THE WONDERFU' WEAN.

BY WILLIAM MILLER.

Our wean's the most wonderfu' wean e'er I saw;
It would tak' me a lang summer day to tell a'
His pranks, frae the morning till night shuts his e'e,
When he sleeps like a pcerie 'tween father and me;
For in his quiet turns siccan questions he'll speir:
How the moon can stick up in the sky that's sae clear?
What gars the winds blow? and whar frae comes the rain?
He's a perfect divert—he's a wonderfu' wean.

Or wha was the first bodie's father? and wha
Made the very first snaw-shower that ever did fa'?
And wha made the first bird that sang on a tree?
And the water that swims a' the ships in the sea?
But after I've told him, as weel as I ken,
Again he begins wi' his wha? and his whea?
And he looks aye sae watchfu' the while I explain—
He's as auld as the hills—he's an auld-farrant wean.

And folk wha hae skill o' the lumps on the head,
Hint there's mae ways than toiling o' winning ane's bread;
How he'll be a rich man, and hae men to work for him,
Wi' a kyte like a bailie's, snug, shugging afore him;
Wi' a face like the moon, sober, sonsy, and douce,
And a back, for its breadth, like the side of a house.
T weel I'm naco ta'en up wi't, they mak' a' sae plain;
He's just a town's talk—a by-ordinar wean.

I ne'er can forget sic a laugh as I gat,
To see him put on father's waistcoat and hat;
Then the lang-leggit boots gaed sae far ower his knees,
The tap loops wi' his fingers he grippit wi' ease.
Then he march'd thro' the house, he march'd but, he march'd ben,
Like ower mony mae o' our great little men,
That I laugh clean outright, for I couldna contain,
He was sic a conceit—sic an ancient-like wean.

But 'mid a' his daffin' sic kindness he shows,
That he's dear to my heart as the dew to the rose;
And the unclouded hinnie-beam aye in his e'e
Makes him every day dearer and dearer to me!
Though fortune be saucy and dorty and dour,
And gloom through her fingers like hills through a shower,
When bodies hae got ae bit bairn o' their ain,
How he cheers up their hearts—he's the wonderfu' wean!

Baptist Doctrines and Charity.

MR. EDITOR: As I have come into possession of a rare Baptist publication, I propose to give some of its contents to your readers. It is very hard to decide what the doctrines of this church are from hearing them preach. At one time they will preach Arminianism and at another Calvinism; and as they do not often give publicity to their doctrines by printing them, but few people know what they are. They often tell the people that they believe in free grace, and that there is but little difference between their doctrines and ours. Their Articles of Faith, however, are published in the minutes of the last session of the Judson Association, by order of that body. I propose to copy these for your readers, taken from page 9, published minutes of the Judson Association:

"ARTICLES OF FAITH OF THE JUDSON ASSOCIATION.

"ART. 1. We believe in the existence of one only true and living God, and that he has made himself known to his people under the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, the same in essence, and equal in divine perfection.

"ART. 2. We believe the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments are the word of God, and the only rule of faith and practice.

"ART. 3. We believe in the doctrine of election—that God chose his people in Christ before the foundation of the world; that they should be holy and without blame before him in love, having predestinated them to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ, according to the good pleasure of his will.

"ART. 4. We believe in the doctrine of original sin.

"ART. 5. We believe in man's incompetency to recover himself from the fallen state he is in by nature, by his own will and ability.

"ART. 6. We believe sinners are justified in the sight of God only by the imputed righteousness of Christ.

"ART. 7. We believe that God's elect shall be called, regenerated and sanctified by the Holy Ghost.

"ART. 8. We believe that nothing can separate the true believers from the love of God, but that they will be kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation.

"ART. 9. We believe that baptism and the Lord's Supper are ordinances of Jesus Christ; that true believers are the only subjects of these ordinances, and that immersion only is baptism.

"ART. 10. We believe in the resurrection of the dead, and a general judgment.

"ART. 11. We believe that the punishment of the wicked will be everlasting, and the joys of the righteous will be eternal.

"ART. 12. We believe that no minister has a right to administer the ordinances unless he is called of God and is in fellowship in the church of which he is a member."

This is their faith, as published by them. I make no comment.

Now you have read the pastoral addresses of our Bishops, full of love and wisdom. Here is one, published in the same pamphlet—"A Circular Letter," by L. R. Sims, moderator of the Judson Association, published by its order. It is a model of its sort. Here it is:

"Dear Brethren and Sisters of the Judson Baptist Association: Having been appointed to write a letter to you through our minutes, I have chosen the subject of charity, which I propose to consider briefly in a Bible sense.

"In every case I now remember in the Scriptures, the term charity corresponds with the word love, and, I think, should have been so translated. Paul says it is an abiding principle with the Christian, and is greater than faith or hope. Then there is nothing taught in God's word, as belonging to our Christian principles, so important. This is made plain by Paul in the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, in which he says that all knowledge, gifts of prophecy, faith that would remove mountains or persevere against mountainous difficulties, and zeal that would give our bodies to be burned, are nothing without charity.

"It is clearly shown that there can be no right religion without it—no right worship of God without it. What it is we should seek earnestly to know. I have already said it is love; but it is not indiscriminate love. Characters, principles and things around us are so different that we cannot love them all. We cannot love God and Satan at the same time. No more can we love good and evil, truth and error, right and wrong, the cause of God and the cause of the wicked one.

"Then our Christian charity cannot rejoice in iniquity, but in the truth—loves God, loves his word, cause, kingdom, doctrines and people; and, of necessity, hates every cause or doctrine that is opposed to God's revelation. The world does us injustice in calling us uncharitable because we stand alone in our church organization. Just the sort of church Jesus built he will recognize. Whatever departs from that pattern is false; and true love cannot rejoice in it—cannot treat it as true when it is manifestly otherwise. Then that same charity carries with it a desire for the welfare of all our fellows. The truth alone can benefit permanently.

"The church of Christ is the pillar, and of the truth. The church must not believe or teach for doctrine the commandments of men, for the reason that God's cause is dishonored, and the world is injured by it. Let us follow charity."

What do you think of such "charity?" Does it agree with God's word? W. P. H. CONNERLY.

MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

MR. EDITOR: Some of the advocates for theological seminaries plead that such schools are just as necessary as schools to give special training to those who are preparing for the profession of medicine or of law. But there is a thought or two just here which such advocates seem to have overlooked. The candidate for the profession of law or of medicine, as a general thing, gives no special attention to his professional studies until he gets through his literary and scientific course. Up to that time he has probably not read a single book or heard a single lecture on such studies. The medical student, it is true, does receive considerable assistance from his study of chemistry, and also from anatomy and physiology, if, perchance, he studies this in his regular course. But in the case of the candidate for the ministry it is quite different. He has been studying theology, as to its great fundamental and practical truths, from his childhood. While he was yet on his mother's knee, or playing by her side, he received many a valuable lesson in theology from her lips. Even then he would frequently ask questions concerning God and eternity, and as his expanding mind and heart became able to comprehend such things, she would answer his questions, and thus try to lead him gradually to a knowledge of the grand truths of Christianity. Then, every lesson he learned in Sunday school, every chapter he read in the Bible, every sermon he heard, every religious conversation he engaged in, every talk he heard in class meeting or love-feast—all these were so many lessons in theology. Much that he learns, too, in his regular educational course throws light on theological questions. History and the natural sciences furnish him with many arguments with which to meet the skeptic and the atheist. The great volume of nature is open before him. "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork."

Besides, there can be no doubt that through the special drawings of the Holy Spirit, those who are destined to be called to the ministry are more inclined to studies of this kind than others are. Especially is this the case with those who become pious in early childhood. So much is this the case that, in many instances, there seems to be a general impression among the acquaintances of such boys that they will be called to preach. Oftentimes such impressions exist, and the matter becomes a topic of conversation among the people before the boy himself has had any definite impression that he will have to preach. Such boys are more serious, and read the Bible and other good books more than other boys; and, no doubt, the Holy Spirit gives special assistance, leading them to higher and clearer views of the truth, and to a fuller enjoyment of its saving power, than others.

By these and other means the candidate for the ministry is making constant progress in theological knowledge, so that by the time he finishes his collegiate course he is as well prepared to enter the regular ministerial work as many candidates for other professions are to enter upon their work after they have gone through their course of special training. HEAVEN'S LOCALITY.

When we contemplate heaven in its lowest sense, the atmosphere or space above us is assigned to the fowls or winged tribes. To see them fly from tree to tree or soar aloft above the clouds, or to see the migratory fowls floating along their trackless path with expanded wings, steering their course with the least imaginable effort along the sky, singing their farewells as they pass, affords us pleasant thoughts. But let us ascend to that space denominated the second or starry heaven, and contemplate the beauty, grandeur and sublimity of the glittering orbs as they wheel and glow in perfect order around their common center. The contemplation is enough to engage the thought and feast the intellect of man with the most profound admiration. But let us ascend still higher, and contemplate the heaven of heavens. And here we confess our inadequacy even to sketch an outline of that glorious world of light, the locality of which we now come to consider. That there is another and lovelier world than the one we occupy, situated somewhere in the immensity of space, within the limits of which the faithful of earth shall be finally convened to reap their rewards, and to spend an eternity of happiness, is a Bible truth that no one will attempt to deny. But how are we to form any idea of that glorious world of light? Shall we conclude that it is so remote from earth that its refulgent light cannot reach our globe? Let us consider this thought a little. If the velocity of light and speed of angels will bear any comparison, we must conclude that heaven is not so remote from earth. It is estimated that light travels at the rate of two hundred thousand miles in a second of time; by an astronomical calculation it is found that the distance from the earth to the nearest fixed stars is twenty trillion of miles, a distance that would require three years for light to pass from them to the earth. So it does not appear that the glorious world of which we write can be located so far beyond the region of the fixed stars as not to reach our earth with its brilliant rays. But in which direction shall we look for that glorious world? It is often spoken of in Scripture as being above, as there have been translations and ascensions. But how shall we determine as to its direction while our globe is whirling around at such a wonderful rate? Our general idea of above is in a line with the center of the earth's gravity. So we see it is impossible for us to be correct in our idea, except at one period of the earth's diurnal motion. Let that be as it may, I can but believe that heaven and earth are closely connected in the arrangement of the universe—as heaven is represented as being God's throne, while earth is his footstool. We believe that heaven is a material structure with limits and boundaries, and perfectly adapted to the enjoyment of the human family after the soul and body shall be reunited at the resurrection. But how can we conceive of a world of such glorious majesty near to our globe, and yet invisible? May we not conclude that the glorious luminary, the center of our system of worlds, the bulk of which is estimated to be thirteen hundred thousand times larger than the earth, and so brilliant in luster that the human eye is not permitted to gaze upon his refulgence, is the locality of heaven?

May not that glorious world of light,
To which so many powers are given,
To hold the planets in their flight,
May not that world be heaven?

What is True Christian Liberality?

A man of wealth goes on a far journey; but before starting he wisely provides means for the expense of the trip. He chooses to place this gold in bank on deposit, in charge of an agent, so that he may, as necessity requires, draw on his agent or banker for funds. He draws a draft for a sum of money for traveling expenses and another for hotel bills, and another for clothing suitable for the circumstances surrounding. His first draft is reluctantly paid; he has to write and beg the lifting of the second, and send an agent expressly to demand the payment of the third. Doubtless, say you, he will withdraw his money from that bank and deposit it in another; for it is his own money, and he has a right to control it; and the banker is the beneficiary, and not the giver of alms, in paying these drafts and holding the moneys. God is the man of wealth; he is on a journey accompanied with servants through time. He has made many men, yea, all men, his bankers, and he is drawing drafts on them for traveling, food and clothing expenses for his servants; and men dream of being very liberal in simply taking from God's treasury, now and then, a little of his money to pay his own drafts. Brethren, do you see the importance of building a church in your midst? That is God's draft on you, as his banker, for a little money to build him a house. Do you see the importance of supporting the minister of Christ? That is God's draft, directed to your conscience, for a little of his money to pay his servant with. So of every good enterprise felt to be important in society. It is a draft from God, only for his own money. Now is it liberality on your part to simply, honestly, promptly pay these drafts? I do not see the liberality. Now, when the Master draws on you and his box is empty, and you, out of your own money, pay his draft, then you may begin to talk of being liberal. But God is the giver of all good. Whatever of talent we have is but God's money, deposited with us as bankers; and when we have paid ourselves and all we have, we have simply shown ourselves to be honest bankers, worthy of the trust committed, and no more. God commits to the keeping of one more than to another, and each one is in duty bound to honor every draft made, even to self-sacrifice, and yet he dare not call himself liberal. Great liberality, indeed, in having the free use of God's moneys, and paying therefrom his drafts to meet pressing wants, as they arise in his journey with the church through time! Brother, to be simply honest, you must honor every draft made. There is no danger of paying a forged draft, if you will but notice the signature. It is a plain, legible hand, addressed to your conscience at the instance of Jesus. God's spirit accompanies the draft, and seals it to your heart, and you are by the Spirit (who is eternal verity) made conscious of its correctness. Let us cease to talk of liberality, and talk of sheer honesty, in paying God's drafts on us for his funds to carry on his own work.

BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA.

MR. EDITOR: The rapid growth of this place is worthy the attention of the religious as well as of the secular press. When the last Conference met it was too insignificant to be accounted of in the minutes. Now it has a church of one hundred members, and they have completed a handsome church, costing $1,600, and cheap at that. The other churches are moving in the same direction, and for once our Episcopalian and Catholic friends are nearly up with the Methodists. All will soon be occupying new and commodious houses of worship. The Presbyterians will not be far behind, the material for their house being on the ground. The Baptists have a pastor, but have as yet taken no steps for building.

While these temples are rising to the worship of God, the theater is already in full blast, and all the various kinds of city dissipation are numerously patronized. The wonder is, what sustains the town and causes its rapid growth? Like Atlanta, it is built in an old field, with but little wealth around it. But then it has two great lines of railway—northeast and southwest, and south and north, interseeting each other at the middle point; it has immense mineral treasures of coal and iron, in close proximity, on every side; manufacturers have already signified their intention to avail themselves of the extraordinary advantages of the country by purchasing large quantities of real estate in the vicinity; and several heavy iron establishments, that were built and destroyed during the war, have passed into new hands and are being rehabilitated.

A beautiful, healthful country surrounds it, abounding in fine water powers, land, timber, stock and grain. The experiment of Southern manufacturing can be fairly tried here, and if it fails here it is scarcely necessary to repeat it elsewhere.

I regret to state that Bro. Slaughter, the excellent pastor at Elyton and Birmingham, has been transferred to another charge on account of the death of the Rev. E. B. Norton, his brother-in-law, in order that he may be near his widowed sister and her family. Bro. C. C. Ellis is in charge of the work for the present. Yours, etc.,

MRS. LUCINDA AVERA.

This Christian lady died near Black Hawk, Carroll county, Mississippi, about ten o'clock on the night of the thirty-first of May, 1872. Her maiden name was Lane, and she was born near Raleigh, North Carolina, on the seventeenth day of April, 1796. She was married to Samuel Avera March 20, 1814. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1823.

Sister Avera was a devoted member of the Methodist Church South for a long time, being among the oldest members in the Black Hawk society. She was devoted to the cause of Christ, feeling always willing and ready to make sacrifices for the Master. In fact she possessed that religion that taught her to trust her God in all things. She was therefore very anxious about the welfare of the church. Her house was long a home for the way-worn itinerant, and many who may read this tribute to her memory will look back with much pleasure to the happy moments they have spent under the roof of this servant of God, with her devoted and pious husband, who some years ago preceded her to the better world. She was the mother of seven children, three dying while young, and four living to be heads of families—three of whom have now gone before, and only one left of that kind and good household. Her son—the only son that lived to be grown—was a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South—the Rev. James Avera, a notice of whose death I saw not long since. Some time before the news of his death reached his friends here, Sister Avera informed us that he was dead, though no news of the kind had been received for months after, he having died in Texas. Her friends tried to impress her that it was a mistake, but she insisted on its truth. Here her mind seemed partially to give way, in which state she remained until death, though always clear on religion and her prospects of heaven. She was ready to die, and is gone to join with many loved ones on the other shore. She was a Christian from principle, always feeling her obligations to God to be above all others. She was quite anxious about the support of the ministry and other calls of the church, and ready to respond. She has been known, when pressed for means to meet these demands, to raise the money by knitting and other means of her own handiwork. She has left a vacancy in the hearts of this people and the church which will not be easily filled. But few remain of the older members of this church who were here when Sister Avera came.

"The soul of our sister is gone
To heighten the triumphs above;
Exalted to Jesus' throne,
And clasp'd in the arms of his love."

NOT WORTH THE CANDLE.—In bygone days there was a phrase used by courts in ordering sales, and to prevent the auctioneer hastily disposing of articles to favor bidders, to preclude which it was required that the article, if of great value, should be up for competition during the time required by a candle to burn one inch; but where articles were not of value equal to that of the candle consumed, such formality was dispensed with; hence the applicability and use of the term to anything of insignificant consideration—"not worth the candle." In the earlier colonial records of Pennsylvania will be found a decree of court condemning a piratical craft which had been captured, to which is annexed the order "that she be sold by the inch of candle." The antiquity of the usage is doubtless much greater than any illustration our country can present, as in France the proverb, "Le jeu ne vaut pas la chandelle," is of no modern origin.—New York Observer.

A LONDON physician has applied the magic lantern to the study of diseases of the skin. A transparent photograph of the patient is taken, and then placed in a magic lantern. A strong hydro-oxygen light casts the figure enlarged on a white sheet, and in this way the smallest details are brought out with astonishing minuteness.

PETER'S REPENTANCE.

Where and how he spent his two dismal days following his denial, we know not. After that look from him in the judgment-hall, he never saw his Lord alive again. But as on the third morning we find him and John together, we may believe that it was from the lips of the beloved disciple—the only one of all the twelve that was present at the trial before Pilate, and who stood before the cross—that Peter heard the narrative of that sad day's doings: how they bound and scourged, and mocked and spat upon the Lord; how they nailed him to the cross, and set him up in agony to die. And at each part of the sad recital, how would that heart, softened by penitence, be touched; how would it grieve Peter to remember that he, too, had a share in laying such heavy burdens on the last hours of his Lord's suffering life! That Master whom he had so dishonorably and ungratefully denied, was sleeping in the grave. Was he not ready to exclaim, "Oh! but for one short hour with him!"—a single interview!—that he might tell him how bitterly he repented what he had done, and get from his Master's living, loving lips the assurance that he had been forgiven! But that never was to be. He should never see him more.

Never, grief-blinded man! Thine eye it sees not, thine ear it hears not, neither can that sorrow-burdened heart of thine conceive what even now Jesus is preparing for thee.

The third morning dawns. The Savior rises triumphant from the grave; in rising, sets the angels as sentries before the empty tomb; gives to them the order that, to the first visitants to the sepulcher, this message shall be given: "Go, tell the disciples and Peter that he is risen from the dead." This message from the angel Peter had not heard, when he and John ran out together to the sepulcher, and found it empty. But he heard it not long after. Who may tell what strange thoughts that singling out of him—that special mention of his name by the angelic watchers of the sepulcher—excited in Peter's heart? How came those angels to think of him at such a time as this? It could not have been their own doing. They must have got that message from the Lord himself—been told by him particularly to name Peter to the women. But was it not a thing most wonderful that, in the very act of bursting the barriers of the grave, there should be such a remembrance of him on the part of that Master whom he had so lately denied? Was it not an omen for good?

Peter had his rising hopes confirmed, his doubts and fears all quenched, when, some time in the course of the forenoon, waiting till John and he had parted—waiting till he could meet him alone, and speak to him with greater freedom and fullness—Jesus showed himself to Peter. Before he met the others to speak peace, he hastened to meet Peter to speak pardon. One of the first offices of the risen Savior was to wipe away the tears of the penitent.—Hanna's Life of Christ.

JEFFERSON'S VIEWS OF OLD AGE.

In his letter to John Adams Jefferson said:

Our next meeting must then be in the country to which they have flown—a country for us not now very far distant. For this journey we shall need neither gold nor silver in our purse, nor scrip, nor coats, nor staves. Nor is the provision for it more easy than the preparation has been kind. Nothing proves, more than this, that the Being who presides over the world is essentially benevolent—stealing from us one by one the faculties, leading us like the horse in his mill, round and round the same beaten circle.

To see what we have seen,
To taste the tasted, and at each return
Less tasteful; o'er our palates to descant
Another vintage—

until, satiated and fatigued with this leaden iteration, we ask our congé.

I heard once a very old friend, who had troubled himself with neither poets nor philosophers, say the same thing in prose, that he was tired of pulling off his shoes and stockings at night and putting them on again in the morning. The wish to stay here is gradually extinguished; but not so easy as that of returning once in a while to see how things have gone on. Perhaps, however, one of the elements of future felicity is to be a constant and unimpassioned view of what is the wish of occasional visits. Mercier has given us a vision of the year 2440; but prophecy is one thing and history another. On the whole, however, perhaps it is wise and well to be contented with good things which the Master of the feast places before us, and be thankful for what we have rather than thoughtful about what we have not.

IT IS of no advantage to have a lively mind if we are not just. The perfection of the pendulum is not to go fast, but to be regular.

MY FATHER'S HOUSE.

BY J. E. RANKIN, D. D.

My father's house, I see it yet!
Although my manhood's eyes are wet,
To think that I shall never more
Play childhood games around the door;
That I shall never roam the lands
In which that country homestead stands.

Like some sweet picture 'neath the hand
Of patient art, made to expand,
By touch on touch, till it has grown
In height and depth, color or tone,
And from the canvas seems to stand,
True sky, and tree, and solid land!

Across its threshold could I walk,
I should not hear my father talk;
I should not see my mother's form,
Eager to give me a welcome warm;
Nor could I, with old laughter, swoop
Upon the clustered household group.

Strange, that through all these later years,
Still so distinct that home appears;
Strange, that so oft I catch its beams
Stealing across my manhood dreams;
Although I know, between, there waves
The grass upon so many graves!

Is it because 'twas but the type
Of joys in heaven, more sweet, more ripe?
Because of that which Christ prepares,
Each earthly home the meaning bears?
The substance there, the shadow here,
Dawning upon faith's vision clear?

My Father's house before me stands,
Amid the radiant morning-lands!
They gather there, the loved of old,
Walking in white those streets of gold;
Knowing no sickness there, nor pain,
Nor dreading there to die again.

RELIGION AND SCIENCE.

Truth can never be at variance with truth—science never at variance with religion; we speak, of course, of both in their purity; they meet and strengthen man's most glorious thought—immortality. And yet you say: "I was more peaceful, more secure, when as a child I shut my eyes upon my mother's breast and slept, without a care, simply enfolding myself in faith. This prescience, this mixing up of reason in everything, one link joined to another from eternity to eternity, snatches a support from me—my confidence in prayer, my wings to God. If they fail, I fall powerless in the dust, without comfort, without hope. I bow before the great and glorious light of knowledge, but it seems to me that therein is human pride, the wish to be as wise as God. 'That you shall be!' said the serpent to man when he would persuade him to eat of the tree of knowledge. Through my intellect I must admit the truth of what astronomy teaches and proves; I see the eternal intellect of God in the building of the whole world—in the small and in the great—where it is joined and fitted together into a never-ending, harmonious whole, and I tremble in my deepest need and sorrow; for what can my prayer effect where all is sternest law?"

You tremble when you see the Almighty revealing himself in love—that Being with whom it is said mind and heart are one; you tremble when you know that he has chosen you to immortality. And I know this by religion, by the holy, everlasting word; science is laid as a stone upon my grave, but religion is that which rolls it away. Yet it is not wholly so. The tiniest flower preaches from its green stalk in the name of science, also furnishing proof of immortality; and with such assurances from faith and science, the immortal will not tremble in his deepest need, nor the wings of prayer fail; you will believe in the eternal law of love as you believe in the eternal law of science.

When a child picks flowers in the field, and brings us the whole handful, one up and one down, all thrown together, then in each individual one we see more clearly the beauty, the harmony in color and form that is so good for our sight. We arrange them, and altogether they blend into a beautiful whole, so that we do not look at one, but at the whole bouquet. This perception of the harmony of beauty is an instinct in us, lying in our eyes and in our ears—these bridges between our souls and the created things around us. Through all our senses there is a striving after the harmonious as shown in all created things, even in the beating of the waves of the air made manifest in sound.

In the Bible we read the words, "God in spirit and in truth," and from this we can best understand the meaning of that which we call a sense of the beautiful. What else can it be than "spirit and truth," this manifestation of God? Even as our own souls shine out of the eye, and in the fine play about the mouth, so surely the image of God shines forth in the creation. There is this harmony of beauty from the smallest leaf and flower to the large full bouquet, from our earth itself to the numberless halls in the rooms of the sky; as far as the eye can see, as far as science can reach, all, both great and small, tells of beauty in harmony.

But if we look at man, of whom we have the highest, most holy word, "Created in the image of God," then the harmony appears to be broken. When we are born we are all alike! As creatures we stand equal in being, able to claim nothing as our right. And how differently God deals to us our talents! Some are so enormously great, others so small. At birth God places us in home and position, and to how many of us is there not allotted the hardest battle? There we are placed, to that we are ushered in; and many may with apparent justice say: "It were better for me that I had never been born!"

But if this were all, human life, even the highest on earth, would not come under the law of the beauty of harmony. That is incredible, it is an injustice, it can never be.

This disharmony of life arises from the fact that we see only a small part of our being, namely, that here upon the earth; there must be a continued life, an immortality.

If our being ended in death here, God's most perfect work would be imperfect, God not righteousness and love, as everything in nature and revelation testifies; and if one points to the human race here as that wherein the harmony is most to be manifested, then all our endeavors sink down to the industry of the coral insect; humanity becomes only a monument of greatness to the Creator; he shows then only his glory, but not his highest love. All love is not self-love; and we must inherit immortality.

In this rich assurance we are raised toward God, confident that what happens to us happens for our good. Our earthly eye has but a limited vision, our spiritual glance reaches also only to a certain boundary; but on the other side of that, the same law of all-love must also rule. That God knoweth the eternal future cannot make us uneasy; we ourselves are able to form an idea of it; we know perfectly what changes must take place in the course of years, we know the time for the flowers and the fruits, what kinds will grow and thrive, the time of ripening, when the storms will prevail, and when it is the certain rainy season. God must, and in an immensely higher degree, have the same knowledge about his created things—about the worlds of the universe—our earth and the human race. He must know, and a thousand years are to him as a single day is to us; therefore must the development, the fruit-bearing of humanity take place; therefore will the passions rule, and under these characters develop, persons being as powerful fly-wheels in the great machinery. History shows us all this, link fast in link, in the spiritual world as in the material; the eye of wisdom, the Father's eye, encompasses the whole! And shall we then be unable, in our hearts' need, to pray with consolation to this Father, as the Savior prayed: "Take this cup from me; yet not my will but thine be done!" We do not forget these last words; if it is for our good, our prayer will be granted; and if not granted, then let us be as the child that in his sorrow comes to his earthly father, and, not getting his wish granted, is yet refreshed by mild words and kind reasoning, so that the sorrow is softened by tears and the child's trouble lightened. That will also be procured for us by prayer. The eye will find tears, the heart consolation; and who has trodden so far in the paths of the soul that he dare deny that our prayers are as wings that bear us to the sphere from whence God will reach us the olive-branch of his help and grace?

Thus, by walking with open eyes in the path of science, we see the glory of revelation. Human wisdom is only a span in the column of revelation that beareth God; but this span will increase throughout eternity, through faith and with faith. Science is as a chemical proof that says the gold is pure.

ENJOYING RELIGION.

BY REV. C. A. STORK.

Among the many things that Protestant Christians do with their religion, the last, generally, is to enjoy it. A good many work it. They make it feed the poor, teach the ignorant, rescue the abandoned, reform the state. This is a good use of piety; but it can hardly be said to be the whole of it. Fruit is good; but there is something to be said for flowers too. A certain few do with their religion as very young children do with their roots and seeds—dig them up to see if they are alive and growing. The chief use of their faith to such is to test it and try it:

"'Tis a point I long to know,
Oft it causes anxious thought,
Do I love the Lord, or no?
Am I his, or am I not?"

Others, more æsthetical, treat it as something to be adorned. Religion to them is a vase to receive violets and roses and lilies. They are in a continual bother about organs and anthems, liturgies and church architecture, vesper services and other ecclesiastical millinery. Well, the service of God is worthy of all beautiful adornment; but the Founder of Christianity said some very hard things about those who "build the tombs of the prophets," and "make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter." Some, and these come very near enjoyment, make their religion a gymnasium for theological athletics: they strengthen their intellectual muscle with the heavy weights of doctrine, and go up and down the ladders of speculation, and are never so happy as when they can get an unlucky friend to come into the arena and try a fall.

Some ascetical brother will object: "This is not a cross-bearing religion; this is seeking Christ for the loaves and fishes. We ought not to seek religion for enjoyment, but because it is right." Well, that is true enough: the man that seeks religion for joy will miss the joy, because he will not find the religion. But when once Christ is found, and the soul rests in him, why should she not take the full sweetness of love, and, to use a good, homely phrase, "enjoy religion?" Paul was a cross-bearer. He counted all things but loss for Christ; but when he found what he sought, it was "the excellency of Christ." That which redeems the life of the great apostle from a certain repelling loftiness and chill is the evident joy and sweet fragrance of content and peace that flowed down through all, as the rills leap down the cold Alpine heights, laughing and kissing the violets on their border, and making a child-like mirth in the sternness of the mountains.

When we go to church how many faces do we see shining with the soft, placid glow that speaks of a heart washed free from the dust of anxiety and wet in the heavenly fountain? In the social meeting, in the prayers, what a disproportion of sighing, confession and sad yearning to thanksgiving and glad communion. There is a plaintive chord in the utterance of the sincerest that is very sweet, but very depressing. They have worked hard, and they have not effected very much; they have examined themselves, and found it very bad within; they have wreathed the flowers about their faith, and they have confuted sundry heretics and loose thinkers; but æsthetics and polemics are unsatisfying food for the soul. They have had no genuine enjoyment of religion.

We may measure the rarity of this use of religion by the pleasurable shock it gives us when we meet a saint who "rejoices evermore." Scrupulous consciences are rather shy of making too much of enjoyment in sacred things, as if it were something selfish; but there really is not a more beneficent discipline in the flock than the happy, sunny disciple. When the violet and hyacinth, and, later, the honeysuckle and jasmine, flower in the garden, the passers-by linger and drink in the perfume, and have pleasant summer thoughts that all the flush of the hollyhock and tulips cannot call up. A Christian experience full of peaceful joy is like a fragrant garden: it makes men look wistfully that way; it puts soberer, tenderer thoughts into their hearts.

There was an old man in my church once who used to refresh me by the simple, child-like joy there was in his religion. He had a broken, rather formal, stiff prayer, but it was all performed through with a subtle sense of joy. And the people liked to hear him pray the same prayer again and again, because he was happy in it. He never had very much to say, and he was not over wise, nor very spiritual, but in his face and mien and tone there was the dewy freshness and restfulness that come from a peaceful heart, a genuine delight in God and goodness. When he used to walk home with me, after I had got fevered from preaching too hard, or fretted by a lifeless meeting, it seemed like getting into what one fancies the rest of heaven will be. All the hurry and fever and fret seemed charmed away. The fuss and care and regret and turmoil shrank away as the noise of the streets dies off when one slips out into the rustling woods and by the slow babbling brooks. Where did he get it? Well, he got it from God. But how did he get it? Let us see.

Just two things are needful to open the way for joy in religion—trust and humility. "What time I am afraid, I will trust in thee." So said David, and he tried it; and how many songs of exultant praise, of sweet, gentle, brooding content rang from his harp. Trust is the shield that catches a thousand fiery darts of the adversary. It builds a wall within which the flowers of grace bud and bloom, and the trees of the Lord ripen their fruit safe from the harsh winds. Trust in God; and many a storm that buffets others will only lull you to a sweeter rest as it beats against the wall behind which you are sheltered.

But you want another grace, and then love will have room to do its perfect work in you—you want humility. The sainted Payson had as much joy as a diseased body and morbid body would let any man have; but he said he never was happy in his religion till he was willing to be nothing. Pride opens more heart-sores, and dashes from the lips more refreshing cups, than most Christians are aware. If you have anything you pride yourself on—good looks, family, intellect, manners, money, piety, zeal, whatever it is—just get the pruning hook of the gardener and cut it down to the ground, and then grub it up by the roots, till you can say honestly, "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ;" and when it is all gone you will be a happy Christian.

There is enjoyment in religion for every disciple; but he must first build the wall of trust, and then cultivate the ground-plant—humility; then there will be summer stillness and perfume in all his garden.—Canada Christian Advocate.

WHY SATAN TREMBLES.

BY LADY LISTON FOULIS.

The two emissaries from the Prince of Darkness now enter a room, where a sick one is pleading earnestly with her Lord for some special boon. They catch the words:

"Dear Lord, do let me go."

They stop at the door to listen and consult, not caring to advance further.

"Listen!" says the younger one, "listen! What is it she asks for?"

"O, she wants to be well enough to attend the services in church on Sabbath. It seems to be a great day with these Christians; and well may they remember the death of him who thus robbed us of so many victims."

"What shall we do? Shall we let her go, or hinder her?"

"O, let her go—for I have seen men try to hide behind the pillars of the temple as well as among the trees of the garden. You see, if we hinder her, she will have her Lord's presence all to herself at home, without the distractions she will meet with in the public service; and then she will humble herself under what she will call 'loving, needed chastisement.' So the last error would be worse than the first. Yes, better let her go; and, when she returns, we can return also, with temptations of various kinds, which will soon make her forget the too holy service."

"You are more hopeful than I am. For my part, I always tremble, lest those who love the Lord and speak to him in that style, should elude our grasp forever."

"Anyhow, we are wasting time here at present. Let's be off."

* * * * * *

The sick one lies down with a shade of anxiety and trouble on her countenance; but, while she gazes sadly out into the deepening twilight, a soft whisper reaches her ear. It comes from one of two shining ones who, all unseen, have been watching by the bed. They are of those ministering spirits of whom it is written: "He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways."

"Sister," said the gentle voice, "didst thou hear what said these evil ones? Fear not, but see thou outwit them. Rest not in the ordinance, but in thy Lord; go with faith and love, trembling for very joy, to remember the dying love of thy dear Lord; and let the communion thou hast with him at his table be continued in thy daily life; and then, though these evil ones return, they cannot hurt thee. Let temptation in any form, be it sickness, business, or trial of any kind, only drive thee closer to thy Lord. Be this thy song on returning from the holy feast:

"With great delight I sat me down
Under his loving shade;
His fruit was sweet unto my taste,
As if with honey laid.

"He brought me to his house of wine,
And there he feasted me;
His banner over me was love,
His love my canopy.

"The left-hand of my well-beloved
Under my head did rest;
His right hand did embrace me while
I leaned upon his breast.

"He filled my longing, hungry soul
With finest of the wheat;
He made my drooping heart rejoice
With kisses, O so sweet!

"The 'chiefest of ten thousand,' thou
Art ever in my sight,
My 'altogether lovely' One,
My Lord, my life, my light.

"Fare thee well."—New York Observer.

A THOUGHT FOR THE TIMES.—The "heathen Chinee" prides himself on paying up all his debts at the beginning of each year, and places over his door an emblem that he is square with the world. This custom prevails throughout the empire, and must be complied with to secure a good financial standing.

IT IS A significant fact that the column headed "Amusing" in the London weekly Public Opinion is recruited almost entirely by selections from the American press.

A GERMAN WRITER, complaining of the difficulties in the pronunciation of the English language, cites the word Boz, which he says is pronounced Dickens.

A CHINAMAN, on his examination for membership, in response to the question, "How he found Jesus?" answered: "I no find Jesus at all; he find me."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO the proportion of communicants to the population in the United States was one in fifteen. Fifty years ago it was one in twelve. Thirty years ago one in nine, and now it is about one in seven.

THE New York city missionaries of the Episcopal Church report that they have, during the past year, furnished 85,000 meals to the poor, preached to 30,000, and visited 20,000 in prisons, reaching in various ways in all 70,000.

THE Presbyterian Church, according to a report made at the General Assembly, Detroit, has 710 foreign missionaries in the field, 4,203 members of mission churches, and 10,000 Sabbath school children among the heathen. The work is pronounced in a very healthful and prosperous condition.

AT THE stated meeting of the Board of Managers, March 8, William H. Allen, LL. D., president of Girard College, was unanimously elected president of the American Bible Society. Appropriations were made for the year ensuing, for Bible work in foreign lands, amounting to $66,310. The departure was announced of the Rev. W. H. Norris, as special agent to Santo Domingo.

WORTH CONSIDERING.—The Roman Catholic Telegraph, of Cincinnati, argues sensibly against the waste of time and money required by public processions, and calculates that the last St. Patrick's celebration cost at least $300,000, estimating it at $5 a man. With that sum twelve hundred families could have been transported west of the Mississippi, and one hundred and sixty acres of land given to each.

THE Presbyterian mission in Rio Janeiro report, in the May number of the Foreign Missionary: "The results of our work during the year have been most encouraging. The attitude of the public mind is constantly becoming more and more favorable. The influence of the gospel is at work here now as never before. Several new stations for preaching could be and ought to be opened without delay."

CHEERING PROGRESS.—Bismarck is making noble progress in casting off the papal yoke from his country. He has gone far to remove the schools from the hands of the clergy, and now is about to secure the enactment of two bills, one permitting civil marriage at the option of the parties, and the other allowing a Prussian subject to leave the pale of any church, and cease to pay dues to it without conditions or penalties.

THE Presbyterians of London propose to raise $150,000 to aid in building forty new churches, which are to cost not less than $15,000 and not more than $25,000 each. Each church is to receive a grant of $3,350. The first half of this is not to be given till half of the whole sum to be expended on the church has been raised, and the second half is to be withheld till three-fourths have been obtained.

AMERICAN COLONIZATION SOCIETY.—The directors of the American Colonization Society, on Thursday, January 18, closed their annual meeting in Washington. In view of the increased number of applications for passage to Liberia in the ship which is to sail in May next, under the auspices of the society, over two thousand names already having been enrolled, they resolved to make renewed efforts to increase their funds.

THE Paris correspondent of the London Times prophesies that the effort of the Ultramontanes in the French Assembly to push Thiers into a demonstration on behalf of the temporal power of the Pope will amount to nothing. He says: "It is highly probable there may be a splash made, to keep up appearances; but it will not amount to anything, and the Pope will be left to protect his own temporal power as best he may until the end of April."

TURKS MORE TOLERANT THAN PAPISTS.—Recent events have caused the recognition of the rights of religious liberty in Syria, and Mohammedans can now become Christians without molestation. On the portions of Mount Lebanon where Rome has the power, there is, however, no toleration for Protestants. Papal priests recently cruelly scourged back into their church a community of simple-minded Christians who had been under Protestant instruction six months.

THE PEOPLE DECIDING.—The recent Legislature of Massachusetts passed a bill prohibiting the sale of fermented liquors, but giving the people permission to vote upon the question on the first Tuesday in May. Of one hundred and sixty-two towns where the vote was taken, one hundred and nine voted to prohibit the sale, and fifty-two (in which nearly all the large cities were included) to permit it. As the law forbids the sale in the places that did not vote, the people of Massachusetts are strongly opposed to the liquor traffic.

RESULTS OF PAPAL TEACHINGS.—Rev. Mr. Robertson, of Scotland, who has been familiar with the state of religion in France for twenty-seven years, says: "I have no hesitation in saying that there are heathen tribes that are practically nearer the truth than the new Ultramontanes in France. All worship of God seems to have disappeared, being replaced by a devotion to the blessed Virgin. The Holy Trinity is replaced by a new one, 'Jesus, Mary, Joseph,' who are put quite on a level."

SPEAKING for the London Missionary Society at Gloucester, the Rev. Griffith John said there were at present seventy thousand Christian converts now in China. It had been asked by some of the Chinese, who were thorough business men: "How much will you give me to love the Lord Jesus Christ?" (The congregation laughed.) "Aye," he said, "you smile; but there's a great deal of that principle in this country, I can tell you."

THE Presbyterians of Ireland are moving in earnest opposition to the demand of the Roman Catholic prelates for separate denominational schools. The present educational system of Ireland, which was in great part the device of Archbishop Whately, provides for the union of literary and moral instruction and the separate inculcation of religious truth. This system the prelates are determined to overthrow; and it is the system which the Presbyterians are leagued to defend.

REV. HENRY M. BOOTH finds a needy and not altogether discouraging field for missionary labor among the Spaniards, Indians, Half-breeds and Negroes of Central America. Altogether there are two million of these people. Their character and the presence and sway of Jesuitism are the main discouragements to be faced. But commerce is waking up new ideas among the people, all religions are protected by treaty, and there is a growing desire for education and the religion of the Protestants.

THERE are in the United States 117 theological seminaries. Of these the Baptists and the Roman Catholics have each 17; the Presbyterians and the Lutherans each 14; the Episcopalians, 12; the Methodists, 10; the Congregationalists, 7; the Reformed Church and the United Presbyterians each 4; the Free Will Baptists, the Christians and the Universalists each 2; and the Unitarians, the Moravians, the African Methodists, the Union Evangelicals, the Swedenborgians, and the United Brethren, one apiece; while there are six "unknown."

IN THE BEGINNING of 1871 as many as 1,644 Jesuit missionaries were ordained, of whom 168 were in Europe, 352 in Asia, 159 in Africa, 815 in North America, 337 in South America, 96 in Australia, including the Philippine Islands and the Dutch Islands in the South of Asia; 17 were sent traveling. The greatest number of missionaries were from the province of Castilia, 291; Arragonia, 177; Lyons, 173, and Germany, 135. The latter were distributed as follows: Asia, chiefly India, 54; Africa, 9; North America, 39; South America, 35, and 4 were traveling.

THE JEWS.—It is said there is no place on the globe, where Jews are resident, where the gospel is not preached, and the gospel among them has secured many trophies. Of 30,000 Jews residing in London, 2,000 are members of Christian churches. Of 18,000 in Berlin, 2,000 are said to be converted; in the University, three years ago, twenty-eight professors were Christian Jews. The total number of Jews in Europe is reckoned at 3,431,700, and of these 20,000 are reckoned as Christian converts. In the Episcopal Church in England 100 ministers are Jews by birth.

BRITISH SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL AMONG THE JEWS. The income of the society is about £8,000 a year. They have twenty-five missionaries in France, Germany, Italy, North Africa, the Danubian Principalities, London, Manchester, Birmingham and Bristol. The results of missions to the Jews have been that there are now between 20,000 and 30,000 in the Protestant Christian faith in England and on the Continent. About 400 of these are ministers and missionaries of various denominations, 100 being missionaries to their own brethren according to the flesh.

THE WALDENSIANS.—The first General Assembly of the Waldensian Church was recently convened at Florence, and the proceedings are reported to have been of great interest. More than sixty ministers, evangelists and deputies from the Waldensian churches were present, while many persons of note connected with the evangelical churches of Italy participated in the exercises. Spirited addresses were delivered, and a new impulse given to the cause of missionary labor and Christian union. This meeting of the Assembly—the first ever held—has a historical significance, and cannot fail to exert a happy influence.

CHANGE OF TIME.

THE GIFT OF POWER.

Ordinarily God works through human instruments in bringing about the salvation of souls. It is the privilege of believing men and women to convert the sinner from the error of his ways, and to turn many to righteousness. "He that winneth souls is wise," "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever." This work is by eminence the Christian's highest honor and glory, and surpassing in importance all the undertakings and achievements of the world. It should be his constant study and effort to save some from death, and the evidence of having led any to Christ should be his supreme joy and satisfaction.

It is conceded that the agency of the Holy Spirit is essential to the work, and that his operations must be direct in reproving, awakening and converting the soul. The point we are apt to overlook, however, is the need of the Spirit to qualify the instrument. Wisdom, tact, learning, eloquence, sympathy and devotion are recognized, and also the general features of religious experience; but the special aid of the Spirit is sought more with reference to his operations upon the sinner than his sanctifying influence in those who seek to compass his salvation. The Holy Ghost is thought of, prayed for as acting outside of, rather than in and through the believer. Both conceptions are important, but the latter, perhaps, should lie nearest to us in laboring for the conversion of the ungodly. As instruments Christians must themselves be filled with the Spirit, and receive the special gift of power. The conversion of the thousands on the day of Pentecost was connected with the gift of the Spirit to the disciples and apostles. Till they were "endued with power from on high" the first preachers were commanded to tarry at Jerusalem. Until this came it was useless for them to go forth. It was a personal qualification essential to the success of their ministry. Besides the general operations of the Holy Spirit, moving abroad and acting upon the world, it was needful that they should be specially anointed with the unction of the Holy One.

To preach the gospel "with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven," the preacher himself must be permeated and fused with the baptism of fire. All other gifts and qualifications may be taken up and wielded for good by the Spirit, but without his presence they will fail of saving effect. Intellect, taste, and a certain class of emotions may be gratified and awakened by art and culture, but contrition, faith and genuine conversion will not be produced. To save souls the Christian must not only look to the Holy Spirit acting upon those whom he would bring to repentance, but he must see to it that he is himself a temple of the Holy Ghost. It is comparatively useless to pray for the Spirit to convince and awaken sinners while our own hearts are but partially imbued with his presence. To draw others to the cross we must ourselves live at its foot and be crucified with Christ.

While our thoughts are ranging abroad, and the condition of an unconverted world presses heavily upon our hearts, it is right that we should pray for the baptism of the nations, and that the language of the prophet should rise to our lips: "Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live." At the same time there is a want nearer home. The lips of the prophet himself must be touched with a live coal "from off the altar" before he can effectually prophesy to the dry bones. It is this gift of power, this special qualification of the Holy Spirit which every Christian must have in order to be instrumental in saving others. Barren pastorates, fruitless professors, parents with ungodly children, religious lives with no seals of souls converted, often find their explanation in the single fact that this gift of power has never been realized. We have thought of the Spirit as operating upon the unconverted, as abroad to reprove the world, while we have reflected but little upon the surpassing and vital necessity of his acting in and through the believing instrument.

Wonderful results would be at once manifested if Christians could be brought to seek and experience this special work of the Holy Spirit. Walking closely with God, they would be able to take hold on his strength, they would have a wisdom which none could gainsay, and the word of the Lord would grow and prevail mightily. Their prayers, songs and exhortations would have a melting and irresistible influence, and their very presence would radiate the love glowing within them. Our appeal is to the individual Christian. The world must be saved through you, and only through you as "endued with power from on high." It is useless to think of the salvation of others until you are saved yourself, and until divinely qualified to pull them out of fire. Never mind the church, with its multitudinous aggregates, but take your own heart and lay it upon the altar. Ask God to give you this wisdom, which shall enable you to save a soul from death.

SCRAMBLE FOR OFFICE.

For some reasons not apparent to outsiders, Dr. Crary, for the past eight years editor of the Central Christian Advocate of St. Louis, declined being a candidate for re-election, and the Northern General Conference elected Dr. Fry. Dr. Crary, in one communication, speaks of the election of General Conference officers as "the slaughter of the innocents," and in a final article the following paragraph occurs:

We have always contended that the highest place in the church is in the pulpit, and the scramble for petty offices in the church is a most unseemly and unministerial work. Men have been at Brooklyn for a month, neglecting their pastoral work to electioneer themselves into some position which, compared to a good station, would be regarded by any true preacher as contemptible. We never have looked for such places, and never will.

The Methodist, referring to the same subject, remarks:

The elections to office are a great, not to say intolerable, burden to the General Conference, and give it as much the complexion of a political convention as of a legislative assembly. According to our count, nearly one hundred and fifty ministerial members of the Conference were voted for as candidates for salaried or unsalaried offices. The amount of canvassing and caucusing was prodigious, and prevented in many instances full attention to the legislative business of the body. Where so many personal interests are involved, it is difficult for members to approach the consideration of general questions without a bias. It is even now an inquiry of moment whether it were not wise for the Conference to remit the election of many officers to the boards of which it has become the creator. It was obvious that, a few important officers excepted, most of the elections were, for the majority of the delegates, the merest guess-work. Good men have doubtless been chosen; but the plan is not a wise one for bringing the very best men to the front.

It appears from this and other testimony that there was heavy competition, and much persistent and shrewd electioneering. In these respects it would seem that the General Conference at Brooklyn was but little above the level of an ordinary political convention. Their connection with political matters and their intimate affiliation with politicians have largely tended to this result. It is also one of the evils of a vast, rich and overgrown connection. Where there is such an extensive patronage to be dispensed, and so many well-paid offices to be filled, these best gifts are apt to be earnestly coveted. The temptation is strong, and human nature will crop out, in spite of ministerial vows, and the general purpose to lead a saintly and unworldly life. Wealth and patronage are as dangerous to the church as to the State, and lead to analogous evils. A well-paid and successful pastorate is certainly more desirable than any other position, but the average rank and file of effective preachers do not lie upon beds of down. Poor pay, hard work and many sacrifices make these positions of prominence, with their assured salaries, to them most desirable to look upon. We have, however, no sympathy to waste upon a man who has failed of an editorship. Whether by compulsory resignation, or by being left out or turned out, he is a lucky dog any way, and to be congratulated on his deliverance from the most exacting drudgery and the most galling bondage.

REV. W. H. MILBURN is spending a few weeks in New Orleans. His sight is entirely lost, but he is in robust health, and preaches without weariness to himself or his hearers. Last Sunday he preached in the morning at the church on Louisiana avenue, and at night he filled the pulpit of the Felicity Street church. Next Sabbath he preaches at Felicity Street in the morning, and at the Carondelet St. church at night.

SEE ADVERTISEMENT of Emory and Henry College. This institution is one of the best, in a flourishing condition, and offers great inducements on the score of healthful location, excellent religious influences, and a high standard of scholarship. We should be glad to intrust the education of our own boys to the care of Dr. Wiley. The fall session begins on the fifteenth of August next.

THE Huntsville Female College begins its next session on September 4, 1872. This institution, we observe, is now under the presidency of Rev. George W. F. Price, late president of the Tuskegee Female College. The institution is well located, well appointed in every respect, and the prince of preachers and teachers is at its head.

THE catalogue of Randolph Macon College, for the collegiate year 1871–72, represents this old and excellent institution as enjoying a high degree of prosperity. The commencement exercises begin on Tuesday, the twenty-fifth instant, and close on Thursday, the twenty-seventh. The next session opens on the last Thursday of September.

BOOK AGENTS.—The following book agents were elected by the Northern General Conference:

Reuben Nelson, D. D., of the Wyoming Conference, principal of the Seminary at Kingston, Pennsylvania, and James H. Phillips, Esq., of Cincinnati, for many years connected with the Book Concern at Cincinnati, were elected agents of the Book Concern at New York.

Rev. Drs. Hitchcock and Walden, the former of the Rock River Conference and the latter of the Cincinnati Conference, were re-elected agents of the Western Book Concern.

A Visit to the Mammoth Cave, Kentucky.

How wonderful the works of God we see
Around us spread, in such variety!
The trees, the plants, the flowers of household fame,
Differ in size and shape, yet look the same.
Our hills and valleys treasures still unfold,
To thinking minds, more precious far than gold;
Displaying wisdom of creative power,
In rocky caves, as well as tiny flower,
Where skillful hands invisible are seen,
With finished touch of beauty's fadeless beam,
Which art can never equal or create,
Gifted with genius in its highest state.

MR. EDITOR: Although this vast cavern has often been described, and the world made acquainted with its magnitude and grandeur, and its various resources opened to the naturalist for scientific knowledge in their different branches of chemistry, geology and zoology, where a book is found laid open to read with never-failing interest; yet every mind has a vision of its own, and variety is as much of an attribute in the creation of the intellectual as in the physical world, and most wisely designed for our happiness and improvement in this present state of existence, producing that harmony, even in contrast, like the notes of a well-tuned instrument, whose music charms the ear, or the blending of the beautiful bow in the softest shades, though distinct in its primeval colors, but most delightful to contemplate in the works of God.

This cave can well be classed with two of the greatest wonders of the world—Niagara and the volcano of Mount Vesuvius.

To stand upon the verge of the great cataract and listen to the solemn music of its voice, as its mighty volume of waters rush down its precipice in the fathomless gulf below, we have been profoundly awe-struck with the power and majesty of God, as if speaking to us from eternity in its ceaseless roar of undying eloquence, in the sound of its language, Forever! forever! forever! while we poor mortals were shrinking into nothingness in his sight, soon to pass away to be lost in the infinite.

We have also stood upon Mount Vesuvius at night, and beheld the display of sublime grandeur in one of its magnificent eruptions, with which nothing on this earth could compare, and to our imagination it presented a faint illustration of that period when an angel should descend from heaven to pronounce our doom, and say that time should be no longer; when the whole planetary system should be seen rushing from their orbits in the dissolution of the world.

"In his hand also are the deep places of the earth;" and in this dark cavern what wonders are revealed! At first, thought turns within, and the invisible seizes upon the soul.

"Darkness and silence, solemn sister-twins."

But artificial light soon reveals in its dark recesses such creations of natural beauty that we are lost in wonder and astonishment. Its long, arched walls, lofty columns sustaining roofs of fret-work, mosaics wrought by the finger of God, Gothic halls, grottoes ornamented by stalactites of varied shapes, even to an armed chair; Pulpit Rock, a room called a Methodist chapel, where, fifty years ago, a sermon was preached, and its rude seats still remain as they were used then; a Giant's Coffin, which would compare with those of the Kings of Basham; the labyrinth among rocks—steps to descend and ascend in the dark winding ways; lofty domes of most ingenious structure. One called Gorin's surpassed all others we saw, being two hundred feet in height and sixty in breadth. A natural window on one side gave us a view within, by the aid of a lamp below. Its smoothly-polished walls looked as if hung with a rich drapery or curtain, suspended from above, with a valance some feet in depth, bordered by a tracery-work resembling fringe; two rows, so exact and regular that the imitation was perfect, as if designed for a graceful ornament. We looked up with wonder and admiration, and down its depths below with a shudder. There were other domes of less magnitude, but equally wonderful in their formation. We drank from fresh springs of water gurgling up from its quaint pavements as we passed along from one chamber to another, with new developments to surprise and interest the stranger in this subterranean cavern. The acute angle leading to a [illegible] avenue of some length presented upon its ceiling a curious picture in black gypsum on white ground, called the Giant's Wife and Child, in a sitting posture, opposite each other. Their attitudes, shape and costume resembled those seen on the monuments of Egypt. The face in profile-head, with a turban, was perfectly Oriental in appearance; other figures, also, of wonderful designs. We entered the Star Chamber, which appears to be the central place of exhibition. Here the guide takes advantage of the overhanging cliff, in its singular structure, to surprise his company with a panorama, of his own ingenuity, of varied scenes of the day. After we were seated he withdrew all lights and left us in darkness, except a twinkling of the stars above; at length he had the dawn and sun-rising at a distance between some rocks, until the day appeared, and we finished what is called the short route, which, for the want of time, did not extend to the Echo river. A week could be spent in admiring this marvelous work of nature. Our guide told us a party of fifty from Georgia had preceded us, and had been sent out to explore the cave for the express purpose of observation, and that there were a vast number of miles yet to be seen, still unexplored. "For the works of the Lord are great, sought out of all them that have pleasure therein;" and "He has made his wonderful works to be remembered." S. B. T.

ACQUITTAL OF DR. HUSTON.

It is with unspeakable pleasure we make the announcement that, after a full and most searching investigation of the charges against the Rev. Dr. L. D. Huston, the committee have rendered a unanimous verdict of acquittal. No case was ever more thoroughly and exhaustively investigated than the one which was concluded on Saturday morning last. The rumors and statements were set forth in regular order, and their examination occupied two weeks. The investigation was conducted by the Rev. Samuel Rodgers, presiding elder of East Baltimore district. After taking ample time for preparation, the accused was cited to appear and answer. Mr. Rodgers, it is proper to remark, is a man of unimpeachable integrity and purity of character. He is inflexibly just, and has an intelligent appreciation of the responsibilities of his position. To the hands of such a man was committed the entire conduct of the trial—all questions as to the competency of witnesses or admissibility of evidence were by him decided, and the form of the charges and the mode of examination were exclusively regulated by him, the members of the committee only performing, according to the discipline of the church, the duties of jurors. All this may be said with equal propriety of the Rev. James S. Gardiner, counsel for the prosecution. The counsel for the defense was the Rev. Dr. Roszell, whose name forms an important part of the history of American Methodism, and who is as loyal to his church as was his illustrious ancestor.

Unfortunately Dr. Roszell was taken sick at the very commencement of the proceedings, and it became necessary to engage the services of the Rev. F. H. Richey as his assistant. Mr. Richey was not even personally known to Dr. Huston. He had not been present at the late session of the Conference at Warrenton, and was therefore entirely free from bias on the subject. Bro. Richey is a quiet and unobtrusive man, but displayed a thorough acquaintance with the rules of evidence and the laws of the church. He has been one of the most faithful and devoted members of the Baltimore Conference for the last thirty years.

The committee consisted of five of our ablest and best ministers. Rev. Dr. Nelsen Head, a man of clear, sound, incisive intellect and large heart, was chairman. His discriminating mind, with the aid of his excellent colleagues, grasped every question, and each and every particle of evidence was sifted to the bottom.

The Rev. L. H. Crenshaw is perhaps one of the sturdiest men, heart and head, we have in the connection. The Rev. P. H. Whisner, a devoted and scholarly man, is singularly free from the usual liabilities to prejudice. The Rev. J. A. Spangler is a man of clear judgment and a fair and discriminating mind, and although living in the immediate neighborhood of the principal witness, yet showed himself entirely free from all prejudice either for or against the accused. The Rev. Thomas E. Carson is a man of sound understanding and vigorous intellect, and his name in Baltimore, where he is well known, is a sufficient guarantee that any decision in which he would unite would be one which would be fully justified by the evidence.

At ten o'clock on the morning of the eighth the presiding elder called and made the official announcement of the result to Dr. Huston, in the presence of Mrs. Huston and the Rev. John Poisal. The committee unanimously declare that the charge of immorality is not sustained, because none of the specifications had been sustained.

RANDOLPH MACON COLLEGE.

MR. EDITOR: I send you the catalogue of Randolph Macon College for the collegiate year 1871–72, which will give you many gratifying evidences of the increasing prosperity of this institution. The one hundred and sixty-seven matriculates of this session is an increase of twenty-five over any previous session since the war, and of these thirty-two are preparing for the ministry. Twenty-seven are sons of itinerant ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, all of whom we educate free of tuition fees. Thus this college dispenses a noble charity of not less than $4,150, and is doing a great work for the church, especially for the Virginia and Baltimore Conferences.

This session has been one of the most pleasant and harmonious in the history of the institution. It has been specially blessed in the very decided religious influence which has pervaded the minds of the students, of whom fifteen have been converted and added to the church. I rejoice to record the name of the oldest son of our accomplished president, Dr. Duncan, among this number.

Our commencement exercises will take place on Thursday, the twenty-seventh of June. The occasion will be one of unusual interest. The new and elegant literary halls will be dedicated, and addresses will be delivered by Hon. A. M. Keiley, mayor of Richmond, and J. H. Guy, Esq., an alumnus. The Board of Trustees will meet on the twenty-fifth of June; and as the fiscal condition of the college has greatly improved, they are expected to make such additions and repairs to the college buildings as may be demanded by the rapidly increasing patronage of the institution.

I am, very truly,

A. G. BROWN,
Financial Sec'y R. M. College.

ASHLAND, VA., May 30, 1872.

REV. E. E. HOSS.—We learn from good authority that Rev. E. E. Hoss has been transferred from Knoxville station to the Pacific Conference, likely to be stationed in San Francisco. We do not like the idea of losing such men as Bro. Hoss from our ranks. We congratulate the Pacific brethren upon this accession to their numbers. Bro. Hoss is a young man of promise. His scientific and literary attainments are superior for one of his age, and he is an earnest, unctional, eloquent preacher. He goes with our best wishes for his success in the far West. We have not learned what provision is to be made for Knoxville till Conference.—Holston Methodist.

DEATH OF JUDGE HOLT.—The community of Macon has been deprived of one of its most venerable and esteemed citizens, and the Methodist Church of a devoted and consistent member, by the death of Judge Asa Holt, which occurred in Macon on the twenty-sixth of May. He had attained the ripe old age of four-score and three years, with an unblemished reputation for business integrity and Christian faithfulness. His end was peaceful. In accordance with a pledge given many years ago, Rev. J. E. Evans, D. D., of Savannah, having survived his old friend, conducted the funeral services in the presence of a very large congregation.—Southern Christian Advocate.

Obituaries.

DIED, of pneumonia, in Opelousas, April 4, 1872, JAMES G. HAYES, infant daughter of James G. Hayes, deceased, and Maggie M. Hayes, after an illness of twelve days, aged one year and thirteen days.

DIED, near Fayette, Mississippi, June 1, 1872, CARROLL SHIELDS, infant son of Ella S. and the late C. C. Carpenter, aged one year, one month and fifteen days.

Only a little child!—a life whose beginning and end were so near together that the world will not know its existence. Yet in that short time the child had found the way to loving hearts that now vainly yearn for the sound of his voice and for his gentle caressings. L.

DIED, on the second of June 1872, at the residence of his uncle, George Brewer, of this city, CHARLES W. L. BREWER, aged twenty-five years, three months and twenty-five days.

The subject of this notice lost his parents when but a small child, and was adopted by his uncle and aunt, George and Mary Brewer, who performed for him the part of kind and affectionate parents. Having inherited a disease from his mother, which rendered him ever delicate, and at last carried him prematurely to the grave, he was fortunate in falling under the tutelage and training of such tender, regardful and pious persons. He was also favored in enjoying the benefits of the Morean Street Sabbath school while growing up. Such influences could not fail to make a powerful impression upon his character and conduct in life. Not only was he a model of morality, temperance and energetic industry, but his afflictions had developed in him a patience, meekness, gentleness and tenderness of disposition which we seldom meet with in Christians of far more demonstrativeness of character. These, too, though he had not been a formal communicant of the church nor an open professor of religion, led him at the last to give such expressions to his confidence and trust in the Savior as to assure pious ones left behind, if faithful, of a happier association in heaven.

PASTOR.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., June 8, 1872.

DIED, in the parsonage at Ocean Springs, on Saturday, May 18, MRS. ELIZABETH TAYLOR, the adopted daughter of Rev. P. H. Napier, and consort of Rev. E. J. Taylor, after a painful illness of three weeks, which she bore with patient Christian resignation. She was the subject of sore affliction for nearly four months previous to the attack which ended her earthly sufferings. She was born in Clarke county, Mississippi, and was about twenty-six years and three months old. She joined the Methodist Protestant Church when about ten years old, and in 1852 was taken by Rev. P. H. Napier and his wife, and they, having no children, adopted her as their daughter and educated her. In the autumn of 1869 she was married to the Rev. E. J. Taylor. Her adopted father says of her: "She proved to be a great comfort to myself and wife; was a most affectionate and dutiful daughter, and a firm, earnest, consistent Christian; had many warm friends—no enemies. She was retiring in her disposition, loved home, good books, the services of God's house, and faithfully performed the duties of daughter, sister, wife, mother and friend."

She suffered much, but spoke often of her confidence of future happiness. She was impressed from the beginning of her attack that she would never recover, and expressed her confidence in having made her peace with God. When she came to the last moment, standing just on the shore, her eyes fixed on her future inheritance, with an inexpressible smile playing upon her lips and features for the space of five or ten minutes, something broke the spell, and she exclaimed: "Why, Uncle Philip, I thought I was in heaven!" He asked her if it was a beautiful place. She said it was; and after a few moments, without a struggle, entered her glorious rest.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The Quarterly Conference of Ocean Springs circuit, May 18, 1872, appointed a committee to draft a preamble and resolutions in memoriam of Sister Elizabeth, wife of our pastor, Rev. E. J. Taylor:

Whereas, It has pleased God, in his wisdom, to remove from earth our beloved sister, and wife of our pastor, Rev. E. J. Taylor, by death, on the eighteenth of May; therefore,

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with our brother and pastor in his irreparable loss and loneliness.

Resolved, That in the life and death of Sister Taylor we have encouragement to live devotedly for God.

OCEAN SPRINGS, May 24, 1872.

DR. MILES HAMPTON HARPER, son of the late Rev. Miles Harper, was born in Marion county, Mississippi, May 12, 1826. His mother's maiden name was Samantha Forde. He graduated in medicine at the University of Louisiana in 1850; was married to Miss Littia Ann Lum, of Natchez, Mississippi, August 4, 1851, by Rev. Dr. Watkins; and died of pneumonia, on Sunday, March 10, 1872.

Dr. Harper lived for some twelve years on Sicily Island, in the parish of Catahoula, and practiced his profession very extensively and successfully. Some two years since he returned to Monticello, the old homestead in Texas parish, and there we buried him, though he died away from home.

He was a man of bright and happy spirit. Active, energetic and industrious, he loved his profession, and rejoiced to relieve human suffering. As a man and a physician he was dear to us all.

Dr. Harper became a member of the Methodist Church in early life, and continued within its pale ever afterward, though for some years past he was in a state of religious declension, so that neither in enjoyment nor zeal was he as in former days. He was, however, several months before his death, greatly revived and restored. He took up family prayer, was zealous for the church, and found much pleasure in religious conversation.

From his knowledge of his constitution and the violence of his attack, he was soon convinced that it must prove fatal. At this he was not terrified, but, on the contrary, his faith arose to a more sublime majesty, and his peace was as a river. There was something exceedingly graad in the intelligent and happy composure with which he contemplated the near approach of death. There was one subject, however, which gave him pain. He said to me: "For twenty years I have worked hard, and have but little to show for it. And during the whole of that time I have felt it my duty to preach the gospel; and oh! that I had complied with that impression and performed that duty." But such was his faith in the full grace and boundless mercy of God, and the efficacy of atoning blood, that he was sustained to the last and at the last. B. F. ALEXANDER.

ORGANS.—We have never asked, sought or offered any consideration whatever to any purchaser for a recommendation of the organs manufactured by George Woods & Co. We have heard of numbers who were delighted with the organs, and if any purchaser has been disappointed in his expectations we have never had the slightest hint of it. A few persons have voluntarily expressed their gratification in letters, from which we take the liberty of copying.

Rev. H. Walter Featherston, Rolling Fork, Mississippi, says: "The instrument is perfectly satisfactory; indeed it is somewhat better than I expected it would be."

Alfred Freeman, Esq., Dallas, Texas, says: "I am happy to state that I have found the instrument all that you and the makers claim for it. * * * It is a decided favorite with all who examine it."

Without quoting from others, or what has been repeatedly expressed verbally, we propose, if desired, to give to those who may wish to purchase an organ a complete list of the names and addresses of all the purchasers of the Woods organ, so that if they are not satisfied they can write to any or all of them for their testimony. SUGAR MILLS.—In another column will be found the advertisement of the cane mills manufactured by the Southern Manufacturing Company, Nashville, Tennessee. All the information we have of this company is favorable, and we may say the same of their mills, which, in the opinion of good judges, are all that they claim for them.

CRESCENT MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.—In another column will be found the twenty-third annual statement of the above-named company. Its officers and directors are gentlemen of high standing for integrity and business capacity. There is no company the affairs of which, in our opinion, have been more faithfully administered than the Crescent, and none more worthy of confidence.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE, SUMMERFIELD, ALABAMA.—The special notice of the commencement of Centenary Institute, in this issue, will be interesting to those who are fortunate enough to be able to attend the exercises. Summerfield is renowned for the hospitality of its citizens, and our own experience is that when once you visit the place you will want to go again. Those enterprising educators, Profs. Massey and McVoy, are fortunate in the location of their excellent institution.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.—The arrangement of exercises for the commencement of this noble institution may be seen in the card of the president, Rev. A. S. Andrews, D. D., in this issue. The University is one of those institutions which the friends of Southern education, without respect to State or denomination, should be proud to honor and encourage. We trust that the interest manifested in the approaching commencement may more than fulfill the most sanguine expectations of its professors and friends. May their most ardent hopes end in delightful realities.

Verily do the words of the inspired poet gleam with the light of prophecy; for if there is anything that is swift to operate beneficially on the human system, impaired by physical ailments, it is Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Those whose lives "drag their slow length along," harassed by the petty but fretful annoyances of Indigestion, dyspepsia, debility, febrile excitement, nervous irritability, exhaustion or the general suffering that results from hepatic causes, deserve the fate to which they are consigned, when, like the physician to whom the voice of sacred wisdom cried "heal thyself," they turn away from the means placed within their grasp. Price's Bitters will do the work; a vigorous stimulant, an agreeable elixir, a strengthening tonic, and a grateful adjuvant, the very universality of whose use is confirmative of their efficacy, they stand to-day stamped with the signet seal of medical approval, and radiant with the award of a high popular appreciation.

The Child's Corner.

A BLESSING.

A little child hath blessed me;
I wonder what it means!
It seems a brighter blessing
Than a bishop's or a queen's.
In her snowy nightgown dressed,
Standing up to be caress'd,
Softly lisping in my ear
Pretty words: "God bless you, dear."

They fill my heart with wonder;
Of God what can she know?
She cannot tell the meaning
Of the words that please me so.
Like the church's silver bell,
Winning souls to heaven from hell,
Knowing not what glory lives
In the message that it gives.

It is so sweet to hear her—
Her rosy mouth to see
Form the pretty syllables
That give such joy to me.
Like a little mocking-bird,
Deftly she repeats each word;
But they sink into my breast,
And I know that I am blest.

Good Words.

THE TENDER SHEPHERD.

BY L. A. WHITTIER.

When foolish lambs forsake the fold,
Through thorny ways to wander wide,
In noontide's heat and darkness cold
To stray upon the mountain side—
Does not the faithful shepherd then
With tireless steps those lambs pursue,
O'er rocky height—through darksome glen—
To bring them to the fold anew?

Great Shepherd! let thy watchful eye
With vigilance thy flock survey,
And by thy presence, ever nigh,
Restrain those lambs that else would stray.
But if, despite thy warning voice,
One willful lamb from thee should roam,
Ah, overrule his fatal choice!
Pursue, reclaim, and bring him home!

What Dapple Had to Say.

I may say without vanity that I am a very handsome horse. I am gray, streaked and spotted like a mackerel sky. Jim can make my coat shine like a looking-glass when he chooses to take the trouble; but Jim is a lazy, sulky old fellow, and it is not often that he does me justice. When he is curry-combing me he "sisses" at me as spitefully as a goose, and he stops every two minutes to grumble out: "Blow grays!" says I; they take twice as much groomin' as other 'osses." But if other horses only get half as much grooming as Jim generally gives me, I pity them. It does not matter so much in my case, because I'm so good-looking; but all horses have not my natural advantages. I do think that Jim is the only person belonging to the place who isn't proud of me, and even Jim is proud of me sometimes. Instead of giving a wrench or two at my mane and tail, as if he wanted to pull them out by the roots, he'll brush and comb them till they look as silky as my mistress' hair, and he'll make my hoofs shine like master's boots, and rub me down and polish me up, as I was saying, until you could almost see your face in my coat.

It is twice as easy for Jim to get me to "kim over" when he treats me with proper respect. He has no need then to give me rude slaps behind, and I don't feel inclined then to turn round my head and pretend to mistake his drab breeches for a huudle of hay. At other times, especially when he is stooping conveniently, I am often sorely tempted to do so.

Sometimes master rides me, and sometimes he drives me in the gig, and sometimes my mistress drives me in the four-wheeler. It's when my mistress is going to drive me, I've noticed, that Jim takes most pains with me. Master often has to find fault because Jim has brought me round so rough and dusty, but mistress never has. I'm quite a swell horse then. I've silver-plated patent-leather harness, and my mistress has white ends to her reins to keep her gloves clean, and she's very pretty, and so are the children, and they're all dressed very smart, so that it is quite a swell turn-out altogether.

I should really enjoy being driven by my mistress, for the chaise runs very light, and she and the little ones don't make it much heavier, if she wasn't quite so fond of sawing my mouth and flicking me with the whip. She doesn't hurt me—she wouldn't, I know, for the world—but such behavior detracts from my dignity. When a horse is stepping out with his head up he doesn't like to have it pulled right and left for no earthly reason except to make a lady believe that she's taking care of the horse, instead of the horse taking care of her. If I were to mind mistress' jerks, we should often be in the ditch, and running foul of every cart we passed and every turnpike gate we went through. And if I were to mind her whips, and begin to canter or gallop when I'm trotting along a good showy ten miles an hour, a nice screaming I should hear behind the splash-board! But I know she means no harm, and I'm proud of her and the children, and remember that master has trusted them to my honor, and so I bring them back all safe and sound. Still, when a horse has done it all, it isn't quite pleasant for him to hear his mistress bragging about her clever driving when she gets home. Master understands it though, so I don't mind so much. As for Jim, he's a sneak, and makes mistress believe that she's a wonderful whip to be able to drive a vicious horse like me. "He is vicious, ma'am," Jim says, "but he's too artful to show it with you and the master." Of course that is because I sent Mr. Jim over my head once, when he put the spurs into me; and I'll do it again if he gives me the chance, but I'm afraid he never will.

However, if Jim is grumpy, I've three friends in the stable who properly appreciate me. They would be always with me if they could, and one of them, Snap, the terrier, almost always is. Master used to have a "plum-pudding" dog, but I never cared much for him. He was a heavy dog, with no fun in him. All he could do was to run behind the chaise, and yet, just because he was spotted all over, he was as proud as a peacock. He seemed to think that I ought to thank him for being allowed to look at him—the sleepy, sulky cur! I haven't the least doubt that he thought his spots handsomer than mine! What conceited animals there are in the world!

But Snap is a very different kind of dog. He's full of fun—jumps up at my nose, and barks at my legs, when we're out together—but still he is never wanting in real respect. He knows that I belong to a superior class, and behaves accordingly. You might think that he was taking liberties with me sometimes, if you saw his funny ways. He will jump up and worry my tail, but, bless you, Snap and I understand each other. I know that he could never dream of being rude, and he knows that I shan't be offended by his pranks; he only plays them to amuse me.

To go through life smoothly, there is nothing like being conscious of your superiority to the animals you come in contact with. If you're doubtful about it, of course they'll take advantage, and even, perhaps, when they don't mean anything rude, you'll be sure to fancy that they do. I'm afraid that I wasn't as firm as I ought to have been with the plum-pudding dog, or he certainly would never have given himself such ridiculous airs.

Snap, now, is a very different kind of dog. He'll do anything he can to oblige me, without making any merit of it; you'd fancy he was doing it just to please himself. We've got rats in the stable, and he knows I don't like them. It isn't pleasant to feel them routing in the straw, and running over your back, when you're lying down of a night, or trying to run up your legs when you're taking a nap standing; and then they eat my corn, and make what they don't eat smell nasty. Well, Snap knows I hate rats, and he'll watch by the holes for an hour or more, and when a rat slips out, Snap's down upon him like a shot, and breaks his neck almost before he has time to squeak; and then Snap lugs him about, shaking him for his impudence in bothering me, and looks as delighted as if he had done it only for his own amusement. He's a very worthy young dog, is Snap; the only fault I have to find with him is that he is almost too fond of me. He gets so jealous if I take the least notice of my other two humble friends in the stable.

One of them Jim calls Curate. He's a black cat with a white breast, and awfully thin. He eats flies and black beetles, and he'll die of consumption if he doesn't take care. I should be very sorry, for, though he isn't much company, he is so very respectful. When he comes to the stable door he always gives a mew to ask if he may come in. If Snap bears him, he rushes at him, and wants to worry him like a rat; but Curate spits and scratches, and as soon as he's got the chance, up he climbs to the top of the rack, and makes a bridge of his back, and swells out his tail, and growls at Snap like a small thunder cloud.

But Snap hates Tilburina almost worse than he hates Curate. Tilly is a tabby pussy of the softer sex; she's as fat as butter. Tilly is almost too familiar for my taste, but then she is so very fond of me that I can scarcely feel offended. Her feelings get the better of her, and so I don't blame her, but her gender. Curate would as soon think of jumping down Snap's throat as of jumping on my back; but that is Tilly's favorite place. She leaps into the manger, and scrambles in to the rack and then down she comes on my haunches, and there she lies purring like a tea-kettle, if Saap doesn't happen to be in the way; but if he's there she makes faces at him, and puts out her tongue at him, and then she washes herself with her tongue, as if she'd forgotten that there was such a being as Snap in existence; and poor Snap goes almost wild. Up he jumps, tumbling heels over head, and barking as if he'd bark his heart out, but Tilly takes no notice. She's safe, she knows, and so she goes on licking herself in a quiet way that must be provoking to Snap.

I wish my friends could agree better, but it's natural they should all want to be first favorites with me. I'm a handsome, high-bred horse, I know, with Godolphin Arab blood in me, though Jim does laugh at my long head and my podgy barrel, and says he's as much of an Arab as I am—and so I must take the consequences.—The Children's Hour.

The First Strawberries.

A little girl once had a bed of strawberries. Very anxious was she that they should ripen, and be fit to eat. The time came. "Now for a feast," said her brother to her one morning, as he picked some beautiful ones for her to eat.

"I cannot eat these," said she, "for they are the first ripe fruit."

"Well," said her brother, "all the more reason for our making a feast, for they are the greater treat."

"Yes; but they are the first ripe fruit."

"Well, what of that?"

"Dear father told us that he used to give God the first out of all the money he made, and that then he always felt happier in spending the rest; and I wish to give God the first of my strawberries too."

"Ah! but," said her brother, "how can you give strawberries to God? And even if you could, he would not care for them."

"Oh! I have found out a way," said she. "Jesus said, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me,' and I mean to go with them to Mrs. Perkins' dying child, who never sees a strawberry, they are so poor."

Away went the children to give them to the dying child, and when they saw her put out her thin arms and take the ripe, round fruit in her little shriveled fingers, and when they saw her eyes glisten, and her little faded lips smile, they felt as if they had a far richer treat than if they had kept the ripe fruit for themselves; and something within them told them that God had accepted their little offering.—Sunday at Home.

CHARGE ON OBSTINACY.—A negro preacher once observed to his hearers, at the close of his sermon, as follows:

"My obstinacious brethren, I find it no more use to preach to you dan it is for a grasshopper to wear knee-buckles."

The Farm and Garden.

Hints for the Month.

Cotton will require constant and steady work during this month to keep down the grass and weeds.

Corn, in many localities, may be carefully "laid by," and a later crop planted, if the season should be favorable.

Pumpkins, if not planted last month, should now be put in without delay.

Oats, millet and other small grain must now be cut and carefully stacked for fall and winter use.

Egyptian millet, sorghum and common corn may be sown in deeply-plowed and highly-manured land—drills three feet apart—seed sown thickly, in order that the stalks may be small, for the greater facility in curing. The Egyptian millet is far from being sufficiently known and appreciated. The seed is difficult to save and not easily obtained, but we have not been without it for the last twenty years. It is unrivaled as a "soiling" crop, for the production of green forage, in this climate, and we shall devote a short article specially to it hereafter.

Sweet potato draws should be planted largely, and at all suitable times, during the summer; also cut vines, to produce a full supply of seed for next year.

At leisure times plow and replow a large patch for turnips, putting the manure on freely, and turning it carefully under. Begin also to prepare scaffolds, and to make sacks and baskets for cotton-picking, and arrange to save and turn to account every pound of lint raised on the plantation.

In the garden a good deal of important work may be done, should the "seasons" or showers prove favorable. Plant, for a succession, melons, okra and corn. Set out tomato plants, but, if none are ready, cut back the earliest bearing plants, manure and stir the earth around them, and they will usually make a fresh growth and bear another crop. Sow more cabbage seed, for a full supply; also celery seed, under a bush arbor, or slight shelter. Plant out some good, strong Early York, Drumhead, and Green Glazed cabbages. Continue planting sweet potatoes, draws and cuttings. Keep the earth loose and mellow about all garden plants, cutting no roots; and if the weather is very dry, mulch everything, and water through the mulching, selecting the evening for the work.

In the orchard early apples and peaches will now begin to ripen. Gather for market none but the very best specimens; handle carefully; pack in small slatted boxes; mark plainly and legibly, and always send invoice (in advance, if possible) to your city merchant or agent.—Our Home Journal.

What Is the Best Method of Swarming Bees Artificially?

Mr. Root, of Ohio, says: Remove two frames, one of brood and one of honey, from a populous stock, with the adhering bees. Put into a new hive on a new stand. In ten days or a little more they will have a queen. As soon as she begins laying, fill up the hive with frames of brood from other hives. While raising queens, put brood frame next to the hive, and cover top and side of the frames with a cloth quilt made for this purpose, and use in the place of a bouey-board when the hive is filled with frames. Weather must be warm and honey yield good.

Mrs. E. S. Tupper, of Iowa, objects to Mr. Root's plan. It was too slow for Iowa. She takes two frames of brood and the queen away from an old hive. Remove the old hive from its stand, and place the new one in its stead, in which place the two frames and the queen. The returning bees will furnish a force for the new stock By this process the natural swarming was prevented, and at the same time the old stock was not seriously depleted, and the division could be repeated every ten days.

Mr. Moon has tried many ways and prefers this: Take one frame of brood from as many hives as are necessary to fill a new hive, shaking off a part of the bees. Those remaining will mostly be growing bees, suitable for the raising of a queen. Other persons give variations of these methods.

In regard to the handling of bees without danger from stings, Mr. Moon, of Michigan, uses cotton rags to smoke his bees with, before opening the hive. He once transferred the bees and combs of three hundred hives into new hives without getting stung. He handled them with impunity, fearing them no more than if they had been flies. First blow in the smoke of the cotton, and after they have loudly hummed their submission, open the hives and do the work, when not a bee will offer to sting, unless it gets pinched. Prof. Cook, of Michigan, H. A. King, of New York, and Mr. Miteholl, of Indiana, all claimed that pure Italian bees are much more docile than the common black bees.—Bee-Keeper's Journal.

OIL OF SUNFLOWER SEED is made in large quantities in Russia, and is exported from St. Petersburg at about eighteen or twenty cents a gallon, gold, by wholesale. The cultivation of this plant for oil in this country has been recommended time and again, but for some reason has never been extensively undertaken. Four years ago the returns showed that in Russia the annual product of sunflower seed was thirty-three million five hundred thousand pounds. A light, rich soil, not shaded by trees, is required. About five pounds of seed is needed to the acre, drilled in rows eighteen inches apart. The young plants are thinned to thirty inches apart. The average yield is stated at fifty bushels to the acre.

AN INDIANA FARMER, after trying to trap, poison and shoot the rats that overrun his premises, bought two goats and gave them the range of yards and stables. Within a week every rat emigrated and staid away until the goats were sold, nearly two years afterward, when they all came back. A second edition of goats were procured, and since then not a rat has been seen on the premises.

The Fruit Garden.

It is better to have the fruit garden separate from the kitchen garden, if one is able to do so, if for no other reason than that the trees and bushes are liable to be broken in cultivating among the garden crops.

Strawberries.—Prepare the ground for new plantations as soon as possible, and give the old beds a fresh supply of manure, and work it in well between the rows. Set in rows two feet apart, with eighteen inches between the plants.

Blackberries.—Set out in rows six feet apart, and allow from four to six feet between the plants, according to the variety. Cut the plants back to six inches before planting. The old plants should have their canes cut back to four or five feet.

Raspberries.—Do not uncover too soon. Plant as soon as the weather will permit, setting the plants four feet apart each way.

Grape-Vines may be pruned at any time in March, when the vines are not frozen, though it is always better to prune in the fall, when possible. There are so many different ways to train a grape-vine, that each one can select the style which pleases him best, or adopt several methods.

Cuttings of currants, gooseberries, etc., may be made now, and planted out in trenches prepared for them as soon as the weather permits.

Dwarf Trees only should be admitted to the fruit garden proper. This is a good time to prune.—American Agriculturist.

Flowers—Special Manure.

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman gives the following directions for making a liquid manure, of great value for application to flower beds, gardens, etc. He says: "In this connection I will mention that I have used, for several years, a liquid manure, which is very effective in pushing off the growth of vegetables, strawberries, roses, grass, etc. My first test was the pouring of a stream from a watering pot across a piece of poor grass opposite a post, which served as a mark. There was soon a distinct wave, as bold and as green as the line of a fairy ring. This season I show half a row of peas and half a bed of strawberries, very superior to the other half, to exhibit the application. It is chiefly, I suppose, sulphate of ammonia, and is made thus: To one gallon of stale urine, (at least one week old,) in a deep wooden vessel or crock, add two ounces of sulphuric acid. Next day put in a couple of ounces of chalk or lime, to take up any acid remaining free. Stir. Put a pint of this into a pail of water, and use twice a week on growing plants, and preferably when the ground is wet, as it diffuses then among the feeding points of the roots better.

THE CORK TREE IN MISSISSIPPI.—A correspondent in Wayne county, Mississippi, planted some Spanish cork-oak acorns received from the Department in the winter of 1859. They all came up, and the largest tree had, at the commencement of 1870, attained a height of about thirteen feet, the trunk being eleven inches in diameter, and the cork around the body more than an inch thick. His soil is poor, being sandy, with a clay subsoil, and, for this reason, unfavorable to the rapid growth of those trees.—The Field and Factory.

THE Turf, Field and Farm gives the following means of starting a balky horse: "Take a couple of turns of common wrapping twine, such as grocers use, around the fore leg, just below the knee, tight enough for the horse to feel, and tie in a bow knot. At the first check he will generally go dancing off, and after going a short distance you can get out, remove the string, to prevent injury to the tendon in your further drive."

CORALS AND CORAL ISLANDS.

Prof. Dana, of Yale College, in his new work on corals, says that the chief source of coral is the secretion of a living organism, occupying the lowest part of the scale of animal life, and which is known, in modern science, under the name of polyp. Coral is the stony frame which belongs to these animals, as a skeleton belongs to an individual of the higher orders of the animal kingdom.

"If we are astonished," he remarks, "that so great deeds should proceed from the little and low, it is because we fail to appreciate that little things, even the least of living or physical existences in nature, are, under God, expressions throughout of comprehensive laws—laws that govern alike the small and the great. It is not more surprising, nor a matter of more difficult comprehension, that a polyp should form structures of stone called coral, than that the quadruped should ferm its bones, or the mollusk its shell. The processes are similar, and so the result. The coral-made land is seldom more than ten or twelve feet above high tide. When first seen from the deck of a vessel, only a series of dark points appear just above the horizon. Soon after, the points enlarge into the plumed tops of cocoa-nut trees, and a line of green is traced along the surface of the water. As you approach still nearer, the lake and its belt of verdure are spread out before the eye, presenting a scene of rare interest. The surf, beating loud along the margin of the reef, affords a strange contrast to the white coral beach beyond, the dense foliage of the grove, and the embosomed lake with its tiny islets. The water of the lagoon, although but ten or twenty fathoms deep, is often as blue as the ocean. Where patches of sand or coral knolls rise near the surface, shades of green and yellow are intermingled, the green of a delicate apple-color, quite unlike the muddy tint of shallow waters. The belt of verdure is usually broken into islets separated by intervals of bare reef, so that, in fact, the larger coral islands are a string of islets along a line of reef."

GERMINATION OF SEEDS.—An eminent writer, in speaking of the action of the sun in the great work of germination, remarks:

"Upon the chemical influence of the sun's rays depends the germination of seeds as well as the growth of the plants. We bury the seed in the ground and shut it out from the influence of light, but we do not place it beyond the reach of the sun's actinic influence, for that penetrates like heat to the little earthy couch where the embryo plant lies hid, and arouses it into life. Light, or the luminiferous rays of the sun, so important to the well-being of the plant, is actually inimical to the excitation of vitality in the seed. How singular is this fact! A series of carefully conducted experiments has proved that seeds will not germinate in light, although supplied with heat and moisture, when the actinic rays are cut off. Deprived of the luminous rays, with actinic in full force, they spring into life with great rapidity. Seeds sown upon the surface of the earth will scarcely germinate, as soil cultivators very well know, and, on the other hand, seeds buried so deep that the actinic rays cannot reach them will certainly perish. The planting of seeds, so as to secure the proper distance below the surface, is a most important point in husbandry, as it has much to do with the early starting of the plant and the success of the crops."

THE USE OF RATTLES TO SNAKES.—The noise produced by the rattlesnake's tail has been adduced as a fact inexplicable upon the Darwinian theory, according to which each peculiarity of a species must be (or must have been at some time) advantageous in the struggle for life. It is now suggested by Prof. Shaler that the rattle resembles in sound the singing of some grasshoppers or crickets, and that birds may be thus attracted within the reach of the serpent destroyer. Perhaps we have too hastily assumed, reasoning from human experience, that this noise is a warning, adapted to drive away the prey of the snake, and hence not useful to the species in obtaining food.

Speaking of snakes, Prof. E. D. Cope tells in the American Naturalist of a slender green and yellow oxyclophis aestivus, which he has had for some time in confinement, and which lived mostly underground. It had a habit of projecting its head and two or three inches of its body above the ground, and holding itself motionless in this attitude for hours together. In such a position, he says, it resembled closely a sprout of some green, succulent plant, for which it might readily be mistaken by small animals.

RAISING a false note of alarm in one's ear only increases the liability of his falling into real danger.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and, in their teaching and in their tone of thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business educations. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

SCHOOL HISTORY.
(From the Virginia Educational Journal.)
Mr. Swinton's reputation led us to examine this book. What is of most importance in the work is its extreme fairness. It is vastly superior, in this respect, to any history issued at the North that we have seen. Where accuracy seems almost impossible, he comes nearer to the truth than the others.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The weather has continued fine, with occasional showers, and has been highly favorable to the planting interests. In fact at no time has the cotton prospect been more cheering. The first planting in partienlar is luxuriant and thrifty, and the second planting looks better than was expected a short time since. The following telegram of the Agricultural Report appears to be in agreement with the general view in our cotton circles:

WASHINGTON, June 17.—The following is a brief synopsis of the statement of the area and condition of the present cotton crop, which will appear in the June report of the Department of Agriculture: An increase in the cotton area is reported in every State; a very small proportion of country returns show a decrease of acreage. Planting was generally retarded by a protracted season of dronth, and fields that were planted late occasioned some trouble in obtaining perfect stands, but the recent rains and renewed efforts in planting have finally secured stands of average completeness. The per centage of increase in area, last year's crop being the basis of comparisons, is as follows: North Carolina 16, South Carolina 9, Georgia 12, Florida 10, Alabama 11, Mississippi 10, Louisiana 11, Texas 18, Arkansas 16, Tennessee 12. The average increase throughout the cotton States will approximate 13 per cent. Texas has naturally made the largest relative increase, not only having enjoyed a favorable season for planting, but also during the past year having received accessions of emigrants who are cotton planters. The condition of the plant throughout the cotton section is very nearly a full average; separating the Atlantic from the more westerly States, the former stand a little below an average, while the latter are fully up to the standard of fair condition. The dronth which prevailed in April and the first half of May delayed the growth, and cold nights in the more Northern belt had a further retarding effect, but the abundant rains and general temperature which followed have invigorated and advanced the crop. The following figures represent the condition of cotton in the several States, 100 standing for an average: North Carolina 96, South Carolina 92, Georgia 96, Florida 95, Alabama 105, Mississippi 100, Louisiana 104, Texas 100, Arkansas 98, Tennessee 101.

The river is 5 feet 2 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the fourteenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..		493
Lake		8
Arkansas		20
Total		521

On Saturday operations were nearly suspended, and the sales were confined to abont 50 bales, at previous rates. On Monday the movement was resumed with a moderate degree of spirit, and 000 bales changed hands at prices more in favor of buyers, without showing any qnotable change. On Tuesday, under the influence of a decline of 1-16d at Liverpool and a greater reduction in futures at New York, the movement was confined to three or four brokers, who took 350 bales, partly at Monday's figures, and partly at still easier rates, the downward tendency of the three days resulting in an aggregate falling off of ⅛@¼c.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 948,035 bales, against 1,378,640 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,163,533 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 58,031 to France, and a decrease of 868,098 to Great Britain, and of 324,384 to other foreign ports.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

NIAGARA FALLS, June 19.—The Southern editors, now on an excursion here, adopted resolutions of thanks to members of the press of Buffalo and others for courtesies received, and declaring fealty to the Union.

BOSTON, June 19.—The third day of the Jubilee was devoted to Germany, and the Coliseum was well filled, the Teutonic element predominating. Franz Abt directed the performance of his own ballad, "When the swallows homeward fly," at the conclusion of which the whole audience arose and cheered for several minutes.

RICHMOND, VA., June 20.—The bodies of seven hundred and eighteen Confederate soldiers, disinterred at Gettysburg recently, were brought here and interred at Hollywood Cemetery this evening, amid the most impressive and solemn funeral ceremonies. The procession was two miles in length, consisting of the First Virginia Regiment, Richmond Howitzers, a detachment of police, sixteen wagons with boxes containing the dead, followed by their ex-Confederate comrades, headed by George E. Pickett, to whose division the dead belonged. Next came the Society of the Southern Cross Brothers, and the rear was brought up by a line of carriages a mile long. The streets along the line of the procession were draped in mourning, stores were closed and business was generally suspended. An immense concourse of people lined the streets, the whole being regarded as the most imposing spectacle since the close of the war.

BOSTON, June 21.—At the Jubilee to-day the band of the Garde Republican of Paris appeared, and was greeted with cheers, waving of hats and handkerchiefs, and all sorts of friendly demonstrations. As soon as comparative quiet was restored the band, under the leadership of M. Paulus, unexpectedly struck up "Hail Columbia," when a scene of indescribable enthusiasm ensued; cheer after cheer drowned the music, every one in the house rising and standing on the seats, and several baskets of flowers sent to the band from the audience.

At the conclusion of this demonstration the organ and bande commenced playing the "Marseillaise," when it appeared as if the great mass of humanity had almost become wild, so extravagant were their expressions of delight, the whole chorus, orchestra, bands, organ and audience joining in the French song of freedom.

The audience kept on their feet and cheered until they were fairly hoarse. The French band followed with "Yankee Doodle" and "The Star-Spangled Banner." They then retired, amid the cheers and plaudits of the audience.

NEW YORK, June 21.—The Japanese government are having five-twenty bonds and greenback currency engraved by the New York Bank Note Company. Monthly shipments are now going forward to Japan. About ten millions of dollars have already been sent.

NEW YORK, June 23.—A special from Pittsburg says a fearful collision occurred yesterday on the Washington and Baltimore railroad, near Connellsville. The freight and mail trains ran together at full speed on a short curve. The entire freight train was wrecked. Henry Saxton, conductor of the latter, and Robert Lockhart were killed, and mail agent Blackburn mortally wounded. Eight passengers are seriously injured, and it is expected a number of these will die. Nine others sustained injuries of a less severe character. The freight train was running at a high rate of speed in order to reach the switch at Connellsville before the approach of the mail.

A foreign correspondent says that on the night of June 10 an attempt was made to blow up the statues of the Prince Consort and Lord Carlisle, at Dublin.

CINCINNATI, June 24.—It having been erroneously reported in the newspapers that the recent International Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association, held in Lowell, adopted resolutions making total abstinence a test of membership, and declaring the use of tobacco inconsistent with the Christian character, and pledging associations to resist the exclusion of the Bible from public schools, and to make special efforts to place the Bible in every Roman Catholic family, Mr. H. Thane Miller, president of the convention, will appear to-morrow in a card, declaring that no such action was taken by the convention. Such resolutions were introduced, but not adopted.

The general misapprehension of facts is placing the Young Men's Christian Association of the country in a very false position, and President Miller desires, as far as possible, to present their work properly before the country.

VICKSBURG, June 25.—Mr. Hackett broke dirt on the Vicksburg, Ship Island and Pensacola railroad this evening. Speeches followed by Congressman McKee, Judge Simrall and other distinguished gentlemen.

BOSTON, June 25.—The Coliseum was filled to overflowing to-day. Over five thousand people were turned away from the doors. Twenty thousand tickets for standing placee were sold. The audience is estimated at seventy thousand people.

FOREIGN.

BERLIN, June 19.—The bill proscribing the Jesuits passed its third reading in the Reichstag to-day, 181 to 93. Minister Delbruck closed the session of the Reichstag this afternoon.

The North German Gazette, in a leading article, hints that Germany will make her influence felt in the election of the next Pope.

LONDON, June 19.—The steamer Memphis, which arrived at Liverpool yesterday from New Orleans with a cargo of cotton, was struck by lightning during the storm last evening, and was considerably damaged. A portion of her cargo was burned.

ROME, June 19.—The Pope has addressed a letter to Cardinal Antonelli, deploring the approaching enforcement of the law suppressing convents in Italy, as a violation of international law. He says the constant encroachments on the rights of the church by the government of Italy violate morality and justice. A regard for the highest interests prevents the head of the church from leaving Rome. A conflict between the holy see and the Italian government is inevitable, and that reconciliation is impossible. The Pope cannot submit to such usurpations, and he requests Antonelli to protest against them to foreign powers.

MADRID, June 21.—It is reported that the Spanish ministry have declared in favor of the separation of Church and State in Spain.

BELLEVILLE, CAN., June 22.—An accident occurred to a passenger train, going from Toronto to Montreal; nine persons killed and sixty badly wounded. They were mostly second-class passengers.

MADRID, June 23.—A band of insurgents in the province of Navarre, under the command of the Carlist chief Sarasas, have submitted to the government forces.

In his manifesto yesterday Montpensier asserts the right to the Spanish throne of the Ex-Queen Isabella's son Alphonsus D'Assis, Prince Asturias. Montpensier declares that when the proper moment arrives he will fearlessly defend and proudly serve the interests of Prince Alphonsus.

BELLEVILLE, CAN., June 24.—Thirty deaths have occurred so far from the railroad disaster.

MADRID, June 24.—The Dr. Howard affair has at last been officially arranged by Minister Sickles and Senor Martos, minister of foreign affairs. The American government waives the question of the claims of Dr. Howard to American citizenship, and places its action upon the ground of friendly intercession in Dr. Howard's behalf for amnesty to be granted by the Spanish government. Howard's return has been ordered.

BELLEVILLE, CAN., June 25.—The coroner's jury, in the late railroad horror, find that the calamity was purely accidental; the track was in good condition, and the engineer a sober, efficient and careful officer, and died at his post.

ROME, June 25.—The Pope to-day received the members of the German Literary Club of this city, and in his remarks used the following language: "The persecution of Catholics has commenced in Germany, but they display courage under their afflictions, and have notified the German government that the persecution of the church is folly. The church," said the holy father, "remains triumphant. We have asked Prince Bismarck how it is that the once contented German bishops have, according to the expressed belief of the German government, been suddenly transformed into dangerous conspirators. No reply has yet been received. Let us pray our Holy Father in heaven that the stone may fall that will complete the overthrow of Colossus."

The Latest Phase of the Ultramontane Struggle in Germany.

The latest phase in the contest between Prince Bismarck and the papacy is worthy of a passing comment, as it indicates a change in the field of battle, which may lead to important results. The German chancellor evidently intended, until very recently, to fight the battle in Rome itself and through diplomatic agencies, and with this view selected a remarkable agent, Cardinal Prince Hohenlohe, a prelate of the highest birth, devoted to Germany, and suspected by the Curia of somewhat anti-infallibilist views. It was believed that the cardinal, knowing all the secret machinery of Rome, would be able to exercise great influence at the Vatican, and ultimately bring about a compromise between the Hohenzollerns and the papacy. The Society of Jesus, however, who do not desire this compromise, objected to the arrangement, and the Pope was induced to refuse his assent to the nomination. The refusal stung Prince Bismarck exceedingly, and so much so that he declared it in Parliament to be the most severe rebuff he had received in twenty-one years; and it is probable that, if left to himself, he would have broken off all intercourse with Rome. That course, however, was not acceptable to his master, who is greatly influenced by advisers who are reluctant to launch Germany on a path which, as they think, will lead to Liberalism, and the chancellor was obliged to content himself with milder measures. He should, he explained, endeavor to find another embassador for Rome, and should meet any pretension of the Catholics to be above the law by internal legislation. As a beginning he accepted a bill, making it a high offense for the religious orders, and especially, says the telegram, for the Jesuits, to agitate against the State, the punishment of the offense, as we presume, being a decree of dissolution for the offending body; and he threatens to bring in a bill securing liberty of conscience to all Germans—that is, making all ecclesiastical censures inoperative.

This compromise, if it may be so called, is exceedingly dangerous to Rome, as it takes the control of the struggle out of the hands of the politic chancellor, who is intent mainly on securing the authority of the State, to place it in the hands of the German Parliament, which is intent mainly on reducing the power of the sacerdotal order. So long as the quarrel remained in the foreign office, Prince Bismarck need not make any concession to liberalism that he disapproved; but if it is to be fought out by legislation, he must conciliate the majority which is to pass his laws. As Rome is not likely to yield, he will have to ask constantly for sharper and sharper weapons, and will be led on, step by step, by the necessity of the situation and the pressure of his majority, toward a denial of all authority to Rome. He occupies, in fact, the position of Henry the Eighth, when he first began to contend for the rights of the State as against external interference, and, like him, may be impelled ultimately to declare the supremacy of the State in all departments—a process which will be the more easy because the German Catholics, although of course acquiescent in the pretensions of Rome, are incapable of disloyalty, and accustomed to see the State claim powers which greatly limit the free action of the episcopate. They would, for example, support the chancellor in protecting the independence of the priesthood against the bishops—a point upon which Rome is exceedingly sensitive. The effect, therefore, of the refusal of the Vatican to receive Cardinal Hohenlohe is to make the dispute a public one, to enlist the State-passion of Germany on the side of the chancellor, and to enable the Liberal majority in the German Parliament to intervene directly and daily in the contest. That is not a change in the aspect of affairs which can be beneficial to the Vatican.—Economist.

OLD AGE.

One of our life insurance companies has republished, as a vehicle for its business advertisement, Dr. Rush's celebrated Account of the Causes and Indications of Longevity, and of the State of the Body and Mind in Old Age, which was first printed at Philadelphia in 1793. It is interesting and impressive still, though many of its statements are trite, and can scarcely have been very novel when it first appeared. Dr. Rush's enumeration of the circumstances which favor longevity comprises descent from long-lived ancestors, temperance in eating and drinking, the moderate exercise of the understanding (i. e., intellectual activity, without overwork), equanimity of temper and matrimony. According to his observations, sedentary employments, early baldness or gray hairs, acute diseases not terminating fatally, the loss of teeth, or the use of tea, coffee and butter, do not materially affect the length of life. He remarks in conclusion, under this head, that among the old people whom he examined, he scarcely met with one who had not lost brothers or sisters in early and middle life, though born, apparently, under circumstances equally favorable to longevity.

With regard to the bodily and mental phenomena of old age, he points out that there is great sensibility to cold; that impressions made upon the ears of old people excite sensation and reflection much more quickly than those made upon the eyes; that the appetite is increased, and the pulse full, but fitful. The marks of age appear earlier and are more numerous in persons who have combined with hard labor a vegetable or scanty diet; are more common (or were, in his day) among country than among city people, and among the North American Indians than among the inhabitants of civilized countries. Old men tread upon the whole base of the foot at once in walking.

Memory is the first faculty that fails in old age, and it decays soonest in hard drinkers. The understanding may be preserved by use; and old people who take an interest in books, newspapers and conversation preserve their intellects remarkably by this means. Dr. Johnson ascribes Swift's collapse of mental power to his foolish avoidance of spectacles and seclusion of himself from society. The moral and religious faculties are usually exercised constantly and increasingly in the evening of life, and hence are preserved unimpaired. The fear of death is much diminished. Imperfect sleep and dreaming are universal among the old.

They resemble children in the state of the appetite, and the desire (which should be gratified) of eating between meals; in the marks which slight contusions or impressions leave upon their skins; in their being soon fatigued by exercise, and soon refreshed by rest; in their disposition to detail immediately everything they see or hear; and in their aptitude to shed tears. Dr. Rush mentions in illustration of the last peculiarity, Voltaire's constant weeping at the recital of his own tragedies, after he had passed his eightieth year, and Homer's representation of old Menelaus as weeping, ten years after the fall of Troy, when he spoke of the death of the Greek heroes of the siege. It is fair to remark, however, that the Homeric warriors, old or young, are not ashamed of tears, and invariably "cry when they feel like it." Witness Achilles by the sea, and Ajax in the battle.

Dr. Rush says all the diseases of old people originate in debility, and the general remedies are stimulants, particularly heat, applied by the warm bath, warm rooms, thick clothing, especially bed clothing, and ample protection for the extremities. Generous diet and drink should be allowed. Company, particularly of young and lively persons, is an excellent stimulus; and gentle exercise and cleanliness are highly beneficial.

Death from old age is the effect of a gradual palsy; but few, even among those who attain to great longevity, die in this way. It is usually the attack of some disease that finally overcomes the resistance which enfeebled vitality is able to offer.—Christian Union.

SACRED PREMIUMS.

The fashion of swelling the subscription lists of periodical publications by the offer of inducements outside the intrinsic merits of the journal itself is becoming universal. But the expedient of a Western cotemporary seems to "lay over," as they say on the Pacific coast, all the premiums of books, chromos, engravings, or what not, that have yet come under our notice. The Ave Maria is a journal published at Notre Dame, Indiana, "in the interests of the Blessed Virgin." A payment of $20 constitutes a life subscription; and the incidental inducement to such a venture is as follows:

"The holy sacrifice of the mass is celebrated every Saturday, at Notre Dame, for life subscribers, and a certain number of communions offered for them; this mass will be offered in requiem for them whenever it may please our heavenly Father to call them from our midst."

(For the prompt payment of the latter clause, we suspect the publishers will not be subjected to the importunity which our subscribers manifest, naturally enough, for their promised chromos.)

"Subscribers for one year and upward," it is added, "will share in the benefit of a mass once a month." This is a new way of making merchandise of the gifts and graces of the church. Surely the spirit of old Tetzel is about! Yet what different can we expect when, according to this prospectus, the "Holy Mother" herself sets the example of dispensing her favors on selfish principles. "The more we do," it says, "for the interests of the Mother of God, the better shall we love her, and the more will she intercest herself in our behalf at the throne of grace."

Jesus prayed for his enemies: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." The "travail of his soul" embraced the world, and would be "satisfied" with nothing less than the salvation of the world. But his mother is here represented as asking for a special blessing on her friends, as the regular subscribers of a journal "particularly devoted to the Mother of God."—Christian Union.

FROM THE WORK.

Selma District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Selma District Conference convened at the beautiful town of Orrville, Alabama, on Wednesday night, May 29, when it was our privilege to listen to an able and well-delivered sermon by the Rev. A. S. Andrews, D. D., president of the Greensboro College.

At nine o'clock on the morning of the thirtieth conference was opened with singing, and prayer by Bishop Keener, who presided. After some well-timed words of instruction and encouragement to the church and ministry, he called for the reports of the several works of the district, all of which were promptly and satisfactorily made by the pastors and delegates of the several charges, nearly all of whom were present. A few were absent on account of sickness. At eleven o'clock A. M. the Rev. M. S. Andrews preached with his usual interest and elegance. At night Bishop Keener preached with argumentative power and sublimity, which was not without effect. All were edified.

We had several visiting brethren, viz.: Dr. Andrews, Dr. Mitchell and Rev. S. P. Richardson, all of whom preached to us with power, and aided us with their counsel in conference. The day following we listened with much interest and feeling to quite an edifying discourse by the Rev. W. H. McDonald, of East Selma. Dr. Andrews represented the Greensboro College, by means of an address setting forth the great importance of educating our children at home schools, and more particularly at those under the direction of the church. He was followed by Bishop Keener, whose concurrent remarks very ably sustained his position. The Rev. A. D. McVoy, with his usual ability and deeply manifested interest, set forth the claims of the female department of the schools at Summerfield.

Bishop Keener and Rev. S. P. Richardson very ably addressed quite a large audience, on Saturday, upon the subject of missions. They asked for a contribution of $200, which was promptly met by the congregation.

At all hours of worship the congregations were large. The choir sang beautifully, and the organ was well fingered. On Sunday the house was crowded, and Bishop Keener preached a powerful, impressive and feeling sermon. The audience listened with attention. At the close of the sermon the Bishop came down into the altar, and in his usual Holy Ghost, old-fashioned Methodist style, called for penitents. They came, and God was with them. It was certainly refreshing to those old veterans of the cross who witnessed the scene. Those who had long plead the cause, in prayer to God, of those bowed at the altar of prayer, and to whom they had long preached the cross, were now crying for mercy. Many years have elapsed since a member has been added to the church, or a penitent at the altar of prayer. Dr. Andrews preached again at night. Deep interest and feeling was manifested by the congregation. On Monday night our most worthy presiding elder, A. J. Briggs, preached. The sermon was sublime, and was attended with the power and energy of the Holy Ghost. During the meeting fourteen members were added to the church, the faith of which was mightily strengthened. The preachers were all refreshed with new zeal and encouragement in the cause of Christ.

The meeting, upon the whole, was a complete success. The work of the conference went on handsomely and with good effect. The Rev. S. P. Richardson says it was the best conference, upon the whole, ever held in the district.

I must here say that much of this is attributable to the energetic and good management of our model presiding elder. He is certainly the right man in the right place.

We should not overlook the noble manner in which Bro. E. F. Evans, preacher in charge, received and conducted us to our comfortable homes, which he had secured for us through the hospitality of the citizens of Orrville. May the Lord bless him in his labors there, and make him instrumental in the salvation of many. Much good has already resulted from the meeting of the conference at Orrville, and we expect much more in the future.

FOOTSTEPS.

In the quiet hour of gloaming,
When the hush is upon the earth,
When the stars gleam out and the low winds moan,
I sit and listen—listen alone—
By the side of the desolate hearth.

I listen, but not to the homeless leaves,
As they drift 'gainst the window-pane;
Nor the soughing wind from the fir-crowned hill,
Nor the sigh and sob of the swollen rill,
Nor the whisper of careless rain.

I listen, I listen, and but to hear
The footsteps that fall around;
The footsteps that gladdened my life of yore,
The footsteps that seek my side no more,
That fall on no earthly ground.

The tiny steps of my first-born
Come pattering quick and soft;
He had trod like a man, had he stayed, by this;
Yet oh! I yearn for the baby kiss,
He tottered to give so oft.

His firm treaderings out gallantly,
Just as it wont to do,
When I used to spring from this same low seat,
The comer I loved the best to greet,
As he strode through the evening dew.

Slow and heavy, and quick and light,
The echoes around me come,
The steps that through youth's gay footpaths ranged,
Of friends forgotten, of friends estranged,
Who once made life and home.

Ah! well, poor salvage from the wreck
All memory saves and stores,
Yet the sounds that people the sweet Past's dreams
Are dearer to me than the light that gleams
On the lonely Present's shores.

Is There No Harm in These Things?

Mr. Editor: Perhaps there is nothing more difficult than for an individual to believe and practice precepts and principles contrary to his natural feelings, inclinations and desires. He may be aroused, by powerful religious stimulants or excitants, to see his morbid selfishness and moral corruption, and while thus moved upon he may feel disposed to reform his life—to become religious; but, alas! it is too often merely spasmodic. This is true of many church members; yet it is no just cause for discouragement to the really faithful. Society has ever been fluctuating, and there has always been a manifest tendency, on the part of many, to retreat after the first campaign. Many left the Savior, and walked no more with him.

In many instances shipwreck is shamefully and fatally made of the faith—all of which argues that we should be sober, watchful and prayerful.

The age in which we live is dangerous to piety. The world is drawn up to full proportions in fiction and fashion, in worldly amusements and sinful practices; and the difficulty as well as the great danger is that many church members see no harm in many of these things. We suppose such persons may justly be considered as wayside or stony-ground hearers.

The fowls of the air—that is, the trifling vanities and amusements of the world—carry them away; or, having no settled determination, they are moved from their steadfastness and overcome. Indeed, what more does the enemy want than to get people to the point where they can see no harm in sin? When the commands of God are put out of the mind, and the awful retributions of an eternal judgment allowed wholly to slumber, there is very little probability that one would see any harm, or even suspect any danger. Such become the easy and certain prey of the wicked one.

Does any one suppose Eve saw any harm in following the suggestions of the tempter? And although skeptics and infidels have treated this as a trivial matter, it has been very clearly demonstrated that the physical disabilities and moral corruptions of the entire race here find their sufficient cause. The Devil is wily and vigilant. He is still saying: "Eat, drink and be merry—enjoy life." There is no harm in these things." Hence the grievous failures that so often occur on the part of many church members in the various branches of the church. They fail to put on the whole armor of the Christian's warfare, that they may be able to stand against the wiles of the enemy; or, having put it on, they fail to keep it on. They have been led away by the deceitfulness of sin, until piece after piece of their spiritual weapons has been laid aside, and they now stand unarmed in the hands of a fierce adversary.

Of these delusions and vices, next to intoxicating beverages, which are as a corroding canker or as a devastating fire, perhaps the fondness for dancing, and playing cards for pastime and amusement, are the most insidious and destructive to the faith and piety of young members of the church. These indulgences on the part of church members constitute a palpable violation of a most sacred obligation—a solemn vow—a vow made voluntarily, made in the presence of men and angels, made not only to man, but to God, on entering into church relations. It is to "renounce the Devil and all his works, the vain pomp and glory of the world, with all covetous desires of the same, and the carnal desires of the flesh, so that we will not follow or be led by them." This is the requisition of the church, and the rule and requisition of the church is founded upon and unequivocally sustained by the word of God.

In this view of the subject, is it a light matter to violate plighted faith, to set at naught the rules of the church, and thus disturb and wound the body of Christ, which is the church? to disregard the awful authority of Jehovah, and crucify the Son of God afresh? O fearful delusion! Would that such professors would wake up and amend their ways.

Should it be necessary to cut off a right hand or pluck out a right eye for sin, make the effort, and God has promised to give the grace. We may need a theological seminary. I am not sure whether we do or do not. But I am sure that we need retrenchment and reform in the church—that is, thorough consecration to God. Then we will see people believe not only theoretically, but with the heart unto righteousness. Then they will become church members not only nominally, but they will keep God's holy commandments, and walk in the same all the days of their lives. Christ will be "all and in all."

The church should by no means attempt to accommodate herself to the maxims, customs and amusements of the world. "The ax of truth and reason" must be laid at the root of the deadly Upas, and the blows continue to fall thicker and heavier, until it is laid prostrate upon the ground. This is not the time for the watchman to sleep. The enemy is sowing his tares with an industry worthy of a good cause. Let the lovers of truth, then, come to the rescue, and aid in the support and diffusion of the great doctrines of the Bible.

The period in which we live is truly eventful. Is it a time to compromise essential truth or give place to invidious error? Surely not. The great battle which is to decide the fate of the world is at hand, yea, is already begun.

Let those, then, who are upon the side of the Lord and truth "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty," that the beauty of the church may appear as a city set on a hill, enlightening the world and bringing men to see the salvation of the Lord. N. M. Skipworth.

TRUST IN GOD.

"Till death shall set thy spirit free,
Thy God hath said 'tis good for thee
To walk in faith and not by sight—
Take it on trust a little while;
Soon shalt thou read the mystery right,
In the full heaven of his smile."

"Take it on trust a little while"—how hard it is sometimes! When the heart is sick with the troubles and disappointments of life we cannot discern a Father's hand of love; often our bleeding hearts cry: "Might not this cup have been spared me?"

In these moments of anguish and discouragement, how sweet to rest our weary heads on our Savior's loving bosom, to listen to those precious words: "Let not your hearts be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me." What a sweet, sacred happiness steals over the heart's unrest when those words reveal to us our Brother—one who, having passed through the gloomy valley of humiliation and suffering, can and does sympathize with poor, sorrowing, sin-tossed humanity. If we love him, why not strive to follow his example, and, when our hearts are saddest and sorest, endeavor to dart a ray of light into the lives of those around us?

When sharp, bitter words, wrung from deep agony, escape our lips, do we reflect how we wrong the Father by complaining at his wise providence? how we injure his cause by our want of faith? No, no, or we would set a brighter example of Christian fortitude—we would work more diligently in the field before us.

Poor, weary hearts, sick and faint with the troubles and trials thickly strewn over life's pathway, lay aside all your fruitless struggles. You cannot find peace in conflicting your will with his, or in reluctantly drinking the cup he holds out to you. Merge them all into unquestioning, patient submission to his will. Lay yourselves with child-like faith at your Savior's feet. Place your hands in the wounds which bled so freely for you, feeling that in them is your only hope and trust. Listen to the sweet "Peace, be still," until the troubled, heaving billows sink into a tranquil calm. Then, with your souls irradiated by the golden splendor of his ineffable love, step softly, gently from his presence into the world, and, purified from earthly dross,

"Go fix some weighty truth;
Chain down some passion; do some generous good:
Teach ignorance to see, or grief to smile;
Correct thy friend, befriend thy greatest foe,
Or, with warm hearts and confidence divine,
Spring up and lay strong hold on him who made thee!"

SANCTIFICATION.

"Sanctification is that great work of God's grace in the soul by which we are renewed after the image of God, and set apart for his service, and enabled to live unto righteousness. Sanctification in this world must be complete; the whole nature must be sanctified; all sin must be utterly abolished, or the soul can never be admitted into the glorious presence of God." "Sanctification comprehends all the Christian graces—repentance, faith, knowledge, love, humility, zeal, patience and godliness. Yet after all this is done, the saints, while here, are in a state of spiritual warfare with Satan and his temptations, with the world and its influence." This is the theory of sanctification as taught in the Holy Scriptures. It cleanses the soul from all sin in this life, makes the heart pure, and fills it with love, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. All true Methodists believe this, but they are not all sanctified. And why not? Because they are Christians in theory, but not in practice. They believe in the doctrine of sanctification, but not in the practice of sanctification, and therefore they are not sanctified, or, if they have been, they are ashamed to publicly profess it, because of their inconsistent lives as members of the church and preachers of the gospel. Here is our great practical error. As a body of Methodists we hope to get to heaven without traveling the narrow way that God has marked out, that leads to heaven. Now it is just as reasonable to suppose that a man would reach the city of New Orleans, while traveling from it, as to suppose a man can reach heaven who will not travel in the narrow way that leads to heaven. The narrow way of duty that leads to heaven is marked out so plain in the word of God that a boy five years old can understand it and recollect it. It is marked out by two short, plain words, namely: do and not do. These words comprehend the whole of practical godliness. "The whole duty of man is to fear God and keep his commandments." Now what God commands us not to do, if we do it, we sin against God, and what he commands us to do, if we do it not, we sin against God. Now, in the fear of God and in the name of Jesus Christ, let us, as Christian men and women, weigh ourselves in the balance, do and not do, and see if we are not found wanting. And if so, let us, in the name of our Master, reform our lives.

We will now proceed to try our lives, as Christians, by the rule not do. That it is a great sin to do what God commands us not to do, all Christians will at once admit. Well, what does God command the Christian man not to do? We answer: First. He forbids the Christian man's swearing. Christ says: "Swear not at all, neither by heaven, for it is God's throne; nor by the earth, for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great King." "Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black." Here all kinds of profane swearing are forbidden, and all kinds of vain and idle words, used as substitutes for swearing, are also forbidden, such as "Confound you, concarne you, by graney, by jimeny, plague gone you, by George, by jing," and many other foolish words are used by members of the church, which are supposed by them to be harmless. But Christ condemns them all as sinful, and says: "But let your communication be Yea, yea, nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil." False swearing before magistrates is also forbidden: "Thou shalt not forswear thyself." Now, as God forbids both profane swearing and false swearing, we as Christians must be certain not to do either the one or the other. If God forbids lying, we must be certain not to tell a lie. A lie is to deceive a person in any way, either by words or actions. If God forbids stealing, we must be certain not to steal even the value of one pin. If God forbids adultery and fornication, we must be certain not to commit either. If God forbids idolatry, we must be certain not to worship ourselves, our families, our gold, our silver, our greenbacks, or any other creature in heaven above or on earth beneath, but God himself. If God forbids murder, we must be certain not to murder our fellow-man. If God forbids drunkenness, we must be certain not to get drunk; and in order to keep sober, we must keep away from bar-rooms, grog-shops, taverns and the social glass, and abstain from spirituous liquor altogether, only in cases of extreme necessity. If God forbids evil speaking, we must be certain not to speak evil of any man. If God forbids our putting on of gold and costly apparel, we must be certain not to put on gold rings, gold chains, gold breast-pins, gold ear-rings, gold sleeve-buttons, gold spectacles, gold watches, or gold ornaments in any shape or form. If you say it is no harm to wear jewelry, we answer: If so, God would not have forbidden it, and as he does forbid it, it is certainly wrong to wear it. Our Discipline also forbids it, and when we joined the Methodist Church we solemnly promised, before God and the congregation, to observe and keep the rules of our Book of Discipline, and yet you say it is no harm to break your promise, ignore the rules of our Discipline and the word of God. Costly apparel is also forbidden—that is, as we understand it, superfluous apparel worn as ornaments to attract attention: the attention of the gazing spectators. This also we must be certain not to do. If God forbids our returning evil for evil, we must be certain not to do it. If he forbids our taking unlawful interest on money, we must be certain not to do it. If he forbids our taking advantage of our fellow-man, we must be certain not to do it; we must not take advantage of his ignorance or his necessity to make a dime. If he forbids and condemns pride, we must be certain to resist pride—a sin that God resisteth and abhors. If he forbids and condemns selfishness, that prolific root of almost all evil, we must be certain to fight against it with all our power until we conquer and subdue it. If he forbids and condemns covetousness, as idolatry, we must beware of covetousness. We must not be so stingy as to starve out God's ministers, whom he has called and sent among us to preach the gospel. We must not be so avaricious as to live and die indebted to ourselves, our families and the church of God. We must not rob God in tithes and offerings, nor rob ourselves of the comforts of life. If he forbids our laying up treasure on earth, so as to place our affections on earthly things, we must not do it. If he forbids and condemns laziness, we must not indulge in it, but we must cultivate industrious habits. If God forbids anger, we must not indulge in it. We must not scold, quarrel, fight, fret and pout. If he forbids and condemns gluttony, we must not eat nor drink to excess, so as to make a god of our appetites. If he forbids and condemns filthiness, we must not indulge in nastiness, dirtiness or pollution of any kind. We ought to keep ourselves clean, keep our children clean, keep our houses clean, and keep the church of God clean, and not suffer it to be polluted with dirt, dust, cobwebs, trash of various kinds, old chews of tobacco, puddles of filthy tobacco spittle, and other disgraceful filthiness that we will not here mention. If God forbids malice, we must be certain not to retain prejudice in our hearts against any man.

We have now mentioned some things that God forbids his children doing. We will now notice some things that he commands them to do. He commands them to have no other gods but him, and to worship "him only, and to worship him in spirit and in truth, and to love him with all the heart, with all the soul, mind and strength, and our neighbors as ourselves." He has commanded us to have faith in him, to take up our cross and follow him, not into Jordan, as some suppose, but in moral conduct. He commands us to deny ourselves of all ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world. He commands us to keep the Sabbath day holy—not to buy and sell on that day, and attend to our worldly business, as very many church members do. He commands us to abstain from all appearance of evil; to overcome evil with good; to do unto all men as we would they should do unto us; to love our enemies, pray for them that despitefully use us and persecute us; to glory in tribulation; to overcome evil with good; to put on the whole armor of God; to be good soldiers of the cross; to fight the good fight of faith; to run with patience the race set before us; to grow in grace; to go on to perfection; to continue in well-doing; to pray without ceasing, and in all things give thanks; to let our light shine; to keep unspotted from the world; to come out from among the wicked; to touch not, taste not, handle not the unclean thing, (in order to do this we must keep away from gambling rooms, theaters, ball rooms and social dances;) to love one another; to help each other in business; to be charitable to each other; to visit the sick, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and turn not away the stranger. Husbands are commanded to love their wives, and wives are to obey their husbands. Children are to obey their parents, and the parents are to love their children, and raise them up for God in his church. Christians are to obey them that rule over them, both in Church and in State, because they are God's ministers. In a word, the children of God are commanded to do all they do with an eye to the glory of God, and the salvation of precious and immortal souls.

In conclusion we ask, in the fear of God and in the name of our Master: "Who are sufficient for these things?" Where are the Methodist men and women who fill this bill? Where are the members of our church who are not wanting when weighed in the balance? Where are the Christian people who come up to this divine gospel measure of sanctification? I hope you have some in the city of New Orleans, Bro. Parker, and I hope we have some in this country, who are holy in heart and holy in life, for it takes both these to make a Christian prepared for the kingdom of heaven above. James Shanks.

Brethren, When and Where do You Pray?

My Dear Brethren: I confess to a feeling of uneasiness about your spiritual state. I fear that you are not on safe ground; that those of you I now particularly address are not such Christians as the Bible requires you to become in order to your eternal salvation. When and where do you pray? It is certain that the habit of constant and earnest prayer is one of the indispensable characteristics of the life of a true Christian. The inspired word teaches us to "pray everywhere;" to "pray always, with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit;" to "continue instant in prayer;" in a word, that we should "pray without ceasing," and "pray always and not faint." The numerous examples recorded in the Holy Scriptures are conspicuous on this point. God's people have always and everywhere been prominent as a praying people. They prayed alone, prayed with their families, prayed in their places of public worship, prayed with and for each other in their regular or occasional prayer meetings, prayed for what things soever they desired, either for themselves, their families, the church or the world. God has attached an unspeakable importance to the prayers of his people. Our Savior encouraged its constant use, both by precept and example. But when, dear brethren, do you pray? Nobody ever sees you pray. Nobody ever hears you pray; not even your own family. You do not let even the wife of your bosom, or your dear children, who look to you for example, hear you utter a single prayer. You do not pray at the bedside of the sick and dying. You refuse to take any part with your brethren in the weekly prayer meeting, which is enjoined on the members of the church by the rules you have promised to keep; yea, we believe you often stray away from prayer meeting for fear somebody may call on you to lead in prayer. You utterly refuse to take any part in praying for penitent seekers of salvation in our revival meetings, though some of them may be members of your own household. No matter how much the minister and other laborers may be exhausted, or how great the interests at stake, they can get no help from you. You say you pray in secret, and we trust you do, but we never see you do it. But if you really do, discharging one duty will not excuse the neglect of others equally as imperious; you are not only to pray in secret, but to pray everywhere, and to pray all manner of prayer. But you say you unite with the church in public prayer. How is anybody to know that from what they see you do? When the minister says, "Let us pray," you bow your head, or get on your knees, but "sinners do the same." Nobody sees your "lips move" in prayer, as did Hannah's in the temple; nobody hears you respond the hearty amen! All with you seems to be a lifeless form. Dear brethren, I fear there is utterly a fault among some of you in this great matter of prayer. You are not living up to the measure either of your duties or privileges. But I am more inclined to feel sorry for you than to censure, much less condemn you. I know you are embarrassed in your feelings about this matter. You imagine difficulties which seem to you insurmountable. But you are mistaken. God requires no impossibilities; and the fact that he requires you to pray "all prayer, and everywhere," is evidence that if you will, you can do it. I propose to give you words of encouragement in my next.

CHARITY.

Mr. Editor: Some weeks ago an intelligent and influential citizen of our community delivered an address before a temperance association, in which he got off the following: "In the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, St. Paul defines the meaning of charity," (then follows a quotation of verses 4–7 of that chapter.) "Not a word is said about giving alms, building benevolent institutions, helping to support the ministry, or any of the acts commonly called by that name." Query: Is "helping to support the ministry" "commonly called" an act of "charity?" Are ministers objects of "charity," or are they "commonly" so considered?

Some years ago, when stationed in ——, I received one morning, through the postoffice, a note from a prominent member of my charge, containing $5, with the following explanation:

"'For I was hungered, and ye gave me meat; naked, and ye clothed me,' etc. Dear Brother: Please receive the inclosed $5, and pray that I may be numbered among those to whom it shall be said in that day: 'Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.'"

I prayed for him, but on the following Sabbath I took occasion to inform my congregation that a minister was not an object of charity. I wonder if this idea does prevail to any extent! Could this be the reason so many educated and dignified young men, whose hearts God has touched, turn from the ministry to other callings?

I was conversing with one of my stewards. Said he to me: "Dear brother, you must learn to trust your family to the Lord." Said I to him: "The easiest thing I ever tried to do is to trust in the Lord; but one of the hardest is to trust in man. Unfortunately for your suggestion, the Lord hath 'ordained that they which preach the gospel shall live of the gospel.' He does not propose to feed them and their families with manna from heaven, nor has he authorized me to trust my family to him in this way, but he has made it the duty of those to whom I minister in holy things to support me—not as a matter of charity, but as a matter of justice, as they pay their doctor and teacher and grocer." True, I did not say all that to him, just in those words, but that was what I meant.

In a church conference on my circuit, the stewards' report being called for, one of them gave me the edifying information that some of the members, when called on for contributions to the support of the ministry, replied: "Let the preachers go to work, like I have to do."

A steward said to me one day: "Perhaps the Lord is keeping you poor for your good." I replied: "It is not the Lord, but the church that is keeping me poor, by not paying me that which they owe me." So might a doctor, or a merchant, or a lawyer be kept poor. Let us not blame the Lord with the faults of men.

"Lo, these are parts" of the trials of the ministry; "but how little a portion is heard!" How inefficient do these things often render a minister, both in the pulpit and out of it. O that we were untrammeled, that we might go about our Master's business without let or hinderance! Then would the ranks of the ministry be full, and we could be far more successful in our work than we are.

A brother prayed: "Lord, bless our minister, and give him souls for his hire." No, brother; we do not want souls for our hire, but as seals to our ministry. For our hire we will take something wherewith to procure the necessaries of life, if you please.

Ideas of God.—In 1852 Sir David Brewster was in Paris, and was taken to see the astronomer Arago, who was then in deep suffering and was soon to die. He thus describes the interview:

"We conversed upon the marvels of creation, and the name of God was introduced. This led Arago to complain of the difficulties which his reason experienced in understanding God.

"'But,' said I, 'it is still more difficult not to comprehend God.'

"He did not deny it.

"'Only,' added he, 'in this case I abstain, for it is impossible for me to understand the God of you philosophers.'

"'It is not with them we are dealing,' replied I, 'although I believe that true philosophy necessarily conducts us to believe in God; it is of the God of the Christian that I wish to speak.'

"'Ah!' he exclaimed, 'he was the God of my mother, before whom she always experienced so much comfort in kneeling.'

"'Doubtless,' I answered.

"He said no more; his heart had spoken this; he had understood."

More About Dr. Livingstone's Safety.—The New York Herald correspondent at Zanzibar writes that Seyd Ben Mejid, one of the principal Arabs of Ujiji, left that place on the twelfth of January last, and arrived at Unyemwemba on the fifth of February. He reported to Sheik Ben Nasib, an important personage in Unyemwemba, that Mr. Stanley had reached Ujiji, fifty days before he (Mejid) left, by a circuitous route, which he was compelled to take on account of troubles on the regular caravan route. At the time of Mr. Stanley's arrival Dr. Livingstone was not at Ujiji; he had been traveling in the neighboring country, and was at Myemba, twenty days' march from Ujiji, between Lakes Tanganijika and Victoria Nyanza; but, at the time of the departure of Seyd Ben Mejid, Dr. Livingstone had arrived at Ujiji, and he and Mr. Stanley were there together. Sheik Ben Nasib sent this news from Unyemwemba to his brother Abdallah Ben Nasib at Zanzibar, by his trusty slave Saade, who left Unyemwemba on the eighth of February, and reached Zanzibar on the second of April.

REACHING.

BY DR. S. T. CLARK.

To me a gentle mother's love
Is such a holy thing,
Almost a sacrilege, it seems,
To blend the tenderest of themes
With any song I sing.

But never human mother lived,
Since Bethlehem Mary bore
The Child Divine, but as she did,
Have they their sons' sweet sayings hid
Heart deep forevermore.

So did my mother, nor alone
My words, but infant plays;
And it did seem her dearest joy
To say, "Thus said my little boy;"
"These were his childish ways."

To me almost a prophecy
Has proved one oft-told tale—
When first she pointed out the stars,
I sought to reach them through the bars,
And wept that I should fail.

From then till now, up to the stars,
I reach through all the years;
But every effort is in vain—
My heart must still be wrung with pain,
My eyes suffused with tears.

How many stars have set for me
In life's fair firmament,
I care not to the world to show!
The thoughtless throng shall never know
My solemn sacrament!

But still the star supremely bright
I yet may touch as mine!
What though that star conceals a cross?
All other gains I count as loss,
Compared with Love Divine!

Zion's Herald.

Conversion of Andrew Jackson.

From an article in the Christian Weekly, by John S. C. Abbott, we make the following interesting extract:

The administration of Andrew Jackson was one of the most memorable and tempestuous in the history of our country. No President has had more bitter enemies or warmer friends. At the close of two terms of office he retired, in 1837, to his humble rural retreat called the Hermitage, in Tennessee. He was then seventy years of age. A year after this he, not having yet found the "convenient season," wrote to a friend who had addressed him earnestly upon the subject of religion.

"I would long since have made the solemn public dedication to Almighty God, but knowing the wretchedness of this world, and how prone many are to evil, that the scoffer at religion would have cried out 'Hypocrisy, he has joined the church for political effect,' I thought it best to postpone this public act until my retirement to the shades of private life, when no false imputation could be made that might be injurious to religion."

Still it was the old excuse. The "convenient season" had not yet come. Soon after this there was what was then called a "protracted meeting," or religious services held for several days in succession, in the little rural church in the vicinity of the Hermitage. President Jackson attended all the exercises, and the audience generally was impressed with his thoughtful, solemn aspect. The last sermon of the series was preached by Dr. Edgar upon the "Interposition of Providence in the affairs of men."

The life of President Jackson had been one of the wildest adventure and full of peril. He was deeply impressed by the sermon. With a peculiar expression of solemnity and of solicitude he entered his carriage and was riding homeward when he overtook Dr. Edgar, who was on horseback. President Jackson urged the preacher to go home with him to the Hermitage, evidently desiring to converse with him upon that theme which was now engrossing all the energies of his soul. But Dr. Edgar had an engagement which he could not forego.

The President, thus apparently left alone with his God, went home a deeply-convicted sinner. Entering his chamber he passed most of the night walking the floor in anguish of spirit and in prayer. The scenes of that night, its penitence, its supplications, its cries for mercy, are known only to God and to those angels who rejoice over the repentance of a sinner. But at the close of those hours of anguish, peace came to his soul, and he had resolved what to do.

The next day was the Sabbath. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was to be administered in the little church at the Hermitage. With characteristic decision of action the President announced to his family his full conviction that he had repented of his sins, cast himself upon the Savior, and had been accepted of him.

He immediately sent for the elders of the church, informed them of the new life upon which he believed that he had entered, of his hope that he had become a true disciple of Jesus, and expressed his desire, upon that very day, to make a public profession of his faith in Christ, and to receive the memorials of his body broken for us and of his blood shed for our sins.

It was a solemn scene which was that morning witnessed in that humble church, surrounded by the forests of Tennessee. The war-worn veteran, his brow bronzed and furrowed with the cares of one of the most tempestuous of lives, and his hair frosted by the lapse of three-score-years-and-ten, knelt, with the humility of a little child, before the communion table, in acceptance of pardon through an atoning Savior, and was baptized in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost.

His subsequent life was that of the Christian. Family prayer was immediately established in his dwelling, which President Jackson himself conducted, however numerous might be his guests. The household servants were all called in to partake in the devotions. Twice before he died he read the whole Bible through, with Scott's Commentary and Practical Observations. At one of the meetings of the church he was nominated as a ruling elder. With humility, which no one who knew the man could for one moment suppose to be feigned, he said:

"No! I am too young in the church for such an office. My countrymen have given me high honors; but I should esteem the office of ruling elder in the church of Christ a far higher honor than any I have received."

His final sickness was long and extremely painful. On Sunday, May 24, 1845, he partook of the Lord's Supper for the last time. He was conscious that his end was near.

"Death," said he, "has no terrors for me. When I have suffered sufficiently the Lord will take me to himself. But what are my sufferings compared with those of the blessed Savior, who died on the accursed tree for me?"

Still weary days of weakness and suffering lingered away. On Sunday morning, June 8, it was manifest that his last hour had come. He assembled his household around him and very affectionately took leave of them all. One who was present writes:

'He then delivered one of the most impressive lectures on the subject of religion that I have ever heard. He spoke for nearly half an hour, and apparently with the power of inspiration."

These were the days of slavery. Many of the servants of the household stood weeping around the bed. Turning his languid eye over the whole group of whites and blacks assembled in the room, the dying man, in this hour in which he felt the equality of all before God, said:

"My dear children and friends and servants, I hope and trust to meet you all in heaven, both white and black," repeating with much emphasis the last words, "both white and black."

Exhausted, he sank for a few moments apparently into a state of stupor. At length his adopted son took his hand and said: "Father, do you know me?"

"Yes," he replied, "I know you. Where is my daughter and Marian? God will take care of you for me. I am my God's. I belong to him. I go but a short time before you. And I want to meet you all, white and black, in heaven."

It was a lovely June morning; quite a group of servants, men, women and children, crowded the piazza, looking in at the open windows and weeping bitterly. Turning to them, their dying master said:

"What is the matter with my dear children? Do not cry; and we will all meet in heaven."

These were his last words. Almost immediately, without a struggle or a groan, he ceased to breathe. Two days after his remains were placed in the grave by the side of those of his wife. He had often said: "Heaven will be no heaven to me if I do not meet my wife there."

CRAVING FAT FOOD.

Children, and quite small ones too, often crave food that is fat-giving—will immediately leave almost anything they are eating, for a piece of fat pork or beef, and, if allowed to have it, will suck it with as much enjoyment as it is possible for them to show, and will sometimes eat an enormous amount of it when it has been kept from them. Is there no adaptation of supply and demand in this love for fat food? This child, one or two years old, has not acquired an appetite for anything, but only hungers to supply the demands of the body for growth and waste. Do we not, then, see that nature is calling for fat as a need?

Children who have such an appetite are usually strong and healthy—those who have had their appetites gratified with a mother's kind judgment. Give the child his fat food in moderation, as he will take it if he has it every day, and we will see him keep healthy. Refuse the fat food his appetite calls for, and he will eat largely of sugar and sweets, and of vegetables that contain starch. Of these he must eat a larger bulk, and his digestive organs labor harder to assimilate the amount of carbon his body wants. This over-work may affect the digestion, when, if he had been fed fat meat, as nature called for it, this more concentrated food would not have over-worked his digestive organs.

The child often has a strong desire for sweet foods and sweetmeats. This shows a want of carbon in the system—that he is needing a large amount of it. When the little child so earnestly pleads for candy—his idea of the sugar he so much covets—feed it to him; only being careful of the quality and the quantity he shall use at any one time. There is an instinctive feeling about these wants; and if they are not gratified in some form the child does not fill that want of its body, and this vacancy will in after life tell against his health in some way.

Many are the cries against eating candies and sugar, as making the child bilious and black, or that it rots the teeth; but the want of it makes more puny children than the use of it in any form ever injured; the want of it rots more teeth than were ever hurt by its use. Then let us feed them on the rational principle of a demanding appetite.

Dr. Huxley, in his work upon hygiene, says: "It is believed that a lack of oleaginous elements in diet predisposes to consumption." The immediate cause of this disease, as has already been observed, is an abortive or imperfect nutrition, tubercle being produced instead of healthy tissue.

The seeds of consumption are most generally sown in the system in youth, when there is a double demand upon nutrition for current waste and steady growth. When there is sufficient proteid matter to nourish the structures, some other condition must be wanting. Eminent physiologists have lately maintained that the faulty nutrition which results in tubercle is caused by a deficiency in oily substances; and therefore such of those fatty substances as are most easily digested and absorbed have been indicated as remedies.

Cod-liver oil has come into use for this purpose. Dr. Hughs Bennett, who first introduced this oil to the notice of the public, states that butchers, cooks, oilmen, tanners, and others who are constantly coming in contact with fatty matter, are less liable than others to tubercular diseases; and Dr. Simpson has observed that "children and young persons employed in wool factories, where large quantities of oil are daily used, are generally exempt from scrofula and pulmonary consumption. These facts would indicate that even the absorption of fatty matter through the skin may powerfully influence nutrition."

Dr. Bennett says that "to prevent consumption during youth, indulgence in indigestible articles of food should be avoided, especially pastry, unripe fruit, salted provisions and acid drinks; while the habit of eating a certain quantity of fat should be encouraged, and, if necessary, made imperative." Dr. Carpenter observes "that there is a strong tendency and increasing reason to believe that a deficiency of oleaginous matter, in a state fit for appropriating by the nutritive process, is a fertile source of diseased action, especially that of a tuberculous character; and that the habitual use of it in large quantities would operate favorably in the prevention of such maladies, as cod-liver oil unquestionably does in the cure."

A most remarkable example of this is presented in the population of Iceland, which, notwithstanding the concurrence of every one of the circumstances usually considered favorable to the scrofulous diathesis, enjoys a most remarkable immunity from it, without any assignable cause other than the peculiar oleagiuous character of the diet usually employed.

Dr. Hooker, in a report on the diet of the sick, says: "1. Of all persons between the ages of fifteen and twenty-two years, more than one-fifth eat no fat meat. 2. That of the persons at the age of forty-five, all, except less than one in fifty, habitually use fat meat. 3. Of those who have abstained, a few acquire an appetite for it, and live to a good old age, while a great majority die of consumption before forty-five. 4. Of persons dying of consumption between the ages of fifteen and forty-five, nine-tenths, at least, have never used fat meats."

From the above facts and opinions, given by some of our first and most scientific physicians, hygienists and physiologists—those who have devoted a long life to this study—we are led to believe that a more general use of meats, especially fat meats, would largely prevent its development in those who have inherited it.

Our own observations, during some twenty years, in the practice of medicine, are in harmony with the above opinions. We have observed that in the rural districts, those children who were fond of fat meats were the healthy ones, and remained so; and that those who were scrofulous, or died early of consumption, were those who did not use and relish fat meats, or did not use them from false instructions received from "would-be philanthropists," called vegetarians. Our observations have been that no class of people were more liable to generate and entail scrofula and consumption than the low-fed vegetarians—those who believe the animal was never made to eat, but that all our food must be gathered from the vegetable kingdom; and no class are as free from generating it, or entailing it upon their issue, as those people who eat largely of beef and pork, and all forms of animal food; and more especially so if they were eaters of the fat parts of the animal.

Some children seem to have no appetite for fat food, but rather dislike it in any form; and unless such children eat very largely of starch or sugar elements, or use corn, the great fat-producing cereal, they will surely show disease in some form. Children who refuse all fat food are not healthy, and as they grow older will show plainly this unsoundness. A truly healthy child will some time like fat food; and it is a very rare circumstance to find a healthy child that will not eat sugar any and every time. We should try and form an appetite for fat food in the child who has none, as a safeguard against a tendency toward consumption; just as the physician will feed his patient on cod-liver oil to cure or postpone the disease.

A pure air, wholesome food—a large part of which shall be animal food of both fat and lean fibers—warm clothing for the limbs as well as for the bodies, and clean skins, will save every child from acquiring consumption, and prevent most who inherit it from developing it.—Newcomb's "When and How."

POPERY UNCHANGEABLE.

The following is part of an address delivered by Rev. H. J. Piggott, before the Wesleyan Missionary Society of London, England, recently, and is commended to the consideration of those Methodists who patronize Catholic schools:

"Do you say," asked Mr. Piggott, "the winter is changed because you sometimes get a fine day in December? Do you say that the tiger is changed because you went to a wild beast show and saw a man put his head into its mouth and got it out again? No; these are the exceptions. Popery changed! No; we know very well that she dares not use any longer the rack and the thumbscrew and the water torture, and all the rest, any more than political despotism dare use them now in Europe. But popery changed! Tell me, if you please, what lying legend she has disavowed. Tell me what retrograde principles she has abandoned. Tell me what Christ-dishonoring doctrine she has retracted. Popery changed! If any one believes it to be changed, let him go and study what popery is in Rome itself; let him study it there in those square miles of desert miasmatic Campagna, threaded by one solitary line of rail, opened only a few years since, and most unwillingly; let him study it in the ill-paved, ill-lighted, ill-drained, unsavery odors of the capital, which is now beginning to stir a little and brighten up a little with the life and improvements of modern civilization since the State was wrested from the church. Let him study it in what Roman Liberals of the present day and generation have to tell of the mean, vindictive, pitiless tyrannies of the government of the black petticoat; of the humiliations to which they have to submit in order to live at peace with it at all, and of the disabilities and vexations which drove into voluntary exile all souls who were too frank and noble to purchase peace at such a cost. Let him study it in the ignorance, the gross ignorance of the populace and the peasantry, and in the conventual ignorance, little better than utter ignorance, of the burgher dames and city ladies, for whom it was always thought sufficient if they could spell out their philotaire, and work a little embroidered millinery for the church altar. Let him study it in the miserable superstitions which have reduced the religion of the Son of God to mere fetichism and magic, but which have still been acted under the very eyes of the so-called head of the church, and therefore have received continually his sanction and authority. Let him study it in the Syllabus of the Pope himself, where he will find it fulminating at and anathematizing all the gains of modern progress, and the very axioms and basal principles of civil and religious liberty; where he will find it proclaimed in so many words that he is accursed who says the ecclesiastical authority has no right to call in the arm of the secular power; a declaration in which, even in this nineteenth century, all St. Bartholomew's massacre, all the horrors of the Inquisition, all the terrible Huguenot atrocities, and all our own Smithfield auto de fes are gathered up and vindicated. No; popery is not changed. She dare not show you here her paw and her fangs; but we have a right to say that what popery was up to September 20, 1870, in the city of Rome, that she is to-day."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Presbytorian missionhouse at Yeddo, Japan, was burned on April 22.

CONGREGATIONAL.—There are in the kingdom of Great Britain 2,800 Congregational churches, exclusive of about 3,000 stations in which divine service is conducted with greater or less regularity. The total number of ministers is 3,044.

THE Baptist Year Book shows for 1871, 8,047 Sunday schools of that denomination in the entire country, with 80,461 teachers, and 607,038 scholars; an increase of 2,796 schools, 23,946 teachers and 133,374 scholars over the report for 1870.

EDMOND DE PRESSENSE writes to the Watchman and Reflector that the meeting of the Synod of the National Reformed Church of France, which is soon to take place, "will certainly result in a separation between the Evangelical and Rationalistic parties."

DEATH OF THE REV. JAMES EVERETT. The Newcastle Chronicle announces the death of the Rev. James Everett, the Wesleyan reformer, author and preacher, at the age of eighty-eight. Mr. Everett will be remembered in connection with Mr. Dunn and Mr. Griffiths as the reputed authors of the famous "Fly Sheets."

BISHOP WILLIAMS has finished translating the four gospels and the Prayer Book into the Japanese tongue. He has lately been on a visit to Japan, and has organized a school for boys at Osaka, which he has placed in charge of the Rev. Arthur R. Morris, the missionary of the Episcopal Church at that place.

AT THE recent anniversary of the Baptist Missionary Union, Rev. J. Goble gave an account of his interviews with the Japanese embassy to this country, sought by them, in order to gain information respecting Christianity. The prince at the head of the embassy expressed the belief that Christianity will prevail in Japan.

WITHIN the last five years the people of Madagascar have erected nearly one hundred chapels for Christian worship at their own expense. There are ninety churches, with as many as five thousand members, now on the island. Government works are stopped on the Lord's day, and places for Christian worship are crowded.

AN IMPERIAL UKASE by the Emperor of Russia imposes new restrictions on Roman Catholic worship in Lithuania and the southwestern provinces of Russia. No open processions will be henceforth allowed in the streets, nor is the host suffered to be carried openly by priests on their way to dying persons to administer the sacrament.

REV. GEORGE LAWES, a missionary of the London Missionary Society, has lived in entire seclusion from Europeans, at Savage Island, for more than ten years. Now he has become not only the translator of the Bible, but he is the poet-laureate of the island, and the general adviser of the chiefs and people in all questions that concern their welfare.

THERE are in Switzerland 1,556,000 Protestants, against 1,084,655 Catholics, and the Catholics have gained ground so rapidly even at Geneva, the old cradle of Calvinism, that they muster now in that canton no less than 47,857, against 43,606 Protestants. On the other hand, there are in Switzerland 1,843,000 Germans, 646,000 French, 144,000 Italians, and 42,000 "Roumanches."

REV. DR. HEPBURN, of the Presbyterian mission to Yokohama, is now at Shanghai, carrying through the press the Japanese version of the Gospel of St. Mark, the result of the united labor of himself and of Rev. Dr. Brown, of the Reformed Church Mission also to Yokohama. Dr. Brown has just finished the revision of John's Gospel, and this also will be published, with that of Mark, before the return of Dr. Hepburn from China.

IT IS STATED that the new rationalist, Prof. Lœning, at Strasburg, has but two pupils. The famous Schenkel, at Heidelberg, has commenced his new term with but four students, and the "liberal" university of Giessen, in Hesse Darmstadt, begins the year without a single new pupil. While this surprising decline on the rationalistic side is seen, the evangelical professors at Erlangen and Leipsic have gathered more than four hundred students.

A COMMITTEE of the Ministerial Association, of Philadelphia, have made arrangements for the celebration, on the twentieth of November next, of the three hundredth anniversary of the formation of the first presbytery in England. Papers will be read on "Presbyterianism in Philadelphia," "in the United States," and "in other countries," and the formal opening of the new Presbyterian house will take place in the evening.

AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY.—The fortieth anniversary of this society was celebrated in New York on Thursday, May 23. One hundred and seven missionaries are now laboring in the South, and the field is extending. The missionaries in Mexico have been somewhat interrupted by the civil war, but are, nevertheless, pushing the good work forward.

THE FIRST SUNDAY SCHOOL IN AMERICA.—Miss Sarah Colt, who died at Paterson, New Jersey, May 17, at the age of ninety years, is said to have organized the first Sunday school in the United States. Her original idea was to teach the mill-boys to read and write, and from this the schools gradually grew into a means of exclusive religious instruction. Miss Colt began living in Paterson in 1734.

JAPAN.—The decree abolishing the edicts against Christianity in Japan was not issued without trouble. The Buddhist priests, who have been despoiled of their lands, made solemn protest, and carried their opposition so far as to attempt to force their way into the Emperor's grounds to interview the monarch. They were met at the great gate of the palace by the guard, and five were cut down before the deputation retreated.

FRENCH METHODISM.—A Paris correspondent writes: "Methodism in France had, before the late war with Germany, 30 ministers, 22 evangelists, 101 local preachers, and 2,049 members, with 167 on trial. The Annual Conference was not able to assemble in 1871, and the losses during the war were very severe. The church members, instead of increasing, have decreased 100, and the entire interests of the church have suffered."

THE orthodox or Old Catholic movement is steadily gaining ground, even in France. There is now an Old Catholic committee in Paris; and we hear that it has recently applied to the municipal council for the use of a chapel belonging to the city, and not now occupied. It is expected that, as soon as an Old Catholic church is opened in Paris, several priests will join the Abbe Michaud in conducting the services in it, using the ancient liturgy thoroughly purged from the errors of popery.

REV. P. O. POWERS and all members of the mission families escaped without injury from the earthquake of Antioch. The Protestant church and community, under the care of a native pastor, suffered severely. At least four of their number were killed, and many others were more or less injured. Their place of worship, the American chapel, being severely shaken, the schools, pastor's house, and several houses of members having fallen, services were held on the Sunday after the earthquake in a garden on the mountain-side, near St. Paul's Gate.

A VIENNA CORRESPONDENCE, dated March 31, asserts that the Croatian Bishop Strossmayer, having steadily refused to acknowledge the dogma of the infallibility, has received a missive from the Roman Curia, wherein he is informed that unless, within the term of six weeks, he gives in his adhesion to the dogma, he will be deposed and excommunicated. Strossmayer's friends declare that he will not yield; and the Old Catholics of Germany are said to be looking to him for the episcopal element which has hitherto been lacking in their movement.

BRITISH PRIMITIVE METHODISTS.—The British Primitive Methodist Church now includes about 162,000 members, 1,000 ministers, 404,000 hearers, and chapel property to the value of over $5,000,000. April 3 was the centenary anniversary of the birth of Mr. Bourne, who, with Rev. W. Clowes, was the principal agent in the formation of the Primitive Methodist Church, and the circuits throughout the connection generally turned the occasion to good account in the raising of special contributions for the benefit of the Sunday school work—a work in which the founder took very great interest.

QUAKER SOCIETY.—Throughout the country Quakers are at present deeply interested in the progress of a revival among them. Cheering meetings have been held in the West, and more recently in the East. The first revival in New York, held at Farmington, Monroe county, was eminently successful. Not only were the numbers of the society greatly increased, but other churches were greatly benefited. Another series of meetings was also held a short time ago at Poughkeepsie, where the Friends' house of worship was not large enough to accommodate the numbers that gathered, and, at the request of one of the leading clergymen of the city, they occupied the large church edifice of his own denomination. The meetings in Brooklyn have been in progress since the thirtieth of November. Two of those are held daily, and a constantly increasing interest is manifested. They are largely participated in by the ministers and members of other denominations in the city. One noticeable feature is that while a very great interest is manifested, there is an utter absence of everything like intemperate excitement.

WHAT TO DO.—YOUNG MEN.

There is at all times a crop of boys coming forward into early manhood; and especially at this season, when the colleges and institutions of learning are dismissing their graduates, there are many who are revolving the question, What to do? There is, however, before this a more important matter, and this is, What to be? The character to be aimed at and formed, the religious and the intellectual, as Christians and useful members of society, is first of all. With a well-defined purpose in this respect it will be easier to choose the calling of life. The kingdom of heaven must be before everything else. The secular pursuit pitched upon will be determined very much by its prospective bearings upon the higher elements of character. Everything incompatible with the duties and responsibilities of the Christian life should be renounced at once. All doors of enterprise are closed which do not admit honor and piety along with the prospects of worldly success. Besides the usual considerations of prudence and worldly wisdom, God is to be consulted. Paul's first vision of Christ awoke in him the true inquiry: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

It is well if the question be earnestly and truthfully asked, as embracing the duty and necessity of doing something. A life of idleness is a crime in all. If education and wealth chance to unite as the lot of a young man, still an active and laborious life is necessary for the formation of character, and to enable him to meet his responsibilities to God and to society. Another delusion to be overcome is that which predestinates educated young men to professional life. They are doubtless fitted for this class of pursuits above others by the advantages they have enjoyed; but with all their learning they may possibly do better at something else. Education is not wasted when its possessor learns and follows a trade, or devotes himself to agriculture or other practical affairs. Better be a first-class carpenter, a good machinist, a tolerable farmer, than a tenth-rate lawyer or doctor. Better far for many who languish as teachers in the school room, and fret with dyspepsia at the counting desk, to be out in the wholesome air, and using both muscle and brain, as the God of nature designed. Education qualifies alike for all pursuits, and, again, it qualifies for none. The nature of the man—mental aptitudes, tastes and temperament—and the physical constitution are to be taken into the account after the diploma has been won. Also the social and industrial circumstances, the temper and tendencies of the times, and the fields which invite and promise best to enterprise and industry, are to be carefully studied. The right selection is much in a world of spirited competition, where honest success can only be reached by real ability and severe labor. Many a young man has failed in law or medicine who might have made a fair merchant, or even a better brick-mason. The business to be chosen is that for which there is both the greatest acquired and natural fitness. Success in what are sometimes regarded as the inferior pursuits is to be preferred to failure in the higher callings. The way in which a man should go is that to which he should train himself. Be it plowing, merchandise, literature or shoving the jack-plane, let him take to that and make the most of it. Intelligence and industry, attended by manly frugality and economy, are ordinarily sure of their reward.

But success in any calling must be earned. Riches and position, honestly obtained, are the result of long and persevering effort. To escape toil is too often the supreme wish, and the false notion obtains that there are pursuits which yield honor and profit without labor. This is often the fatal error of young men. They should enter upon life with the conviction rooted and grounded in them that there is no excellence without application. If they have not made up their minds to work, to eat bread in the sweat of their face, and to reach the goal of their hopes by the most strenuous effort, they are wholly unprepared for any course of honest and useful living. Whatever men may gain by stealing, by sponging, by sacrificing honor and conscience, to accomplish anything legitimately they must agonize. A determination to shirk hard work, to be suddenly rich, and to find an easy road to fortune, will prove a snare and a delusion. With these few and plain principles to start with, the question What to do? is greatly simplified. With religion as the basis of all, with the careful study of their own aptitudes and the fields of enterprise around them, and with minds made up to work for the prizes of honor, fortune and usefulness, young men are not likely to miss the path for which they are providentially designed. We say to them, Go to work at once. Take hold of something, and do not wait for opportunities. These will open more certainly and favorably to the busy than to the idle.

And start yourselves. Thousands are lounging about pleading the want of means to begin, and perhaps that there is nothing for them to do. Young men should begin by helping themselves. With health, strong hands and a clear brain they should feel equal to the duty of taking care of themselves, and of beginning life without asking favors of any. Energy, industry and health are capital enough; and when to these are added the advantages of education, it is a shame to require more. Nothing to do too often means that they cannot begin at the top rather than at the bottom of the hill, and that there is nothing for gloved hands and idle brains. There is always work of some sort for everybody, and work which will pay if properly taken hold of. Life is no lottery. Its prizes are not subject to a fortuitous distribution, but men generally get what they earn, and reap as they sow. An inert gentility is the bane of many young men—an idleness constrained by the pride of position, which keeps them back from independent and manly exertion. These false and unworthy notions must yield to the better conviction that there is nothing meaner than idle dependence. Manual labor, the severest handicraft, the hardest drudgery which yields the wages of industry, are honorable and glorious in comparison. Beginning at the bottom of the ladder, patience, perseverance and economy will reach the highest round in due time. With a beneficent Providence smiling upon him, no young man need despair of success. Let him begin with godliness and stick to his religious principles, let him trample false pride under his feet, and let him strip for the battle, and he will come forth a victor, purer, nobler and holier for the obstacles which he has encountered.

THE WORK IN CALIFORNIA.

Rev. Dabney P. Ball, writing to the St. Louis Christian Advocate, speaks of the state of our church in California as follows:

The general tenor of the news from the church is, indeed, most gratifying and encouraging. Surely God is accomplishing a great and glorious work through our instrumentality.

It has been my privilege recently to attend several District Conferences within the bounds of this (Pacific) Annual Conference. I observed very carefully all the indications of the condition of the work as evolved in these district meetings. The results and the outlook, to my apprehension, are very gratifying and full of promise. The state of the church, in nearly every locality, is healthful and her spirit aggressive. The preachers of this Conference compare very creditably with the older Conferences in zeal, ability and effectiveness. They have already accomplished important results in organizing, expanding and developing the work on this coast; and still their watchword is "Onward!" In the acquisition of property, churches and parsonages, they are in advance of some of the older Conferences, and are more alive to this essential condition of permanent success than ever. Yet they are now sensible of having lost many golden opportunities; but having learned wisdom by experience, are seeking diligently to make amends. With the present spirit of enterprise I predict that, in a few years, there will be in the Pacific Conference more churches and parsonages, for the dimensions of the work, than in any Conference with which I am conversant, unless, indeed, others should wake up equally to this vital duty.

It is but candid to admit that our cause in a few places seems to languish. This, however, is the case also where the organization is much older and has had less formidable difficulties to encounter. These instances of depression are exceptional—not the rule—and are doubtless only temporary. They are not really peculiar to any denomination or to any locality. They are sometimes occasioned by the varying providential surroundings, the fluctuations of the population, or of the straightened temporal resources of the membership, and sometimes to a want of judgment or delinquencies in administration. In cases of the former class, the losses by the shiftings of population from one place are usually compensated by the accessions from the same population settling in other neighborhoods. These variations are yet a peculiarity of California, where many of the people have not yet lost the adventurous spirit of new settlers; but this restlessness is subsiding, and communities will rapidly become more stable, as agricultural pursuits and legitimate commerce are rapidly developing and becoming the dominant avocation, rather than mining and wild speculation. In cases of the latter class, where failures have resulted from mismanagement or unfaithfulness, the bitter lessons of experience will impart greater wisdom for future guidance. It is a cheering truth that even from the worst and most humiliating experiences the most salutary and profitable lessons may be deduced. So God graciously counterworks evil itself so as to evolve from it the ultimate good of his people and the success of his cause. Upon the whole, my brief connection with the work on this coast, and my acquaintance with the preachers, have inspired me with bright anticipations for the future of our church, and with a high regard for these true, self-sacrificing men of God, among whom my lot has been cast.

Among the weak points in this Conference is the charge in San Francisco, which I occupy. Its position years ago was exceedingly favorable, but causes similar to those I have named have conspired for some years to cripple and depress us here. Yet there is an element of emphatic and vital spirituality remaining in the church, furnishing ground of hope for its future, and a moral leverage upon which, by the blessing of God, it will arise and assert its position and power among the churches of San Francisco.

A thread can hide a star; a sixpence can hide the view of everything around us; and a man with but a little of this fleeting world may blind his mind, harden his heart, and he may lose himself and be cast away at last.

Beauty without grace is a hook without bait.—Talleyrand.

Theological Schools in the M. E. Church.

A contributor to the New York Christian Advocate writes as follows of the beginning of these schools. The items are of special interest to us at this time.

These schools have assumed so much prominence of late, and have been enriched with such large endowments, that it may be well to advert for a moment to their earlier history—to the time when they were but of small repute, and but little known. I am not sure but that their first advocate was Dr. Abel Stevens. In a speech delivered by him long ago on theological education he described in the most glowing terms the Hoxton School, situated in the northeast suburb of London, and at that time under the care of the Rev. W. Entwistle, who was peculiarly fitted for so important a charge. In regard to its domestic arrangements, he speaks of it as "a ministerial household—a school of the prophets." There they were trained, under the most favorable influences, for the ministry, in the spirit, and according to the economy, of Methodist itinerancy. All was in harmony with the strictest usages of Wesleyan Methodism. Dr. Stevens, visiting the school, seeing its order, which was almost divine, tells us that "it set his heart on fire." He also in the same speech informs us that Dr. Fisk, when in England, paid a visit to the school, "and came home sanguine in the purpose to have one among us." Dr. Olin also called to see the Hoxton School, and was so favorably impressed that he sent "a centenary draft to Dr. Bangs of $100 with which to start the project."

In conformity with the intention he had formed at Hoxton, on his return from his European tour, Dr. Fisk established a department in the Wesleyan University for the study of Hebrew, of which the writer of this article took charge, having been appointed professor of Hebrew. This was some time in the course of the year 1838. This connection lasted some four or five years, when, by invitation of the trustees of Newbury Seminary, the writer went to Newbury, Vermont, having been elected by the board president of the Newbury Biblical Institute, and professor of the Hebrew language and literature. It was in the spring term of 1843, but nearly two or three months earlier than this, that the institute was fairly opened, the trustees of Newbury Seminary having appropriated the south room, on the first floor of their large and commodious building, for the use of the institute—a room consecrated in the years that followed by many pleasing and sacred associations and recollections. Thirteen students, from Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Lower Canada, were the first on the list; the highest number reached at any one time during the continuance of the school at Newbury was twenty-one. In 1845 Dr. Dempster became connected with the institute; in the fall of this year it was fully organized, and the faculty constituted as follows: Rev. Elijah Hedding, president; Rev. John Dempster, D. D., professor of theology; Rev. W. M. Willett, A. M., professor of Hebrew and biblical literature; Rev. Abel Stevens, A. M., professor of sacred rhetoric.

Soon after this the institute was removed from Newbury to Concord, New Hampshire; its history from that time to this is more generally known. Its present location at Boston, Massachusetts, is probably the most suitable one for such an institution.

A CELEBRITY.

Dr. Crary, of the Central Christian Advocate, went to hear one of the celebrities of Brooklyn. The following extract is good for edifying:

We heard Talmadge last Sunday. He is a man of middle age and size, weight about one hundred and fifty, light complexion, keen eye, finely-cut features, exceedingly plain in manner, dress and style. His voice is monotonous and utterly ungoverned. He violates all the laws of elocution. His words are the simplest to be found in the language—very nursery words. He is almost unnaturally inelegant in his attitudes and sometimes in his speech, but it is all his own. There is not the slightest taint of pedantry or servility in anything he says or does. There are very few preachers in the West that are as simple, artless and perfectly natural as he. His text was from Luke xv, 13: "And not many days after the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country." His sketch of the departure of the young man was simple, homelike, unaffected and touching. Many an eye moistened at the description of the parting. He made his application as he went along, showing that all of us had gone away from our Father's house. He did not stretch after big words, nor use once the pitiful and driveling language of an apologist for Christ's plainness and truthfulness. His conviction of God's truth seemed the basis of his ardent pleadings. He closed with an old Methodistic exhortation, urging the people to come back to their Father's house, and to come now. It reminded us of preaching we heard in the West when a boy, and moved the whole soul to better thoughts and new resolves. The whole service was Methodistic—that is, according to what Methodism once was. The two most distinctly marked and real Methodist churches we know of here are Plymouth Church and Talmadge's Tabernacle. We were astonished, at the tabernacle, to hear Mr. Talmadge give out the old hymn:

"Blow ye the trumpet, blow!"

And then we were more surprised that the usher took us where the choir ought to be, as we supposed. The organist seemed to be a man of sense, and the leader of the singing went to the platform, the congregation rose and sung lustily that grand old hymn, to its own grand old tune, and before the first verse was out we found ourselves singing at the top of our voice, as though in a Methodist revival meeting:

"The year of jubilee is come,
Return, ye ransomed sinners, home."

Is it possible that any Methodist can come here and share in this worship, and then go to a church frigid with formalism and blasted with the mildew of pride, and be contented to sit, a silent witness of an operatic performance, disgraceful anywhere but in a theater! Bless God for such singing as we heard last Sunday! If the Methodists have abandoned such worship, we are glad that the other churches have found out its power; but we are humiliated that our folly has driven thousands of thousands from our churches. Dressing ourselves in the cast-off flummery of ecclesiastical foppery, we cut a most ridiculous figure. The grand singing of the whole people closes, and then the sermon comes full from the heart—an appeal for an immediate return to God of every wanderer. Where are we? Is this a Presbyterian church? Where is a Methodist church like it? The people sing again, not some extravagant piece of modern music, got up to tickle the ears of the polite. They sing with warm, worshipful hearts:

"Show pity, Lord, O Lord, forgive,
Let a repentant rebel live."

We went up and thanked Mr. Talmadge for his sermon, and for the rich blessing we had found in worshiping with his people. We are more than ever disgusted with all sorts of dilletantism in religion. It is not great, nor attractive. It is mean, hollow, beggarly and dead to putrefaction. People will not be fed with husks in our churches, even if they do sometimes eat them in the desert with the swine. We must go back to the honest simplicity of our fathers' worship, or the people will forsake our altars. Operatic singing and soulless preaching will be the death of us if we do not abandon it.

PHASES OF POPERY.

From an article in the New York Observer, by Bishop Cleveland Cox, we make the following extract:

When, three hundred years since, the better class of minds in the Roman communion began to see the position in which the Council of Trent had placed them, there arose a struggle within that communion, to which no adequate attention has been given by Protestant authors. The truly great Bossuet became, a century later, the master-spirit of this movement in France; and the efforts of his life were concentrated on the creation of a theoretical Romanism, which should, as far as possible, modify the system created by Trent, in the spirit of a more ancient period. He arrayed the patristic constitutions against those which were purely papal. And forasmuch as the Trent creed nominally invoked the authority of the old Catholic fathers, he was able to demand an interpretation of the Trent doctrines and even of the new discipline, with some respect for these more ancient authorities. On this principle he gave the world an exposition of Trent doctrine, which the Jesuits abhor; and he succeeded, in 1682, in erecting certain legal enactments in France, not less offensive to the Jesuits, which have secured to the French Church a shadow of independence. This system of Bossuet is what is known as "Gallicanism." The Jesuit doctrines have been named by the French and Germans, "Ultramontanism"—i. e., the views which are supreme "beyond the mountains," in Italy. Now it need not be argued that, in a word, "Ultramontanism" is practical Romanism. This theoretical Romanism of the Gallicans has sufficed to keep some nobler minds within the pale of the papal communion, and it has served to seduce silly Protestants; but it has ordinarily been powerless at the Roman court. It has been barely tolerated by the Popes; sometimes with a crafty policy, but generally with undissembled contempt.

The state of Protestantism in Germany during the fifteenth century, as depicted by Prof. Kahnis, (and even in this century, as is confessed by Baron Bunsen,) has forced a certain class of minds to a nominal union with Rome on this mild and theoretical system. Moehler, the pious author of an attractive work on "Symbolism," has been, for a generation, the solace of the German mind, so far as it has sought repose in Romanism. His delusive generalizing has furnished such men as Dollinger with their grand apology. They have interpreted the Trent creed mildly and moderately, almost in the spirit of the Ratisbon Conference, and they have boldly denounced many of the evils of popular Romanism as no real part of their religion. In particular, they have enlarged upon the papal infallibility. Of certain Popes they have said, with Moehler, "hell hath swallowed them up;" and all the more monstrous acts and proclamations of the Roman pontiffs they have abjured as mere personal crimes, to which they were not committed.

The Italians call Pius the Ninth "the White Pope," that is, the sham Pope; "the Black Pope," that is, the real pontiff is the General of the Jesuits. These Jesuits have staked everything upon their "Syllabus," and are resolved to maintain their own supremacy under the pretended supremacy of the Pope. The political alienation of modern Europe is to be overcome through the tremendous power of their spiritual despotism. To the success of this scheme the abject submission of all Romanists is necessary: hence the Gallican doctrines must be rendered impossible henceforth. All Romanists must be committed to whatever Jesuits may decree, through whatever Popes may proclaim. Hence the Council of the Vatican, and its decree of July 18, 1870.

"We thought," says an English divine, "that the fires of the Inquisition had gone out, and that the murders of St. Bartholomew's day might be consigned to forgetfulness. This dogma has revived all. Every sentence in favor of persecution which Popes have ever fulminated is clothed, henceforth, with the quality of absolute truth." A happy inconsistency has hitherto permitted Roman Catholics to be tolerant and yet true to their faith; henceforward there will be no choice for them between intolerance and unbelief."

Dollinger and his associates can no longer deceive themselves. They wake up to the actual; they can no longer live upon their theories. They see where they stood; they do not yet see that the Trent Council placed them just where this council discovers them. But they see clearly, and Germany sees with them, that the time has come for rectifying mistakes. At the same time, voices are heard in Italy and in France, "deep calling unto deep." I need not suggest to Americans how vastly significant to us and to our future are these voices. There is no country in the world which lies so open and defenseless to the operations of the Jesuits as this great republic.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES.

The regular examination of the classes will be conducted July 3–5.

The commencement sermon will be delivered by the Rev. William V. Tudor, of New Orleans, on Sunday, July 7, at eleven A. M.

On Monday night will be the exhibition of the preparatory department.

On Tuesday, the ninth, at eleven A. M., the president will deliver an address to the literary societies.

On Tuesday night will be the exhibition of the literary societies.

The next term begins on the first Monday in October.

C. G. Andrews, President.

The Rev. Henry Hanesworth has been spending a week with us. He preached, June 16, two good sermons in Tulip Street church. He comes highly recommended from the Newbury circuit, Berkshire, England, by the Rev. Messrs. Duffill, Kirtlan and Jenkin, Wesleyan ministers, and the official members of the circuit. He landed at Norfolk, June 4, and spent a Sunday in that city, where he preached, in Cumberland Street church. Four other preachers, we understand, have come over to this country from England, bound to New Orleans, induced to come by a communication in the Methodist Recorder from the Rev. William Shepherd, of the North Mississippi Conference.—Bishop Keener and the editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will doubtless hear from them, and find them plenty of work.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Obituaries.

Henry L. Moss was born in Warren county, Georgia, October 30, 1815, and died in Mansfield, Louisiana, May 3, 1872, in his fifty-seventh year. His funeral was preached at his own house, and a large procession followed him to his grave. He was a good citizen, and as such everybody reverenced him. He was a man of liberal views and large benevolence. His liberality abounded to the poor, to the preachers and to the church. Many of the preachers of the Louisiana Conference and the Bishops of our church, when they see this notice, will remember his kindness with pleasant emotions, and breathe a silent prayer for the bereaved family. In his last illness, which was protracted many weeks, he professed faith in Christ, and gave evidence that he was prepared for his change.

J. P.

Rhodie Mosely was snatched away in her fourteenth year. Death's hated herald—disease—came one quiet and beautiful Sabbath eve, and ere the next day's sun had folded night's robes around him, the swift-winged monster himself had come, and her pure, sweet young spirit had flown, like the chrysalis, from its shell—had,

"O'er the path by mortal never trod, Sprung to its source—the bosom of its God," and weeping parents, brothers, sisters and friends were bending heart-stricken o'er her pallid form. Her pastor had observed with commending gratification that Rhodie and her little brother were always at Sunday school, even when no one else came. She loved that nursery of heaven, and we feel assured that from the nursery she has ascended to the upper courts.

We laid her slumbering form away to rest, through the flitting years to come, in the beautifully-shaded cemetery of old Union chapel. There sweet-throated songsters and soft-murmuring zephyrs, amid the emerald-robed boughs above, sing her requiem in sweet, melodious strains; and the gentle little rivers, silently wandering by, the beautiful meadow lying alongside, and the mild blue sky above, complacently smile responses. There "sweet be her rest" till, united with her heaven-born spirit, she is transported to the shores of "the beautiful river that flows by the throne of God." May her sorrowing parents feel that there is one more vine-tendril binding them still more firmly to the skies.

Advocate Press for Sale. — Our press is too small. Our present size, 29 by 43 inches, is the largest we can print on it. The increase of business and demands of our readers require that we should part with our beautiful Hoe cylinder printing machine, which, with eighteen pounds of steam, will print from thirteen hundred to fifteen hundred per hour. See the work, as in our issue, and call or send a competent judge on Mondays or Wednesdays to see it in motion, if you wish to buy. We will entertain propositions from first-class manufacturers for exchange. Address

Our Agent for London and Liverpool.—Robert Babington, Esq., will represent the claims of the Christian Advocate during the season in London and Liverpool, and other parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. E. E. F. Ross, our resident advertising agent, is now on a brief tour through the West and North, and we commend him to the attention of our patrons, and shall be thankful for courtesies extended to him. They are assured that Mr. Ross has no other business, but devotes his entire time to the paper, and is entitled to all the consideration of one of its business corps. Mr. Ross may be found at the Sherman House, No. 1 West Twenty-Sixth street.

Plastic Slate Roofing.—We direct the attention of persons engaged in building to the advertisement of Mr. Edward Thompson, manufacturer, 184 Peter street, New Orleans.

Sherman House, New York.—We take pleasure in calling the attention of persons visiting New York to the Sherman House, located at No. 1 West Twenty-Sixth street, near Fifth avenue, and in the immediate vicinity of Madison square—a quiet, home-like house in a beautiful portion of the city, and conducted by a proprietor whose assiduous and untiring efforts to promote the comfort of his guests entitle him to a liberal patronage. Mr. Elkins, the proprietor above alluded to, is a polished gentleman, as well as a skillful caterer.

The New Wilson Under-Feed Sewing Machine, which is advertised in another column, is certainly a first-class machine, and it will be well for purchasers to call at 189 Canal street, where they may have an opportunity of observing the simplicity, lightness and regularity of its action. We have just returned from an inspection of the machine, the result of which is highly satisfactory. The reduced prices at which these machines are offered will place them within the reach of many who could not afford to buy at the rate of other first-class machines. See advertisement.

A $10 Sewing Machine.—We confess that we have not usually been favorably impressed with cheap sewing machines; at the same time, however, we have felt the necessity for some machine more simple of construction, less cumbersome and less expensive than the majority of those in use. Another necessity more deeply felt was an invention, practicable, without the foot-power so injurious to the health of some who use them. These necessities are thought to be met in the Beckwith machine, advertised in this issue of our paper. The American Agriculturist says: "We are prepared to indorse the $10 Beckwith machine as one worthy of being secured at once by all who cannot secure an expensive machine, and many who have larger machines will want this in addition." The Scientific American says: "We have never seen a sewing machine that will work with so little expenditure of power as this. It is self-feeding, the stitch may be made long or short, it will hem and tuck, and sews with facility through a number of thicknesses of muslin." A full description may be found in the Scientific American of March 9 and the American Agriculturist of March, 1872.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

Undisputed Facts.—It has been truly and significantly said that domestic happiness is more dependent on good digestion than virtuous creeds or moral codes. If the dogma holds, the oracle can be consulted by a prompt application to Price, the Delphic author of the Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Wherever, within the length and breadth of the land, Price's Bitters have penetrated, every household has been illumined by the sunshine of an unclouded joy, and every family reveled in the sweets of health and contentment. The sparkling eye, the ruddy cheek, the cheerful smile and happy glance, no less than the elastic step and the undaltering tread, what are they but the eloquent tellitales of some vitalizing elixir? No secret Botany holds the charm, no scientific alchemy creates the spell. The days of miracles are gone; the magic, mysteriously working wonders have passed away, and the age is a plain, practical one; give us a simple topic that, by a happy amalgamation, restores to energy and strength the enervated system. Take Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters, and you bid an eternal farewell to such unwelcome guests as dyspepsia, indigestion, nervousness, neuralgia, flatulency and debility.

Fathers and Mothers.—If you occupy these relations now, or are about to do so, study well your constitution. If you have acquired or inherited scrofula or any disease which may be transmitted to your offspring, it is your solemn duty to eradicate it. Thousands of children are now suffering from the effects of poisonous disease transmitted to them from their parents. The thought is terrible. You can save yourselves much sadness and solicitude, and your dear little ones much pain and unhappiness, by the timely use of Dr. Tutt's Sarsaparilla. It will surely eradicate the taint from your system, or if it has already been entailed upon your child, give it at once this valuable preparation, and its system will be renovated and restored to soundness.

Montgomery Co., N. C., Sept. 11, 1869.

Dr. William H. Tutt—Sir: Please accept the heartfelt thanks of a mother who was well-nigh driven to despair by the sad condition of an only child. My little boy has been afflicted with scrofula ever since his birth, and after trying every remedy that was recommended, and several physicians had pronounced him past all hope, I accidentally heard of your Sarsaparilla. It was so highly recommended that I concluded to try it, but I must confess with very little faith. He has taken nine of the bottles you sent me, and I am happy in being able to say that he is almost well; and I believe by the time he takes the dozen he will be perfectly restored to health. He has gained flesh, has a fine appetite, and now walks two miles to school. I shall always remember you with gratitude.

EDWARD THOMPSON, Manufacturer,
Je27 1m 184 Peter street, New Orleans.

State of Louisiana,

Parish of Orleans,

City of New Orleans.

Be it known that on this twentieth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-two, and of the Independence of the United States of America the ninety-sixth, before me, Andrew Hero, Jr., a Notary Public in and for the Parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, duly commissioned and qualified, and in the presence of the witnesses hereinafter named and undersigned, personally came and appeared the several persons, residents of this city, whose names are hereto subscribed, who declared that, availing themselves of the provisions of the Statutes of Louisiana relative to the organization of CORPORATIONS in this State, they have covenanted and agreed, and do by these presents covenant and agree, and bind themselves, and those whom they represent, to form themselves into a corporation for the objects, and under the stipulations, regulations and obligations following, to wit:

Article First.

The name and style of this corporation shall be THE CONSOLIDATED PORTABLE GAS-LIGHT COMPANY OF NEW ORLEANS.

Article Second.

The domicile of this Association shall be the city of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, and its object shall be the manufacture, sale and use of Carburetted Hydrogen Gas, and the manufacture and sale of Gas Machines; and the sale of the right to use said machines in the States of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Arkansas and Florida. The company shall also have power to purchase patent rights for the manufacture, use and sale of other gas machines than those now owned by them for the above-named States, or for any other States for which they may acquire patents.

Article Third.

The said corporation shall have and enjoy succession by its corporate name for the period of twenty five years; shall contract, sue and be sued. It shall hold, receive, purchase, sell and otherwise convey, as well as mortgage and hypothecate, under its corporate name, property, both real and personal, movable and immovable; shall name and appoint such managers, directors and officers as its interest or convenience may require; it shall make and establish such by-laws, rules and regulations for the proper management of its business and affairs as may be necessary and proper, and shall possess generally all such powers and privileges as are given by law to corporations. All legal processes shall be served on the president of the company. The company shall have a seal with such device as the Board of Directors may determine.

Article Fourth.

The capital stock of this corporation shall be Fifty Thousand Dollars, divided into five hundred shares of One Hundred Dollars each, two hundred and thirty shares of which are to be declared full-paid and transferred to the present owners of the patent rights and franchises which are to form the basis of the operations of this Association; and are to be in full payment for the transfer to the company of all such rights and franchises. Ten per centum of all other stock subscribed shall be paid at the time of subscription; ten per centum more within thirty days; and ten per centum more within the next thirty days, making in all thirty per centum of subscription to the capital stock to be paid in cash within sixty days from date of subscription. The remainder may be called for by the Board of Directors in installments not to exceed ten per centum within any thirty consecutive days.

All installments called for shall be paid within ten days after due notice be given thereof, and any neglect or refusal to pay the same shall forfeit to the corporation the entire stock of such delinquent stockholder, together with the amount paid thereon and all accumulations, interest or benefit thereto belonging; provided, that the Board of Directors may extend said payments for a term not exceeding sixty days, upon the payment of interest thereon at the rate of eight per cent. per annum.

Article Fifth.

The capital stock of this corporation may be increased to ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, or any part thereof, whenever deemed necessary by the Board of Directors, and they shall have the right of fixing the time and manner of paying the same; provided, that subscriptions to any increase of the capital stock shall be open first for ten legal days to those already stockholders, pro rata, on the amount of stock owned by each, and if not all taken up, then secondly to the stockholders at will for three legal days, after which any remaining stock may be open for public subscription.

Article Sixth.

Dividends may be declared by the Board of Directors, either annually, semi-annually or quarterly; provided, however, that where the amount of such dividend may exceed the rate of ten per cent. per annum on amount paid up on stock, all such excess of ten per cent. per annum shall be credited upon any unpaid balance of the subscribed stock, until such subscribed stock shall have been declared full-paid.

No certificate of stock shall be issued until the same shall have been declared by the Board of Directors fully paid up, and no transfer of less than one share of the capital stock shall be made on the books of the Association.

Article Seventh.

The powers of the corporation are vested in the Board of Directors, consisting of six stockholders, (three of whom shall form a quorum for the transaction of business,) who shall be elected annually on the second Tuesday in June, beginning with the second Tuesday in June, 1874, by the stockholders, at such place in the city of New Orleans as may be selected, after ten days' advertisement in one of the daily newspapers published in the city of New Orleans, or by special notice to each stockholder; said Directors to hold office for one year, or until their successors are elected. The fiscal year of the company shall end on the thirty-first of May of each year, and the newly-elected Board of Directors shall take their seats on the first Monday in July following.

Any stockholder shall be eligible as a Director who may own five shares of the stock of the Association, and who is not a delinquent subscriber to the stock of the company.

All elections of Directors shall be by ballot, and held under the superintendence of a committee of three stockholders, to be appointed by the Board of Directors. Every owner of stock shall be entitled to one vote for each share of stock owned by him, her or them; provided, that no one shall be entitled to vote on any share or shares that have not stood in his, her or their names on the books of the Association for sixty days prior to any such election; also, that no one shall be entitled to vote at any election of stockholders who has not paid up all the installments called for by the terms of the charter or by the Board of Directors.

Proxies may vote when the authority is in writing. A plurality of the votes cast shall be sufficient to elect.

Article Eighth.

No stockholder shall ever be held liable for the contracts or faults of this corporation in any further sum than the unpaid balance due to the Association on the shares owned by him; nor shall any mere informality in organization have the effect of rendering this Charter null, or of exposing a stockholder to any liability beyond the amount of his stock.

No transfer of any stock not full-paid shall be made without the consent of the Board of Directors.

Article Ninth.

Any modification, additions to, or any changes in this act of incorporation may be made or the corporation may be dissolved by two-thirds of the stock represented and voting at any meeting of stockholders called for that specific purpose; provided due notice shall have been given of such meeting as provided in Article Seventh.

Article Tenth.

At the expiration of the term of this act of incorporation, or at its earlier termination, as provided in the preceding article, the affairs of the Association shall be liquidated, its debts and all other liabilities paid, and the balance of its funds, if any, shall be divided pro rata among the stockholders; all to be done under the supervision of a Board of three Commissioners, to be appointed by the Board of Directors, who shall continue to act until the business of the Association shall be entirely closed and liquidated; and in the case of the death of either one or two of them, the survivor or survivors shall act.

Article Eleventh.

The Board of Directors shall elect annually, at their first meeting, a President and such other officers, clerks or agents as shall be necessary to carry on the operations and objects of the corporation for such time as they may choose; they shall fix the salaries of all officers and the amount of security to be required from each. The Board shall also have the power to fill vacancies caused by the death, resignation or insolvency of any of its members.

The following-named persons shall constitute the first Board of Directors, and they shall hold their seats until the first Monday in July, 1874, or until their successors shall have been elected and qualified in accordance with the provisions of this charter, viz.: John L. Dunnica, Fergus Hathorn, Robert M. Walmsley, Henry N. Sorla, John Lawrence Gubernator and Joseph Walker Champlin.

THUS DONE AND PASSED, in my office, at New Orleans aforesaid, in the presence of George Cenas and Paul A. Conand, witnesses, both of this city, who hereunto sign their names with the parties and me, the said Notary, the day and date aforesaid.

Original signed: J. L. Gubernator, F. Hathorn, E. C. Palmer & Co., C. L. Walmsley & Co., and others.

The Child's Corner.

THE BIRDS' ORCHESTRA.

BY CELIA THAXTER.

Bobolink shall play the violin,
Great applause to win;
Lonely, sweet and sad, the meadow-lark
Plays the oboe. Hark!
That inspired bugle with a soul—
'Tis the oriole;
Yellow-bird the clarionet shall play,
Blithe and clear and gay.
Purple finch what instrument will suit?
He can play the flute.
Fire-winged backbirds sound the merry fife.
Soldiers without strife;
And the robins wind the mellow horn
Loudly, eve and morn.
Who shall clash the cymbals? Jay and crow;
That is all they know.
Hylas twang their harps so weird and high,
Such a tuneful cry!
And to roll the deep, melodious drum,
Lo, the bullfrogs come!
Then the splendid chorus, who shall sing
Of so fine a thing?
Who the names of the performers call
Truly, one and all?
Blue-bird, bunting, cat bird, chickadee,
(Phœbe-bird is he,)
Swallow, creeper, crossbill, cuckoo, dove,
Wee wren that I love;
Brisk fly-catcher, finches—what a crowd!
King-bird whistling loud;
Sweet rose-breasted grossbeak, vireo, thrush,
Hear these two, and hush:
Scarlet tanager, song-sparrow small,
(Dearer he than all;
At the first sound of his friendly voice
Saddest hearts rejoice:)
Redpoll, nuthatch, thrasher, plover gray—
Curlew did I say?
What a jangling all the grakles make!
Is it some mistake?
Anvil chorus yellow-hammer strike,
And the wicked shrike
Harshly creaks like some half-open door;
He can do no more.

Merry's Museum.

Ned, the Match-Boy.

BY LINHOLM.

"M-a-atches! Want any matches?" The clear voice and something in the brown eyes altered "Not to-day" into "How do you sell them?" "Fifteen cents a box." "Can you change a dollar?" "Yes, sir. Be back 'meejitly." The young merchant deposited security for his reappearance by leaving on the floor his basket half filled with boxes of parlor-matches and cakes of glycerin soap, and one end solemnly decorated with shoe-lacing fringe.

The "something" in his brown eyes, and his limping gait haunted me as a recollection. "Did you always live in New York?" I asked as he returned "'meejitly" with eighty-five cents in his hand and fifteen in his pocket. "No, sir, 'bout six months." "Where did you come from?" "Lester." I was right—I had seen the young vender before! Memory flashed before me the picture of a room filled with boys and girls seated school-fashion on rows of wooden benches. Faces—bright, stupid, sad, hopeful, discouraged, sullen, coarse, delicate, sly and eager. Clothes—of all fabrics and of economical cut covered the little bodies unused to so much luxury.

An air of attention marked every scholar, for this first day of going to school was a new experience in itself, and, besides, this was a new kind of school. Some mother hearts that ached for the neglected had hired two or three rooms, which their husbands engaged should be paid for, had prepared a stock of garments and promised a dinner daily, trusting the Lord to send the ravens. He did not disappoint them. From some source or other the dinner always came.

Every Monday morning that which later in the day became a salle-a-manger was a crowded dressing-room. The applicants for admission were received by a committee of ladies whose names should be enrolled with the canonized. They washed the hands and faces; they combed the refractory hair, which required much coaxing to "stay put;" they selected from their stock of "ready made"—the results of many industrious hours—such garments as would best fit the child under consideration. This process was so transforming that it was frequently difficult for friends and brothers to recognize each other, as the reconstructed passed, one by one, into the school-room, which was the acme of all this preparation.

Among the candidates was Ned. His face was already clean, his bushy hair was brushed, his cheek ruddy, and his costume unique. Somebody had given him a pair of old boots, which produced not a little admiration among his comrades, but he bore his honors serenely under an armor of coats. First, a very ragged jacket, then a swallow-tailed coat, likewise very ragged; but Ned was thankfully conscious that generally the holes came in different places from those in the jacket. The long swallow-tail was surmounted by an immense linen duster, gorgeous with grease and dirt.

Ned's apparel was remodeled, and he applied himself to his book and to his dinner—which was the only meal many of those miserable little ones could depend upon from day to day, and that, it is safe to say, was the main attraction.

Ned's father told us how the mother had done her best to bring up her boy to be tidy and pleasant and true—that when she died she begged her husband never to neglect the child for drink. He owned he had not been as mindful as he ought—that the creature had run away with him sometimes, but he loved the boy who had "the look of the mither intil the eyes," and when Ned came home from school at night and sat on the stair singing "Shining Shore," that he learned in the school, he "believed shure the mither was lissenin' to every wurd. The priest might say what he liked, he should continue to send Ned to the Ladies' school—God bless it! It was a good thing, for it put larnin' in their heads and a bit in their mouths, what's more this cold winter."

Ned studied and ate, and took to truth-telling and honesty for several weeks, when came a dreadful day. The committee of application were so overwhelmed by applications that they felt obliged to sift the school, excluding the very poor for the sake of the very, very poor. This distinction is not exactly the difference 'twixt tweedledum and tweedledee. There are as fine shades in poverty as in high life. Adepts know that there are grades below the miserable creatures who huddle together, a separate family in each corner of a room, for there are wretched beings who live (!) in sub-cellars where no light comes save the light of a tallow candle; where the floors are of brick—if the bricks have not been torn away to point an argument in some drunken brawl; where most of the year water stands in hollows of the floor; where rats revel. Jimmy Kelly, one of the brightest scholars in the school, a little fellow seven years old, with love for his book, and a kindling eye for birds and flowers, came from just such a place as that. You are right—of course they would be better off in a poorhouse, but they don't agree with you and me. They will starve and do starve, body and soul, first.

Chris Brady and his two little sisters, Libby and Maggie, had a mother whose capacity for drink exceeded that of two ordinary men. She was intoxicated most of the time. One extremely cold day a lady discovered the two little girls crying bitterly from hunger in their fireless room. The mother was absent. The lady sent them food and a pailful of coal. The children ate the bread, but before the fire was made the mother returned, and no entreaties prevented her from exchanging that coal for some whisky. The children came frost-bitten to school. Yet nothing could induce that mother to part with any of her children. She was extremely cunning, and never suffered herself to be drunk in any place where the law could reach her, for she knew that if she escaped the finger of the law no one could legally take from her the children.

Only once did the noble women who started the school and dinner system in Lester lose heart, and that was the time alluded to a few paragraphs ago. Their hands were tied—they feared to ask more aid, and felt that they must return to the depths from which were partially extricated some of the children, and justice demanded that they should retain those who were most in need. Ned did not belong strictly to the latter class, so he was one of those miserable children who went with white faces and streaming eyes away from the warm room and the reading-lesson they had learned to appreciate. Alas, that all could not have been retained!

This was four years ago and Ned is now thirteen. He has risen to the rank of match merchant. He pays a small sum for his board, and the old clothes he wears at his business are replaced on Sundays by a respectable suit. He will not be rapid in making his way, for Dick Turpin has no attraction for him; but his truth and good nature are sure stepping-stones to something better than matches and shoe-lacings in the coming years!—Christian Weekly.

Justified by Faith.

Before we can have holiness, or happiness, or usefulness, we must first of all come to Jesus, and be "justified by faith" in him.

"Justified!"—what does that mean? You remember the poor publican who stood in the temple, with head bowed down, smiting his breast, and crying: "God be merciful to me a sinner!" God heard his prayer, and he went down to his house "justified." His load was taken away, his sins were forgiven, he had found pardon and peace and joy—he was "justified."

To be justified means to be made just, to be made righteous and holy; and when we trust in Jesus as our Savior, he takes away our sin, and he does make us holy, for he gives us his own holiness. We read in English history that when Canute gained a victory over the Saxon king, Edmund, they made a treaty after the battle, and Canute, in token of peace and reconciliation, exchanged garments and weapons with his conquered foe. And just in the same way does Christ make an exchange with his people; he has taken their sin upon him, and he gives them instead the spotless robe of his glorious righteousness. These are they who "have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

POTATOES IN POULTICES.—Perhaps it is not generally known how much pleasanter and more agreeable, as well as efficacious, is a poultice made of potatoes than one made of bread. It keeps longer, can be reheated several times, and does not wet the clothing. Peel, boil and mash the potatoes; inclose in a muslin bag, and apply to the affected part. To boil them in hot water has a very soothing effect, and enhances their virtue. A poultice made of boiled beans is by some thought to be better than potatoes, but both are worthy of a trial.

BOILED EGGS.—Be sure and select fresh eggs for boiling—never more than a week old. Have the water just boiling; if boiling fiercely when the eggs are put in it will crack the shell. Three minutes will boil an egg soft; five minutes will be necessary if you like them hard, and ten or twelve minutes if needed for salad; in that case they should be thrown into cold water the instant they are taken from the water, else the white will be dark-colored or clouded. When perfectly new an egg requires about half a minute longer boiling than if four or five days old.

BREAD-MAKING.—In making bread always use potatoes or rice cornmeal. I do not feel as though I were doing the correct thing if I use only flour. The cornmeal need not be made into mush; scald it first in the mixing pan before adding the flour, then set in the usual manner. The most prejudiced person cannot detect by the taste any corn in the bread, but there is an increased sweetness, and it keeps moist much longer. Of course the best cornmeal must be used, not that rank chicken-feed kind. Besides the improvement in the bread, the flour barrel holds out much longer, and health is promoted. I put about one part of corn to three parts of flour, when sifting the sponge.—American Agriculturist.

HERCULES was a model husband: rather than stay out at night he invariably carried his club home with him.

The Farm and Garden.

The Art of Making Butter.

BY SERENO EDWARDS TODD.

1. See that every milk-pail, pan, churn and butter-bowl is cleansed with boiling hot water, as often as they are used.

2. See that the udders of the cows and hands of the milkers are as clean as pure water will make them, before an atom of milk is drawn.

3. Provide a neat and clean place for the pans while the cream is rising, where the pure breezes from the green fields may blow into our window over the cream and out at an opposite opening. Good butter can never be made in a filthy apartment, where there is offensive effluvia arising from anything, no matter what.

4. Cream ought to be churned every day; yet if one can provide a clean corner, in a cellar or milk-room clean and cool, and keep the cream-pail on a clean piece of flag-stone, he can make superior butter by churning twice per week, provided the temperature of the cream is maintained from day to day about sixty degrees Fahrenheit.

5. Always skim the milk soon after the cream has risen. Thousands of barrels of cream are ruined for making gilt-edged butter by not skimming the milk soon after all the cream has risen. The sooner the cream is removed after it has risen, the better the butter will be. Milk, which should be skimmed at evening, is frequently left till the morning, when the cream will be injured to such an extent that gilt-edged butter cannot be made from it at all, neither will it make as many pounds as if it had been skimmed at the proper time.

6. Let the churning be done by a person whose hands and clothes are as clean and sweet as a blossom of red clover; and let the churning be continued until the butter has come. It is ruinous to butter to put cream in the churn, as is sometimes done, and churn rapidly for a minute or two every hour in the day, then in the evening all take hold in turn, and keep the cream dashing and splashing until midnight. If the cream is properly managed, butter will always come beautifully in less than half an hour.

7. The butter should be worked and thoroughly salted soon after it is churned. There is but little danger of salting too much. One ounce per pound is not enough for butter that is to be shipped any considerable distance. It is ruinous to the grain of butter to throw it into a dish pan and knead it with the hands. The best instrument for working out the buttermilk is anything that will cut deep gashes in the butter into which the buttermilk will flow. The next day after churning the butter should be worked again, and packed. Beware of working butter too much. A great many persons continue to work and knead their butter to its great injury after the buttermilk is removed, thinking that all the "crystal tear-drops," which are not buttermilk, must be worked out.

8. Thousands of tubs and firkins are received in the New York market containing what was once prime, gilt-edged butter, but which was spoiled by being packed before the tubs had been properly prepared by being soaked in brine. For the sake of saving three cents' worth of salt for preparing a strong brine in which to soak a firkin two or three days, many a frugal housewife has been obliged to accept half the price of prime butter, simply because the staves were not saturated with brine before the butter was packed.—New York Observer.

WE LEARN from the Department of Agriculture report that a material which has come quite extensively into use in Germany as a substitute for hair, in the stuffing of saddles, consists of a mixture of flaxseed and tallow. The advantage claimed for this substitute consists primarily in the fact that the mobility of the seeds, one upon the other, prevents the packing or settling in any particular place, as often happens in saddles stuffed with hair, thus causing any given pressure to be readily and uniformly distributed over any given surface. The tallow serves the purpose, too, of keeping the leather flexible, and of preventing the absorption of perspiration, protects the article itself, and prevents the back of the animal from becoming galled.

Animals with sores or galled spots on the back can be ridden with saddles stuffed with this material without any great inconvenience. The tallow also has the effect of preventing the rotting of the flaxseed, and is to be added in sufficient quantity to give the requisite softness to the entire mass.

An aromatic odor can be imparted by introducing oil of turpentine, or camphor powder, and the durability be considerably increased thereby. One part of tallow to from six to ten parts of flaxseed may be used, according to the temperature.

CURE FOR THE BOLL WORM.—The Aberdeen (Missis-sippi) Examiner says: Mr. James D. Tatum, of Aberdeen, one of our oldest citizens, has discovered an effectual bar to the depredations of the boll worm. Last year he put up nine martin boxes, which were immediately taken possession of by hundreds of martins, who entered upon duty as destroyers of the millers who deposited the eggs that produce the destructive boll worms. He informs us that he did not find a single boll worm in his hundred acres of cotton. Putting up martin boxes at convenient positions throughout their plantations, they will be able to wage a war of extermination against the most dreaded enemy of the South. It costs little or nothing to try the experiment, and there is no good reason to suppose that the martin will not be as destructive to the enemies that threaten the field as the English sparrow, while it is much more harmless.

NEVER make buckwheat cakes of buckwheat alone; make one part of cornmeal, two of wheat flour, and three parts of buckwheat. They are then spongy, instead of being flabby.

THERMAL SPRINGS are caused by volcanic heat, according to Mr. H. Woodward, in the Geological Magazine. Water descending to deep levels of the earth's strata encounters steam, perhaps superheated, which, though also converted into water by contact, raises the temperature of the stream and causes it to rise to the surface. That hot springs are directly connected with volcanoes is evident from such facts as these: First. Hot springs exist in all volcanic regions. Second. When not in immediate proximity to volcanoes, they are situated along lines of dislocation and disturbance, once caused by volcanic force, where still igneous forces are in operation below the surface, as in many places among the Pyrenees, Alps and Himalayas. The springs of nearly boiling water at Broosa are along the grand uplift of the Thracian Olympus range. Third. Hot springs remote from volcanoes are affected by them, nevertheless. Thus the "Source de la Reine," at the baths of Luchon, in the Pyrenees, during the great earthquake of Lisbon, was suddenly raised from the low temperature of a tepid spring to that of one hundred and twenty-two degrees Fahrenheit, a point retained ever since. Thermal waters alone contain silica in solution, and deposit the same as travertin, either immediately about the spring or on whatever object they may bathe, as wood, grasses, moss, etc.

METEORITES FROM THE SUN.—The theory of a solar origin for meteorites, however strange and startling it may appear to be, has now many advocates among leading scientific men, and much evidence in its favor has been supplied by the recent solar researches of such eminent astronomers as Lockyer, Proctor, Secchi, Young and others. Their opinion is, in brief, that the solar prominences result from the shooting forth of certain liquid or solid masses or streams of matter, and that meteoric masses, or at least some of the meteorites, may have originated in this manner, being propelled from beneath the surface of the sun. In a communication to the Royal Astronomical Society, Mr. Runyard, discussing the nature and origin of the upheaval of eruption prominences, states as his conclusion that the observed phenomena, and all other considerations, go far to render it probable that meteors are formed from the metallic vapors hurled from the sun or other stars, or that solid masses may be so hurled, in eruption prominences. Another astronomer also remarks of this theory, that, offering as it does a possible account of the genesis of prominences and meteorites, it appears also to contain the germ of another hypothesis, which he develops, respecting the cause of the connection between solar eruption and terrestrial magnetism, one of the most interesting scientific questions of the day.

WHY THE SUN'S RAYS MAKE ROUND SPOTS.—When light comes through a small hole into a dark room, it forms on the opposite wall an image of the object from which it proceeds, no matter what the shape of the hole; as, now, the sun is round, the image formed by its light will be round also. If the sun were square or triangular, its light, under the above circumstances, would form square or triangular spots. As it is, the round spots are real images of the sun, of which fact you convince yourself by watching such images on a day when floating clouds cover up the sun from time to time. You will see the images of the luminous edges of the clouds around your round sun spots, and their dark masses covering the same; and when you use a single hole, these appearances are very striking. The shape of the hole is of no consequence, provided it be small and of a diameter of one-quarter of an inch or less.

THE Atlantic cables of 1865 and 1866 show a considerable decrease in their insulation, although not to such an extent as to interfere with their use for the transmission of messages. This is, however, a matter of considerable moment, and the directors of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company have adopted the best means for ascertaining the exact condition of those cables.

THE WERE-WOLVES, or man-tigers and man-hyenas of by-gone popular superstition were, according to Mr. A. R. Wallace, probably men who had exceptional power of acting upon certain sensitive individuals, and could make them, when so acted upon, believe they saw whatever the mesmerizer pleased.

EVERY FACULTY of our being, every means of existence and happiness, every comfort and blessing of life, comes from God, and shall we take the gift and deny the Giver?

LIFE is but the preface of death.—Pascal.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.
PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND
ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of tirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive, to the thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books
Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS
COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. SCHELE DE VERE, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. CARTER, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LECONTE, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. JOHNSTON, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

SWINTON'S CONDENSED
SCHOOL HISTORY.
(From the Virginia Educational Journal.)
Mr. Swinton's reputation led us to examine this book. What is of most importance in the work is its extreme fairness. It is vastly superior, in this respect, to any history issued at the North that we have seen. Where accuracy seems almost impossible, he comes nearer to the truth than the others.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The weather has been showery, and our accounts from some localities in the country indicate that the rains have been excessive, in many places in the hill districts washing away the soil and completely miring bottom lands. These, however, are exceptions to the general reports, which present a highly favorable prospect, especially in Texas. We remarked in our last report that at no time had the cotton prospect been more cheering. The first planting in particular was said to be luxuriant and thrifty, and the second planting looking better than was expected a short time since. Conjectures of a crop of 3½ millions had been raised to 3¾ and 4 millions, but we had heard of no estimates over the outside figures. Of course these were given as mere conjectures, but made to show the drift of opinion in our cotton circles. The only change since is, as stated above, from too much rain in certain districts.

The river is 5 feet 1 inch below high water mark.

On Saturday the sales were confined to 25 bales. There was some inquiry for low middling at 23½c., but without success. This, however, was the reduced quotation of the Exchange.—On Monday about 75 bales changed hands at 24c. for a high style of strict low middling, and 24¾c. for middling. There was some inquiry for a fair style of clean ordinary at 20½c., but holders asked 20½@20¾c. On Tuesday buyers came forward with more spirit, and took nearly 900 bales (including 775 by two parties) at prices indicating no material variation. Strict ordinary sold to a small extent as low as 20½c., barely good ordinary at 21¾c., strict good ordinary at 22½c., and strict good ordinary to low middling at 22¾c.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 949,100 bales, against 1,385,859 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,183,508 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 54,294 to France, and a decrease of 877,336 to Great Britain, and of 327,320 to other foreign ports.

SUGAR.—The market has continued in good supply, both on the landing and in store, and the demand has been active and general since our last review. On Tuesday 300 hhds. were sold, in lots, at 8¼c. for low fair, 9¼@9⅜c. for good fair, 9½@9⅝c. for fully fair, 10c. for fully fair to prime, 10¼c. for choice, and 10⅝c. for yellow clarified.

MOLASSES.—The small lots coming in occasionally are mostly washings from the cisterns, and the market is now bare of all descriptions of Louisiana, including city refinery. On Tuesday 5 bbls. red fermenting sold at 32½c. ₱ gallon. City refinery is selling at 30c. for inferior, 40c. for common, 50c. for fair, 55c. for prime, 60c. for choice, and 80c.@$1 ₱ gallon for golden sirup.

CORN.—The receipts have been quite liberal and in excess of the demand. On Tuesday 7,500 sacks sold at 57@59c. for mixed, 60c. for yellow and mixed, and 70@71c. for white. A small lot of choice white brought 72c. ₱ bushel.

OATS—Have also been in liberal supply and in excess of the demand. On Tuesday 3,500 sacks sold at 45@47c. ₱ bushel.

BRAN—Has also been in good supply, but the market is very dull and prices have ruled lower. On Tuesday 500 sacks sold, in lots, at $1.05 ₱ 100 lbs.

BACON—Has continued in good demand, with a small stock and a scarcity of shoulders and clear rib sides, and prices are firmer. On Tuesday 100 casks sold, in lots, at 6¼c. for shoulders, 7⅝c. for clear rib sides, and 8c. for clear sides. A lot of 5 casks clear sides brought 8⅛c. ₱ lb.

HAMS.—Choice sugar-cured continue in light supply and fair demand at 12¼@12¾c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday about 150 tierces choice sold, in lots, at 12¼@12¾c. ₱ lb.

DRY SALT MEAT.—The market has again continued dull, with little or none in first hands. The dealers have stocks of shoulders but none of sides. Shoulders are quoted in first hands at 5c., and are retailing in the hands of dealers at 5¼c. ₱ lb.

LARD.—On Monday 70 kegs sold, in two lots, at 10½c. for kettle-rendered, and 10¾c. ₱ lb. for refined. Packers' in tierces is quoted at 8¾c., refined 9¼c., kegs 10¼c. ₱ lb. for kettle-rendered, and 10¾c. for refined.

BEEF.—The supply is light, with only a moderate local demand. Texas mess commands $11.50@$12, extra mess $12.50 ₱ bbl., and $9 for half bbls. Tierces are quoted at $17@$17.50 for mess, and $18@$18.50 for prime mess. Western is scarce and selling at $16. There is very little Northern here; it commands $17 ₱ bbl.

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JULY 4, 1872. NO. 27.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—Official information has been received here from Geneva that the British government having accepted the declaration of the arbitrators that the claims for indirect damages, not involving a money consideration, are not a subject for consideration by them, Lord Tenterden to-day formally withdrew his motion for adjournment of the tribunal, and then filed the British argument.

Accordingly, now that the indirect claims have been disposed of to the satisfaction of both governments, the other business before the tribunal will be considered.

All doubts about the release of Dr. Howard are now at rest; a telegram received to-day at the Spanish legation states that the matter has been satisfactorily arranged between the minister of foreign affairs and General Sickles.

AUBURN, N. Y., June 27.—The convicts in the State prison here are in a state of insurrection. Two hundred of them have been locked up, and about nine hundred are moving about the yard refusing to obey orders. Some of them are armed with tools, etc. Three companies of the Forty-Ninth Regiment, under the command of General McDougall, have been ordered to the scene of the trouble, and it is probable that the insurrection will soon be put down.

Later.—The insurrection has been subdued. One hundred and sixty of the ringleaders are closely confined, and will be kept on bread and water for some time.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The Secretary of War announces that after Sunday the Freedman's Bureau ceases, and the business will be wound up by the adjutant general of the United States army, who will settle all accounts and claims connected therewith.

NEW YORK, June 28.—A ragged boy named John O'Keefe, who sells papers before and after school hours, was yesterday adjudged the best out of nine who were examined for the naval cadetship in Congressman Roberts' district.

BOSTON, June 29.—Mr. Gilmore's benefit this afternoon was a complete ovation, more people attending thau at any time during the festival. All the popular elements, including the "Anvil Chorus," were on the programme. Gilmore's own band of fifty pieces played the "Stradella Overture," and three other popular pieces were demanded of them, which received their due share of applause. Peschka-Leutner and Rudersdorf sang; Arbuckle gave a cornet solo, and the foreign bands were, as usual, encored. Mr. Gilmore was presented with a floral harp, and Mr. Baldwin, the superintendent of the orchestra, with a fine watch, by members from other cities. Forty members of the Southern Press Association were present, and were complimented with "Dixie" by Gilmore's band. The Jubilee is likely to continue until next Saturday.

WASHINGTON, June 30.—Official reports to the Indian Bureau, from the Indian country, represent that the Kiowa Indians are reported to have left their reservation, and gone to Texas on a marauding expedition, but that they will be forced to return without the interference of the military.

The Cheyennes and Arrapahoes, who are on reservations adjoining the Kiowas, are afraid that if the Kiowas are permitted to continue their contemplated expedition, not only will they be severely punished by the United States troops, but that in the driving of the Kiowas back to their reservation their own tribes may be made to innocently suffer.

With this view they have remonstrated with the Kiowas, and threaten that unless the latter abandon their trips into Texas, they, the Cheyennes and Arrapahoes, will combine and declare war against the Kiowas and force them to observe their treaty stipulations.

It is the belief of the Indian agent who writes to the Bureau here that these threats will be successful, and that the few Kiowas now in Texas will immediately return to their reservation.

The action on the part of the Cheyennes and Arrapahoes creates much surprise at the Indian Bureau, but it is regarded as a very hopeful sign as to the intention of the warlike tribes to observe their treaties.

The report published yesterday that General McKenzie, Lieutenant Smith and eight men were surprised and killed by Indians in Texas, between Forts Belknap and Jackboro, is not credited at the War Department, as no intimation has been reported by General Auger, commanding at San Antonio, with whom the War Department is in daily telegraphic communication.

NEW YORK, June 30.—Hon. Henry A. Wise, of Virginia, announces that he will not support Greeley, even if nominated at Baltimore. He sees no other course open for him but to support Grant and Wilson, and will take the stump for them. Congressman Platt, of Virginia, says that the Republicans of that State will probably put Wise on the Grant electoral ticket.

LOUISVILLE, July 1.—It is rumored that no more work will be done on the canal this season, as the appropriation by Congress was made on condition of a reduction of the tolls to five cents per ton, which the company claim they cannot do, having a heavy debt, which that rate of tolls would not meet.

NEW YORK, July 1.—The thermometer to-day reached ninety-eight degrees in the shade. Many cases of sunstroke reported.

WASHINGTON, July 1.—The smallpox is still on the increase in this city. Thirty-four cases were reported last week.

NEW YORK, July 2.—Prof. Agassiz and party left Callao on the first of June for the North. They would stop at Ancon, where the British consul has collected for the Harvard University three hundred and seventy-three Indian skulls.

The smallpox continues to spread in Chili, and Congress is about passing a compulsory vaccination law.

Central American advices state that the government of Guatemala has ordered the confiscation of all the property of Jesuits in Nicaragua. It has also ordered the expulsion of the Jesuits from her territory.

NEW YORK, July 2.—The new law for the expulsion of the Jesuits is creating great excitement, not only in Germany, but in the rest of Europe. All foreigners belonging to these orders are expelled from the empire. Germans belonging to them are stripped of their nationality.

FOREIGN.

ASPINWALL, June 21, via Jamaica, June 28.—The misunderstanding between the American consul and the local authorities, in regard to the steamer Edgar Stuart, is becoming serious. The consul persists in retaining possession of the steamer, and has sent instructions to the commander of the United States man-of-war Wyoming to allow no interference with her.

Advices from Peru report that an insurrection was attempted at Lima in consequence of the election. Troops were called out, and fired upon the rioters, and the outbreak was suppressed. The government had suspended the publication of hostile journals and imprisoned the editors.

GENEVA, June 28.—The arbitrators met to-day, when the final decision rejecting the claims for indirect damages was recorded; the next sitting will take place on July 15.

PARIS, June 29.—M. Remusat, minister of foreign affairs, and Count Arnim, the German embassador, to-night signed the treaty providing for the evacuation by German troops, which has been for some time in negotiation.

MADRID, June 30.—A decree is promulgated in the Gaceta confirming the resignation of Count Valmaseda, Captain General of Cuba, and the appointment of General Ceballos to fill the place provisionally.

The decree also removes Gamez Pulido, Captain General of Porto Rico.

GENEVA, July 1.—The Alabama claims arbitration tribunal, in dealing with the direct claims of the American government, will consider separately the character of the Confederate cruisers, and award damages according to its findings.

MADRID, July 1.—The King will soon visit the northern provinces of the kingdom, passing through those which have been most disturbed by the Carlists. The Republicans have resolved to oppose every form of monarchical government in Spain, to acknowledge no monarchical authority, and to abstain from all electious while monarchy exists in the country. At the same time members of the majority in the ministry, belonging to the Conservative party, have determined to withdraw from the political arena.

BERLIN, July 1.—Arbitration on the San Juan boundary question will now proceed. Bismarck is about to appoint international jurists to examine the papers submitted by the English and American governments, and report to the Emperor.

THE GENERAL MINUTES.

The Nashville Christian Advocate says: After many vexations delays, and a world of trouble, we have brought out the General Minutes for 1871. They would have been published soon after the session of the last of the Conferences if we could have gotten returns from all the secretaries. We did not—after writing numerous letters, and making calls in the Advocate—get the Minutes of one Conference until May—seven or eight months after its session! The editor has taken great pains to secure correctness—writing many letters to procure statistics—and adding up and verifying all the figures himself—so that they may be depended upon, as far as the returns are trustworthy. Some of our sanguine friends anticipated an increase of fifty thousand—we said forty—and in round numbers, that was the increase, if the decrease of colored members be not taken into account, they having been transferred to the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, and reported in the Minutes of that connection. There is a gratifying increase in Sunday schools and in baptisms, though these returns are obviously very imperfect. We are a very pronounced pedobaptist church, and yet, strange to say, far more adult baptisms are reported than infant baptisms. Why is this? We could suggest an answer, but we prefer to let our readers furnish one for themselves. The Minutes do not show—they do not call for—the amounts raised for the support of the Bishops; but we are glad to state that they were paid in full at the last settlement. Nor do they show what were the deficiencies in the support of the ministry—we are sorry to say they were great; and though a considerable sum was raised for superannuated preachers, widows and orphans, yet it fell far below the amount required. There was an apparent falling off in the collections for missions; but a considerable amount passed into the treasury besides what went through the Annual Conferences; and the report for 1870 included large sums raised by extra efforts to liquidate the old missionary debt. We hope much heavier figures will appear in the next year's returns. But we forbear further remarks, and beg all our friends—especially the ministers—to procure copies of this highly suggestive annual. We append the

[There are defects in the Minutes of some of the Conferences, which the editor vainly endeavored to supply. The transferred preachers are reckoned with those of the Conferences to which they now belong. The preachers who located this year (59) are not counted; on the other hand, the preachers who were admitted on trial (252,) and those who were readmitted (45,) are counted among the traveling preachers, though many of them are also reckoned with the local preachers. The members in China were not counted last year, not being officially reported. The colored members, for the most part, have left our connection for the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, organized by our Bishops under the authority of the General Conference; they are reported in their own Minutes—hence the apparent decrease in that department. The ten Bishops are added to the total of traveling preachers reported in 1870.]

FROM THE WORK.

Calcasieu.

MR. EDITOR: The tide has turned. The seed sown in other days, and recently stirred, is bearing fruit. The gospel of our Lord is being manifest as a power and wisdom. Nothing short of this gospel can break the ramparts of the enemy and free the souls captive "in trespasses and sins." Do not count too rapidly, but be thankful to know that some twenty on the whole work have begun the heavenward march. One old enemy used every means to foil the rightful Lord of his just possessions, and as a specimen of his diplomacy I give the following, taken from the official minutes of the Louisiana Baptist Association, page 7, held at Cheneyville, Louisiana, in 1870:

"WHEREAS, We, the representatives of the churches composing the Louisiana Association, believing that we hold and teach the truth, and administer the ordinances according to the pattern given by Christ; be it

"Resolved, That we disapprove of church affiliation with all who teach different doctrines and corrupt the ordinances.

"Resolved further, That we, as an association, declare ourselves uncompromising, non-affiliating, landmark Baptists."

If you think comment necessary, furnish it. The simple publication is, in my opinion, enough. May be the opinion of a poor piny-woods missionary is of but little value, and if so, bury it out of sight, or, perhaps better still, secure some university man, versed in classic lore, and let us have a nice treatise on the moods, tenses and voices of charity or love. Talking about lore and universities—this is the place to use the one, and where the odor of the other would bring a good price; for of all curious, puzzling, prying, inquisitive, scholastic-loving people, those of the forest against the world. You are expected to solve the problem of the "philosopher's stone," give a plain but lucid exhibit of who Melchisedek was, how he came to have neither father nor mother, nor beginning of days, nor end of life. You are to show who was the dragon and two-headed beast of John, without faltering, or be classed as a mere saddle-bag scholar. Seriously, we are making a great mistake in sending to the outposts our weak, non-university men; the reverse should be the rule. It requires a more logical and better-arranged sermon to meet the native but reflective minds of these children of the woods than do your sprightly but superficial denizens of the crowded centers. And, besides, you need young men full of sap and vitality to reach up to the requirements of such a people. We old hulks should be put in ordinary, or assigned to shoal-water service, and not be sent to breast the waves of the full-rolling ocean. Verbum sat.

This country, in its physical geography, is peculiar; and this fact has and will have much to do in arranging circuits. From its youth it must for some two or three years more be a missionary field; but if our entire church can only give fifteen cents per member for this purpose, it will take years before we can fill the work. To reach the people effectually, between the Mermentau and Sabine rivers, and the Gulf of Mexico and the thirty-first degree of latitude, will require eight good men. I am satisfied that a big field, overgrown with weeds and brambles, will not produce as well as one having none. As in nature, so in morals. The servants of the church generally are given too much ground. The consequence is that tares multiply, spirituality dries up, the discipline is overlooked, the name of Jesus is dishonored in the house of his friends, covetousness seizes the heart, means are wanting, and everything stagnates. Unless we create a new office—"Beggar General"—in the church, and put therein a man of iron nerve, and having sensibilities of hardened brass, and turn him loose upon the members, the wheels of Zion will cease to roll. May be I am in a fog and don't see. Perhaps my habits are of the luxurious sort and my taste epicurean, or my mind is filled with censoriousness, and my experience too limited to pronounce upon these grave points; very probable, and yet I have a sort of native love for my own inconsistencies, in preference to those of other people. Some of them are as follows: I am opposed to ministers being farmers, store-keepers, school masters, or having any other business but the preaching of the gospel. The Bible and the history of the church are for me. A man, to preach Christ, should have no other calling. If he is required to teach five days in the week, and ride on Saturday and Sunday, it is a wrong inflicted upon him and the church. If he is buying and selling, or tilling the soil, his mind will be divided, and the spiritual will suffer rather than the material.

CHURCH AND STATE.

The London Missionary Society, in their report just issued, call especial attention to the great work which has been accomplished in the South Sea Islands, and which has penetrated so deep into the heart and life of the people that, with the exception of a few experienced men at the centers of influence, Polynesia can now be evangelized by her own people. The report states that "there are at present four principal groups under the society's charge, containing twenty-five important islands, and having thirty smaller islands and numerous islets connected with them as outstations. These missions are instructed and managed by twenty-eight English missionaries, with a missionary ship at their command, at a total cost of £9,500 a year. All the inhabitants of the large islands, and most of those at the outstations, are professedly Christian; and they are seventy thousand in number, including fourteen thousand members in church fellowship. For many years some three hundred of these Christian converts have given themselves to the edification of their brethren, and eighty of their number are devoted to purely mission work. They have been efficiently and systematically trained; they have been duly appointed as pastors, evangelists or assistants; and many of them have been distinguished for steadfastness, devotion, and even heroism in the Lord's service in lands far distant from their own. These converts have cast off all the great institutions of heathenism, which were ancient, crnel and powerful; they have cast off many great and destructive vices; home-life, social intercourse, public manners have been all ruled, sanctified and elevated by the law of Christ. Willing and large-hearted have been their gifts in the cause of the gospel; not less willing and consecrated has been their personal service. Diligent in business, upright in their dealings, securing the safety and the rights of foreigners, their islands have become a safe and pleasant resort for seamen and traders. These little islands have taken a place in the comity of nations; and in their little sphere, so far from meriting contempt, they manifest a simplicity, a completeness, a gentleness and a beauty of Christian character exceeding that of the sterner races of the world, which deal with higher matters and yield a rougher type of manly excellence."

THE Abbé Michaud, who is hastening to complete the organization of the "Old Catholic" movement, proposes to make a complete rupture with the Church of Rome, as will be seen by the following statement reported by the correspondent of the Guardian: "After showing the necessity of 'breaking' with the Romish system, as being logically founded on the false decretals and the scholasticism of the middle ages, M. Michaud upholds the possibility of union among all Christians, on the principles laid down in the extract before quoted on the Anglican Church, and then proceeds to state his 'programme' for effecting that union. All Old Catholics must begin by declaring Ultramontanism to be the corruption of Catholicism, and all doctrinal decisions subsequent to the false decretals null and void. Their only standard must be that laid down by the seven ecumenical councils and recognized by the Eastern Church. In default of a Western episcopacy, a renewed one must be sought for in the East after union is effected. "Each Old Catholic national church preserves, with the common faith, its particular liturgy and discipline, based, as far as possible, on those existing before the ninth century. An Ecumenical Council of the Eastern and Western churches to be assembled as soon as possible. The Bishop of Rome to be cited before this council, and, if he appears and submits, to be reinstated in his patriarchal office; if not, a new Western patriarch to be elected. The council to make such reforms as appear necessary, to be carried out by committees of action and scientific committees—the former to be employed in organization, the latter to inquire into questions of doctrine, public worship, morality and discipline, and lay down rules as to what is obligatory and what optional. The grand rule in all these matters is to be that of the Universal Church, quod ubique, quod semper, quod ab omnibus; and nothing else is to be enforced as the distinction between Catholic and non-Catholic. The Abbe Michaud declares his programme to be 'necessary,' as the only means of establishing a community of faith; and 'easy,' (which is less easy to believe,) because, abandoning what is merely speculative, it appeals to the substance of historical fact."

THE late Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, was strongly opposed to temperance, and his sideboard was loaded with brandy, wine, etc. On one occasion Rev. Mr. Perkins, of the Sons of Temperance, dined with the Bishop, who, pouring out a glass of wine, desired him to drink with him.

"Can't do it, Bishop. 'Wine is a mocker.'"

"Take a glass of brandy, then."

"Can't do it, Bishop. 'Strong drink is raging.'"

By this time the Bishop, becoming somewhat excited, remarked to Mr. Perkins: "You'll pass the decanter to the gentleman next to you?"

"No, Bishop, I can't do that. 'Woe unto him that putteth the bottle to his neighbor's lips.'"

A FARMER, in drawing from his meadow a load of peat weighing four thousand pounds, has upon his wagon three thousand five hundred pounds of water, and but five hundred pounds of the dry material he seeks. This, dried and compressed, could be placed in a couple of our largest-sized farm-baskets.

PATIENCE.

On silent wings an angel
Through all the land is borne,
Sent by the gracious Father
To comfort them that mourn.
There's blessing in his glances,
Peace dwells where'er he came;
Oh! follow when he calls thee,
For Patience is his name.

Through earthly care and sorrow
He'll smooth the thorny way,
And speak with hopeful courage
Of brighter, happier day;
And when thy weakness falters,
His strength is firm and fast:
He'll help to bear thy burden,
He'll lead thee home at last.

Thy tears he never chideth,
When comfort he'd impart,
Rebuking not, he quiets
The longings of thy heart.
And when in stormy sorrow,
Thou murmuring askest "Why?"
He, silent yet, but smiling,
Points upward to the sky.

He will not always answer
Each question that's addressed;
His maxim is: "Endure thou,
And after toil comes rest."
Through life, if thou will love him,
Thus by thy side he'll wend.
Oh, silent, ever hopeful,
Still looking to the end.

Difference in the Pay of Ministers.

Mr. Editor: One or two articles in the Advocate of May 2, together with a conversation I had with one of our leading ministers not long since, set me to musing, and "while I was musing the fire burned; then spake I with my"—pen. I am no agrarian or communist. As in the case of mechanics, artists and professional men there is, and of right ought to be, a difference in salaries, because of a difference in the men themselves, so should it be to some extent among ministers of the gospel. There is a difference in men, both as to natural and as to acquired ability. Men are born different; some have a much larger share of intellect to start with. Then some have much better advantages in their childhood and youth than others. But perhaps the greatest difference arises from the different plans adopted and the different courses pursued by the men themselves after reaching manhood. Some set out with a determination to excel. Their aim is high. To reach it they apply themselves closely; they avail themselves of every means of improvement in their reach; they study books, men and things; and, as a consequence, they attain to as high a degree of excellence as their natural capacity will enable them to reach. Others, who perhaps have equal natural abilities, for the want of this lofty aim and determination to be and do all in their power, never become much nor do much. Now, in so far as the difference in men arises from the difference in their own conduct, it is right that there should be a difference in their pay and in their circumstances. And whatever may be the cause of the difference in the men, a difference in their pay and circumstances will naturally occur, whether right or wrong. Then, too, a difference in places makes it right that there should be a difference in salaries. A man stationed in a large city needs more than one on a circuit in the country. As far as provisions are concerned, it ought not to take much if any more to support the city than the country pastor; a man living in the country needs about as much to eat as a man in a city. Besides, preachers in the country generally have to get their provisions from a town or city; they have to pay just as much as the city brother, and then pay to get them hauled home. But in the matter of clothing, it does take a little more to furnish the city preacher and his family.

But, after all these admissions, I must be allowed to say there is too great a difference in the pay received by different ministers. Some receive as high as $3,000—some probably more; while others, whose families are just as large, and perhaps larger, and who have to travel large, poor, hard circuits or missions, and be away from their families the greater part of the time, must put up with a mere pittance, sometimes getting $300 or $400, sometimes not more than $75 or $100. Every one knows that a man with a family cannot live on any such amount—that he must do something besides preaching to eke out a support. And every one must know, it seems to me, that however great the difference between the men and between the circumstances of the city and of the country, it is not right, just or equitable that there should be such a difference as does exist as to their pay. The country minister has to travel through cold and heat, rain and mud, for days together, while his wife and children are at home toiling with their own hands to keep soul and body together. The children are deprived of educational advantages and of the refining effects of good society. And if, perchance, he happens to take his family to town, he is almost ashamed to call upon his brother minister there, because he is not able to "fix up" himself and family in decent style. I know that Heaven will make it all right in the end, if the poor fellow and his family can just live, and hear these hardships with Christian patience and fortitude. God does not forget their "work and labor of love," their toils, their self-denials, their sufferings, and the keenest anguish of soul which they oftentimes experience. If they can but do their duty and trust in him, he will take care of them here, and in the world to come reward them a thousand-fold for all they have done and suffered. But still the question arises, Is it right, it is just that such difference should exist? I answer, It is not right, so far as it is possible to remedy the evil. Let it be understood, I do not want the salaries of all made equal; I only want the salaries of those who receive so little raised by some means to a living amount, while those charges that are able may still pay their preachers as much as they please. I am told that this is part of the design of the missionary fund. If so, it has certainly failed, so far, to accomplish the end. Preachers receive no benefit from this fund unless the works they are on are called "missions;" whereas there are many circuits that do not give their preachers more than half they need. What, then, is to be done? How can this evil be remedied? Either let this fund be enlarged by increased effort on the part of the more fortunate preachers, and increased liberality on the part of the whole church, and then let those who manage this fund take more pains to find out these needy cases and relieve them; or let us have a "sustentation fund," like that of the Church of Scotland, and, I believe, of the Presbyterian Church of this country. Who will take hold of this matter? Those who are the sufferers are not the proper ones; it should be done by leading men, who have charge of healthy churches.

The thing can be done, if it is only taken hold of with energy, and properly managed, by the right men. It is useless to say: "Our people are too poor." It is true that they are not as wealthy as they were in ante-bellum times; but they are not as poor as some would have us believe. Men have told me this year that they make more clear money now than they did in slavery times. Some are poorer, others richer. What we need is higher and more liberal views on the part of our people—and of some of our ministers—and some regular system of collecting funds. Our people must be brought to see and feel that giving is both a duty and a privilege—that it is a means of grace, a part of worship.

LOUISIANA.

Morals.—The Inquisition.—Intolerance.

Mr. Editor: The animus of the metropolitan mind, through commercial and social intercourse, becomes the leaven of society, the social and moral tone of which, especially if unhealthy, sensibly affects the surrounding and dependent provinces to their remotest bounds. Counter to all civil and religious reforms, the social under current flows on, bearing them away in spite of the laments of the more sober part of the community. So vital and silent are these disorganizing influences that the reforms are neutralized and scattered like wrecks upon a stormy sea, while the casual observer is wholly at a loss to determine the cause. Acquaintance with cause and effect will trace the deterioration of morals to the proper source—the diseased and disorganized state of the social system, which in time becomes chronic.

In the year 1726, during the prudent administration of Bienville, the flourishing state of agriculture and the activity of trade attracted a large number of emigrants both from France and Canada. Early in this year the company arranged with the Jesuits to supply the spiritual wants of the people. They created an establishment of fourteen priests in the various posts and settlements, besides missionaries at the trading posts, in order to propagate the Catholic faith among the Indian tribes. The company provided for their support. A convent of the Ursuline nuns was also erected. They were to take charge of female education, and, with the assistance of the sisters of charity, of a hospital. Two other arrangements were made—one with the Capuchin and the other with Carmelite friars, and which ultimately became a source of great contention, especially between the Capuchins and the Jesuits. In the summer of 1726 an important addition was made to the moral strength of the colony in the persons of the de la casselle girls. They were poor, but young, and of good moral character, and were placed under the care of the Ursulines until they could be provided for in marriage. The company, in token of appreciation, had furnished each of them with a casket containing some articles of clothing, from which they derived the sobriquet filles a la casselle, or "the casket girls." Subsequently it became a matter of importance to trace one's genealogy to the casselles, rather than to the "correction girls."

The relations of the French with the Indians were dangerous in the extreme. Influenced by mercenary motives, they were haughty, domineering and unjust, and often manifested a desire to be rid of the Indian's presence. This in turn provoked the unmeasured hostility and resentment of the savages, especially of the high-spirited and fiery Natchez, until, on the twenty-eighth of November, 1729, they cut off the whole garrison at Fort Rosalie in the short space of two hours. At this time licentiousness held the mastery over the passions of a large majority of the settlers. Especially among the slaves did this vice run riot. Their spiritual wants were no more regarded than had they been so many cattle, and consequently, having no moral restraints, they knew no better than to follow the evil tendencies and promptings of their own natures. With characteristic ignorance of human nature, law-givers passed severe sentence on vice, and the heaviest penalties were incurred on account of it; but it could not stay the tide. Legislative enactments have too much of compulsion, and too little or none of moral suasion, to reach and cure corrupt morals. It is the provinces of the gospel alone to accomplish such ends. This state of affairs continued much the same until the end of the century. Continual accessions, remnants of whose descendants yet remain, were made to the various settlements of the Ouachita, Natchitoches, Teche, Pascagoula and Natchez. These newcomers naturally fell in with the manners and customs of the community, and to a great extent conformed to the prevailing state of morals.

In order to have some notion of the morals in Louisiana at this time, we have only to glance at those of the clergy. In 1755 a fierce contention for the spiritual direction of the province arose between the French and Spanish Capuchins. During this conflict their criminations and recriminations awoke the spirit of investigation, upon which facts of a startling character came to light, and which bore heavily upon the reputation of the "reverend fathers." In 1766 Father Dagobert was superior of the Capuchins in the colonies. This man, for good humor and inoffensiveness, had no equal, while for ignorance, extravagance, intemperance and voluptuousness he was unrivaled. Having labored at New Orleans for fifty years, he was regarded as the spiritual father of the church. On the nineteenth of July, 1772, Fathers Cirillo and Gnoveaux landed at New Orleans, with authority from Bishop Hechevania, of Cuba, to pry into the state of the Lord's vineyard there. Cirillo reported that the Capuchins were not rigid in their discipline, but that they lived at their ease, possessed much silver plate, and had no god but "their bellies." Also that preaching was neglected, except on the holidays and festivals, and that this had always been Dagobert's style. The Capuchins were wine bibbers and gamblers, while the convent, to all intents and purposes, was a brothel, enjoying the patronage of the worthy friars! In addition to the Ursulines, there were eight negresses and mulatto women in this convent, who were regarded as superfluities by the discerning Cirillo. Some light is thrown upon the morals of New Orleans by a tax of nine reals a year levied upon every chimney in 1796. This was for lighting the streets, in order to prevent, in the words of Baron Morales, "the innumerable robberies and acts flagrante delicto which were perpetrated in a city of six thousand souls, by a multitude of vagabonds of every nation." Bishop Penalvert arrived in the city on the seventeenth of July, 1795, and entered upon the pastoral office of his see August 2. He describes the inhabitants as irreligious and vicious in the extreme. Among the slaves marriage was unknown, while among the whites the majority of both married and unmarried men lived in a state of concubinage. It was a common practice for fathers to procure courtesans for their sons, and thus prevent lawful marriage. "The houses are filled with hooks against religion and the State. They are permitted to read them with impunity, and at the dinner table they make use of the most shameful and lascivious songs." By his wise regulations the Ursuline convent was restored to its former purity. He further charges that blasphemy and sedition were rampant, and that the boys taught in the Spanish school, when permitted to visit home, were invariably contaminated by the corrupt morals of their parents.

General Collot speaks of the settlers of many sections as "a compound of traders, adventurers, wood runners, rowers, warriors, ignorant, superstitious and obstinate. * * * When at home they are indolent, lazy and addicted to drunkenness." Major Stoddard, who was Lieutenant Governor in 1804, relates that the Sabbath was almost entirely disregarded by the French people. "After the mass they collect in parties and play at cards, billiards and the like." Racing was a common Sabbath evening pastime, in which the "reverend fathers" often participated.

Such was the sad state of morals in Louisiana in the first decade of the present century, when Methodism entered the arena. About this time the first and only attempt was made to establish the Inquisition in Louisiana. It was during the administration of Governor Miro, in 1789. The person who was intrusted with this terrible engine of papal tyranny and cruelty was Father Antonio de Sedella. Hitherto the spiritual establishment consisted of sixteen curates, four assistants and six nuns, under the control of the vicar-general of Louisiana. The Inquisition was deemed necessary to give greater effect to their doctrines, and to repress heresy, the growth of which was apprehended from the constant intercourse of the French with the people of the United States. Sedella, with the utmost secrecy and caution, proceeded to establish his court. Being forbidden to exercise his functions by Governor Miro, he preferred, in the true spirit of popery, to obey his spiritual rather than his temporal master, and in rather a lordly manner notified the Governor that he would wish a guard late at night to assist him in his operations. Miro acted promptly and decisively. Accordingly an officer and eighteen grenadiers waited on the arrogant priest. Sedella said: "My friends, I thank you and his excellency for your services, and you shall be warned in due time when wanted. Retire with the blessing of God." He was astonished when told that he was a prisoner, and protested against the indignity offered to the holy office. But the officer was undaunted, and Miro was inflexible. The Capuchin was conveyed safely on board a vessel, and by morning the Inquisition was bound on a voyage to Europe, there to remain, we trust, until liberal movements, by the blessing of God, shall consign it to the shades of oblivion. Notwithstanding this, the Catholic religion was dominant. Under the lead of Peter's successor spirituality has always declined, until the gospel offers no restraint to vice, while the ostentatious formalities but the more encourage it. The spirit of bigotry organizes and becomes intolerance, and plays tyrant over the State. This in turn gives loose rein to caprice, until religion is degraded to a paper creed, and the temple of prayer to a den of monsters, thieves and puppet shows. "The time of figs is not yet." Yours,

Louisiana.

Difficulties in the Way of Vocal Prayer.

My Dear Brethren: You are too successful in finding excuses for neglecting oral prayer, but I fear they will not answer your purpose when you are called to account for the improvement of your Lord's talents. Your excuses, when honestly looked into, are exceedingly flimsy and unsatisfactory. They are not such as govern your actions in other matters of far less importance. You say, in the first place, that you have no gifts in the way of vocal prayer. But how do you know that? Have you ever made a fair and honest trial of the matter? I fear there is more personal pride, as well as "the fear of man, which bringeth a snare," in this convenient excuse than you are willing to acknowledge. If you could pray fluently and eloquently without first learning how to do it, you would be willing to pray. But you want to walk before you learn to crawl; to spell and read before you learn your A B Cs; to be a mathematician before you learn the rudiments of arithmetic. You are not willing to commence where all other Christians of all ages and countries have commenced. The multiplied thousands of Christians who have excelled in eloquent and powerful extemporaneous prayer had very small and imperfect beginnings. They stammered over their first short and disjointed oral prayers at their domestic altar, or in a little sequestered prayer meeting which older brethren had gotten up as a training school for the young and diffident. But "practice makes perfect." They resolutely improved their talents, and God blessed them in the laudable effort. They gradually imbibed more and more of the genuine spirit of prayer, and by constant practice they acquired suitable forms of expression for their devotional feelings, until many of our ministers might covet earnestly their superior gifts. "Where there is a will there is a way." What you most need is a willing determination to make the effort persistently. Do not hesitate any longer, my dear brethren. The longer you delay the more difficult it will be to commence. Resolve, by the ever-present help of the Holy Spirit, that you will pray in your family tonight, and if you can only utter ten words, utter them and say Amen! Then try it again in the morning, and God will give you ten more words; and so keep it up, evening and morning, for a series of weeks, and every time you will acquire additional and varied forms of expression, until your prayer will become systematized and appropriate, and instead of the oppressive burden you groaned under at first, the "yoke will become easy and the burden light," and, if you retain the spirit of religion, it will become a life-long pleasure to keep the flame of prayer and praise burning on your family altar. I am exceedingly anxious to have you commence immediately this matter of family prayer. I could write whole pages of scriptural arguments to prove its obligation, but in your case I need not do it. While you retain a true sense of the fear of God you must feel the obligation of worshiping him in your family. In no better way can you give form and effect to the honesty and sincerity of your religious profession to your wife and children than by calling them to unite with you, evening and morning, in hearing a short lesson from God's holy book, and then offering up appropriate prayer and praise. Family prayer, properly conducted, has a wonderful effect on the religious type of children, and by giving them this example you may transmit your religion to them, and through them to your posterity, perhaps to the latest generation. And then praying regularly at the family altar is the best training school on earth to learn a man to pray in all other places where it may be appropriate for him to do so. But you have other difficulties to grapple with, which I will endeavor to remove hereafter.

PAY YOUR DEBTS.

Mr. Editor: Paul tells us to "owe no man anything." Even heathen honesty requires the payment of debts. Much more does the gospel system require it. The whole spirit and genius of the gospel require perfect honesty toward our fellow-men, as well as toward God. What we owe another is not properly our own, and we have no right to keep or use it without the consent of our creditor. A man may be unfortunate and not able to pay at the appointed time; but it is his duty to pay as soon as possible, and, unless his creditor voluntarily releases him from a part of his indebtedness, to pay it all.

Yet there are many now in our country refusing or evading the payment of their debts. Some take the benefit of the bankrupt law, with plenty of property on hand. Some turn their property over to their wives or children, or somebody else. Some estates of deceased men are declared insolvent, and the creditors thus cut out of their dues. And yet in all, or at least many, of these cases the indebted parties live pretty much as they used to. They dress just as fine, live as well, fly as high, give their children as good an education. I know a man—considered a rich man, has a large, rich plantation, and lives in a fine house in a city—who is said to have borrowed a considerable sum of money, several years ago, when money was good, from a comparatively poor man, and since the war he has taken the benefit of the bankrupt law, and refuses to pay the money he owes that poor man. I know another who owns a good deal of property, and owes a large amount, but has entrenched himself behind the bankrupt law. I know still another party who owes several hundred dollars to a poor man. It is a debt of several years' standing. The creditor would be willing to take part of the debt, but so far has not been able to get anything.

Thus I might continue to cite examples, were it necessary. Many of these debtors are church members and professors of religion. Of course they try to satisfy themselves that they are justifiable. But however satisfactory to themselves their excuses may be, I fear they are insufficient in the sight of God. Christians must do right. They must do "justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with God." It is impossible for God to bless and save a man so long as he is defrauding his fellow-man of his rights. No one is required to do impossibilities. If one cannot pay his debts he is not required to do it. But he is required to try—to make a faithful, honest effort. He must deny himself, be willing to do without the luxuries of life, live on plain fare and wear plain clothing, and require his family to do so too. But here is the rub. Many of these persons were raised in affluence, accustomed to have every wish gratified, and it is exceedingly difficult for them to get their consent to come down and live according to their means. The consequence is that some of them not only fail to pay old debts, but they are going in deeper from year to year. Many of them live in a far better style than the persons they owe, and whom they are depriving of their just rights.

O brethren! think of the course you are pursuing. Re-examine your ground. Be sure that you are right before you proceed further. There is a day coming in which these matters will all be made manifest. Our conduct and motives will be, as it were, turned inside out before an assembled universe. Pay your debts. "Owe no man anything, but to love one another."

Honesty.

ROBERT R. ROBERTS.

He lived a circuit preacher as he had a "settler," and a bishop as he had a circuit preacher, in a log cabin; and died in a log cabin. No sooner had he been elected a bishop than he fixed his episcopal residence in the old cabin at Chenango; and his next removal was to Indiana, then the far West, where his episcopal palace was a log cabin built by his own hands, and his furniture rude fabrications from the forest wood, made with such tools as he carried in his emigrant wagon. The first meal of the bishop and his family in his new abode was of roasted potatoes only, and it was begun and ended with hearty thanksgiving. Here he lived in the true simplicity of frontier life, toiling, at his occasional leisure, in the fields. The allowances for his family expenses, besides two hundred per annum for quartarage, was, during most of his episcopal career, from two hundred to two hundred and fifty dollars per annum; at least this was the case till 1836. Those who knew well his private affairs have estimated that his pecuniary contributions, during his ministerial life, amounted to more than all his receipts from the church for domestic expenses. He was especially liberal to literary institutions. He prized learning from a sense of his own need of it, having had but about three months' instruction after his seventh year. On an episcopal visitation to New Orleans, he found the brethren attempting, with a few resources, to erect a church; he sold his horse, and giving them all it brought, a hundred dollars, made his way with many difficulties to Nashville, where his friends provided him with another and funds with which to finish his journey. While at home, in the periods between his episcopal tours, he worked hard in the fields, that he might have the means of indulging this propensity of his generous mind. He was as whole-hearted in his ministerial labors. According to his routes, the last year he lived he must have traveled between five and six thousand miles, visiting some half dozen States, and nearly an equal number of Indian nations.

His large person—corpulent, and nearly six feet in height; his strongly-marked features, elevated forehead, and manners of extreme simplicity and cordiality—gave to his presence the air of a superior man—one to be remembered, revered and loved. It is certainly no small tribute to his character to say that its greatest apparent defect was the excess of a very amiable quality—he was constitutionally diffident. For a long time after his appointment as a class-leader among his rustic neighbors, he could not assume courage enough to address them individually, and he had actually to be superseded by another leader till he conquered this timidity. In his first attempt at public exhortation he suddenly sat down, appalled at the intent look of a good man whose favorable interest he took for disapprobation. At another time, when he was expected to exhort, he was so alarmed as to retire in agony and conceal himself in a barn. In the third attempt he proceeded some time with good effect, but, fearing he had made a blunder, stopped short in confusion. In after years this extreme diffidence became a subdued modesty, not interfering with his ordinary duties, but deterring him from most novel or experimental plans, however hopeful, and leading often to ludicrous mistakes among persons who did not know him. When stopping in his travels among strangers he usually assumed no other pretensions than those of a private Christian; and frequently it was not till the family worship revealed his spirit and talents that his ministerial character was supposed. Under such circumstances he has sometimes attended class meeting with his host, and received warm and pointed exhortations from zealous leaders.—Methodist.

An elderly gentleman, accustomed to "indulge," entered the travelers' room of a tavern where sat a grave friend by the fire. Lifting a pair of green spectacles upon his forehead, rubbing his inflamed eyes and calling for brandy and water, he complained to the friend that "his eyes were getting weaker, and that even spectacles didn't seem to do them any good." "I'll tell thee, friend," replied the Quaker, "what I think. If thou would'st wear thy spectacles over thy mouth for a few months thine eyes would get well again."

The eyes of other people are the eyes that ruin us.—Franklin.

ALCOHOL.

BY G. HENRY ST. JOHN.

Down in the realms of endless woe
They held a council, long ago;
And round their chief the dark fiends came,
Crown'd with a diadem of flame.
"Peers," said Satan, "Powers of hell,
Gather ye near, that yo may tell
In what the subtlest curses dwell;
Where shall we search, where shall we find
A thing with all the ills combined,
To crush and wither human kind—
A drug, an essence that unites
All crimes and curses, pains and blights,
On which may turn the human fate—
Tell me, infernal Powers of Hate?"
Then went a horrid murmur round,
As when an earthquake shakes the ground,
Or gaunt and famished beasts, when they
Leap headlong on their helpless prey.
Said one: "Here's Famine's essence sore,
'Twill gnaw man's vitals to the core."
Another hissed: "This phial contains
An oil to burn up human brains,
And make man lower than the least
And vilest of earth's vilest beast."
"And this," another howled with glee,
"Contains the juice of Misery;
'Twill wring the tears from orphan's eyes
Like rain from out the summer skies;
'Twill rend the widow's heart, and freeze
The human blood like polar seas"
"Fiends!" said a demon with a yell,
That sent a tremor throughout hell,
"Away with all your aches and pains;
See what this grinning skull contains!
We brewed it in the lowest hell,
And know 'twill work the mischief well.
The essence this of every woe,
Of every crime that demons know,
Compounded in this skull you'll find
To be the curse of Human kind—
'Tis flavored with the hottest flame,
And ALCOHOL shall be its name."

REACHED BY AFFLICTION.

In the street between two palace gates was a shoemaker's shop. Going in, you saw at once a poor cripple deprived of the use of all his limbs except his arms. This paralytic was the son of a shoemaker; his name was Barthelemy. "Ah," said his father, Robert Milon, to those who expressed compassion on seeing him thus, "he was not always like that; in his youth he was very indifferent, and was endowed with every bodily and mental gift." In truth, Barthelemy had been the finest young man in the neighborhood—very clever, and full of vivacity and imagination. He abused his gifts, he followed his passionate nature, and plunged into life, yielding to all the lusts of youth, the follies and disorderly ways in which the young are so easily entrapped. Ceaselessly carried away by impetuous impulses, he sought only pleasures and quarrels. Whenever there was strife he must mix in with it, and he exhibited an unrivaled boldness in all his disputes. He organized balls and concerts, and despised the things of God, ridiculed the priests, and mocked good men. Every one spoke of Barthelot, as they called him, and of his prowess—some with admiration, others with fear. All the young people acknowledged him as their leader.

One day, when engaged thoughtlessly in his ordinary diversions, he fell and broke his ribs. Not being willing to submit to any remedy, he aggravated the evil—the different parts of his body gradually failed, and he became entirely paralyzed. What a change in his life! Poor Barthelemy! formerly so proud of his beauty, now weak, infirm, deprived of the use of his limbs, unable to go out with his friends, was obliged to keep at home in his father's store. He was overwhelmed not only by the sharp pain he suffered, but by the view of his deformity. Seated near the window, his only recreation was to look at the passers-by; and his malice being as great as ever, or rather being increased by his misfortunes, he was not sparing of his taunts. One day, seeing an evangelist pass by the shop, he began at once to insult him, and to scoff at the terrible majesty of God. "Ha, Lutheran!" he cried, adding all kinds of mockery. The Christian stopped. He was touched to see the pitiable state of the man who insulted him. He drew near, and said kindly: "Poor fellow, why do you insult those that pass? Do you not see that God hath thus bent your body to set straight your soul?" The simple word touched Milon. He had never thought of his soul being crippled. "Oh," said he, "can it be true that God has brought upon me this infirmity to restore his erring creature?" He was attentive to the passer-by who spoke with him; and giving him a New Testament, said: "Here is a book, and in a few days' time you will see what you think of it."

Milon seized the gospel, opened it, and, having begun to taste the fruit of his reading, he could not lay it down night or day. This little volume was enough; he needed no other teacher. The sword of God's word struck to the bottom of his heart, and his past life terrified him. But the gospel consoled him. It was for him a sounding trumpet, publishing the praise of Christ's mercy. Milon found the Savior. "Mercy is shown to me," he said, "that the love of God in pardoning the greatest sinner may be exhibited as on a scaffold, where it may be seen by all the world." He had now a bridle which restrained him from entering into insults, riots, diversions and contentions. The wolf became a lamb. Barthelemy communicated the riches which he found in the word of God to his father, the other members of the family, and all the customers who came to the shop. No other room in Paris presented such an interesting and varied scene. In truth, the Christian love became as inexhaustible as his wordly skill had been to invent amusement. He devoted wholly to God the burning activity which had been squandered on the world. At certain hours of the day the poor young man, unrivaled in his skill as a writer, gathered the children of the neighborhood and dictated to them from his bed some words of the Bible, making it plain and easy for them, and teaching them to form their letters well. At other times he thought of the necessities of the poor; he worked diligently with his own hands; and engraving, with liquid on knives, dirks and swords, he devised novelties for the goldsmiths. Then he employed the fruit of his labors to maintain several needy professors of the gospel. Also, he had a very beautiful voice, and a singularly graceful touch for several instruments. Morning and evening he consecrated to the Savior's praise those talents formerly devoted to pleasure, and sung with an accompaniment psalms and hymns. People came from all parts to this shop, which was in the center of Paris. Some came because of the rare and exquisite things he made; others frequented it to hear the music and singing. A great many were attracted by the great change in him. "Ah," said the poor paralytic, "if God has conferred upon me such benefits, it is that I may magnify his glory." He gently instructed the humble, and if any hypocrite came, he dealt with them apart, and fulminated against them the thunders of God. In short, says the chronicler, his room was a true school of piety, in which the praise of God resounded morning and evening.

This was the man chosen to suffer the cruelties of persecution under the relentless Francis the First. Foaming with rage, the instrument of the priests entered his room. "Get up, quick!" he cried, with an angry look. Barthelemy met his fury with a pleasant smile, replying, "Alas, sir, it must be a greater master than you to bid me rise!" "Carry off this man!" said the executioner to his constables. Barthelemy was carried off, and condemned to be burnt alive. He had to be carried as a child in arms. When he passed his father's house he greeted him with a smile, and through all the cruel suffering of his death he only spoke of words of peace. The enemies of the Reformation, who stood around listening to the martyr, were inspired with surprise and respect. The Christians were profoundly touched, crying out: "O, how great is the constancy of the witness of the Son of God, whether in life or death!"—D'Aubigne.

PLAYTHINGS FOR CHILDREN.

To be amusable is better than to be amused. The amusable man is always amused. But amusable men are rare. Amusableness is the peculiar gift of childhood. It is wiser to husband than to waste the gift. To repress the capacity of being amused altogether in a child would no doubt destroy it altogether. It would thus be double wrong. It would deprive the child of amusement. But that were comparatively trifling. The deeper, the incurable wrong would be to crush the elastic capacity of being amused. Amusement were a small loss. But to lose amusableness is to lose childhood, and to commence life an infant man.

Some one said of William Wilberforce that he was the most amusable of men. It was saying that he had saved the gift of childhood to man's estate. But there is another way of spoiling a spring besides refusing to let it play. You can spoil it by letting it play too much. That is the most frequent mode of destroying amusableness in childhood. We amuse our children too much. We ought to save up for them their priceless capacity of being amused by gratifying it moderately. We should not pamper it, but diet it. It is an appetite that grows delicate and fastidious and finical by being humored and waited upon. It is an appetite that grows strong, and generous, and wholesome by being allowed to find its own food.

Buy few playthings for your children. Half the fun of fun for them is to have found it for themselves. All the real good of fun is to have found it for themselves. Why? Because it exercises their inventive faculties. It teaches them to observe the adaptation of nature. It habituates them to take care of themselves. It is a discipline to that height of human philosophy which the merest child also can attain.

"Man wants but little here below,
Nor wants that little long."

I walk down Broadway and see the man with his little flotilla of gray-colored bladders held to anchor each by its own cord in his hand, gracefully desiring to sail off and away in the ocean of air on the waves of the wind. I say: "Get one for Maud!" That is my instinct. Then I reflect, she would be pleased with it one moment—would put her fingers through it the next—and return to her playhouse under the tree with its treasure-trove of China fragments, its teacups of acorn shells, its sand-pipes, its confectionery of real snow and ice, would return with that inexhaustible zest—that God-bestowing faculty which, thank God, I have done little to impair, whereby she shall be amused, if she lives, far on into her teens—her own unspent elastic spring of childhood, the amusableness, better than amusement, within her!"

Not if I could empty a toy-shop into her—"nursery"—shall I say? No! Nursery, indeed! There is not room in my house for a nursery, nor should there be if my house were as large as one of their snow-palaces in Europe—not if I could empty a toy-shop into the house, and say to her, "See here, it is all your own, my child," would she be half as happy, even for a day, as she is, day after day, in the hay-loft of my barn, where she with her sisters have found a strip of carpet, a bit of oilcloth, a broken sled, and unbounded play for all her housekeeping uses. Yesterday she announced to her mother with satisfaction that she had settled things in her palace so that they are a little more "civilized" there. Was the poor little Prince Imperial more a sovereign in his play-realm, though it cost thousands of francs, than my little ons was in hers that cost her nothing but her pains and her fancy?

Be frugal alike of the trouble and of the money that you devote to your children's amusement. Let them amuse themselves. Interpose as little as possible. Take obstacles out of their way, if they cannot do it for themselves, but quietly, without their being aware of your help. Restrain their amusement for the sake of keeping them amusable.—William C. Wilkinson.

"QUEER FISH."

Every community has its "queer fish." The "fishers of men," using mostly the regular net of preaching, have secured a good haul. They are apt to think they have made a clean sweep; but some have managed to escape. They will not come near the net. If they are to be caught—and why not?—they are often the most precious of all—the "fisher" must depart from his stereotyped plan. Let him go in search of them; they are not hard to find. There is a whole shoal in the village tavern, the city saloon. You cannot net them. Alcohol is more attractive than the best bait. I know no way but to use the fly. You must have good patience. Put your Master and his service before them in the most alluring aspects; sparkle with genuine love for them, and desire to help them. By and by they begin to come near, to nibble a little. They often get frightened. Keep at it; you will soon get hold of one. Haul him out gently; when you have one you have a dozen. In every community some are found in little dish-puddles of sin, because no one has ever thought of looking after them. I once discovered a boy who had been six months a servant in a theological college, and could not read; nor did he know who made him. Such are easily caught; the plainest bait of human sympathy will take them. They are eager for something better than they have ever had, and swallow the gospel greedily. The muddy waters of the busy world are full. The fish cannot see your bait; the business and cares and pleasures of a worldly life make the water thick. You must spear them. Take every chance you get. Fling the sharpest darts of God's word. There are dark, quiet nooks, in which are hidden fine intellects, genial, warm hearts. They live in cheerless skepticism. In the dark and cold themselves, they fancy all the world sunless and wretched. You must throw the torchlight of truth and of a life of love on them. This will bring them out of their shady nooks, perhaps into the clear stream of church ordinance; and then as an infidel's heart is the same as any other sinner's, you will soon find the right way to win their souls for the Master. It does not require much skill to use a net; but to handle the rod, and flash the light and aim the spear, need study and practice, and a never-tiring endurance. Have we not too many untrained "fishers," both in and out of the pulpit, and too many "queer fish" of great value, to be got by those who take the trouble to look after them, and have the skill to catch them?—British American Presbyterian.

EXCESS IN SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The danger to the Sunday-school movement just now lies in the strong tendency to overdo. Sunday school work has become a profession, and the professional Sunday school man must have something to give for his money. Hence there is a tendency to depart from the simplicity and spiritual character of the institution, to introduce novelties, and to overload with appliances. Shallow nominalists want to change the name to "Bible school," and to make capital out of the reverence for the Scriptures by the advocacy of what is called "thorough" teaching, but which is indeed nothing more nor less than a substitution of knowledge for those spiritual results which only are worthy of being sought. The fact that the river Jordan is a certain number of miles in length is of no more consequence in itself than that the Rhine or the Tombigbee are so many miles in length, and the fact that Cain killed his brother and that Hezekiah was king of Israel, have, in themselves, no more to do with the religious life of a child than any facts in Rollins' Ancient History. When Sunday school men lose sight of the fact that the real analogy of the Sunday school is not with the common school but with the church, that the Scriptures are not to be taught like geography, and that the culture of the religious and moral nature of the child through the Scriptures and the teacher's personal influence is the real objective point, we shall no longer be able to point with approval to the great results achieved. Not by a dead uniformity of lesson and a ponderous "curriculum" of study, but by the quick and living sympathy of teachers who are themselves living epistles, will the Sunday school achieve its highest result. And as a home paper, interested in all that makes for the welfare of childhood, we hope to see the Sunday school reach its highest effectiveness in the education of children.—Hearth and Home.

A BEAUTIFUL INCIDENT.

Rev. Dr. Adams, in his beautiful book of "Thanksgiving Memories," gives the following incident:

"In the Cathedral of Limerick there hangs a chime of bells, which were cast in Italy by an enthusiast in his trade, who fixed his home near the monastery where they were first hung, that he might daily enjoy their sweet and solemn music. In some political revolution the bells were taken away to some distant land, and their maker himself became a refugee and exile. His wanderings brought him after many years to Ireland. On a calm and beautiful evening, as the vessel which bore him floated on the placid bosom of the Shannon, suddenly the evening chimes pealed from the cathedral towers. His practiced ear caught the sweet sound, and he knew that his lost treasures were found. His early home, his old friends, his beloved native land, all the best associations of his life were in those sounds. He laid himself back in the boat, crossed his arms upon his breast and listened to the music. The boat reached the wharf, but still he lay there, silent and motionless. They spoke to him, but he did not answer; they went to him, but his spirit had fled. The tide of memories that came vibrating through his heart at that well-known chime had snapped its strings."

It was this incident that suggested to Moore his song of "The Evening Bells." As Moore is not so much read as it used to be a quarter of a century ago, we reprint the lines, as they may not be familiar to some of our younger readers:

Those evening bells! Those evening bells!
How many a tale their music tells
Of youth and home, and that sweet time
When last I heard their soothing chime.

Those joyous hours have passed away.
And many a heart that then was gay,
Within the tomb now darkly dwells,
And hears no more those evening bells.

And thus't shall be when I am gone,
That tuneful peal shall still ring on,
And other bards shall walk these dells,
And sing thy praise, sweet evening bells!

The Spiritual Man.—A brother came to Abbot Sylvanus, in Mount Sinai, and found the brethren working, and said:

"Why labor you for the meat which perisheth? Mary chose the good part."

The Abbott said: "Give him a book to read, and put him in an empty cell."

About the ninth hour the brother looked out to see if he would be called to eat, and at last came to the Abbot and asked: "Do not the brethren eat to-day?"

"Yes."

"Then why was I not called?"

Then quoth Abbot Sylvanus: "Thou art a spiritual man, and needest not their food. We are carnal, and must eat because we work; but thou hast chosen the better part." Whereat the monk was ashamed.—The Sunday Library.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Rev. James Dixon, D. D., the eminent Wesleyan minister of England, died on December 28, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. With the exception of the Rev. Thomas Jackson, he was the oldest minister in the Wesleyan society. He was widely known as the author of several theological and biographical works. He was president of the Conference several years ago. In 1848 he visited America as fraternal delegate to our General Conference, and made a most excellent impression on our people.

An important movement for the advancement of temperance has been started among the Roman Catholics of this country. The convention of the Catholic Temperance Union, which recently met in Baltimore, was a large and enthusiastic meeting; received reports from one hundred and seventy-seven societies, numbering twenty-six thousand four hundred and eighty-one members. At a recent temperance meeting in a Catholic church in Paterson, New Jersey, nearly one thousand people took the total abstinence pledge, reciting it aloud after their priest, and receiving his benediction.

Dr. Guthrie, the eminent Scotch Presbyterian minister, recently visited London. While there, Dr. Vaughn, master of the (Episcopal) temple, expressed to him regret that he could not invite him to officiate in his pulpit. Mr. Chambers, the treasurer of the temple, undertook to remove this difficulty by giving his official permission. But it subsequently appeared that even this officer had no power to introduce to the temple pulpit a clergyman not of the orders of the Church of England. So Dr. Guthrie did not preach, and the Established pulpit was saved from contamination by a Presbyterian minister.

The Australasian Wesleyan Conference met for its eighteenth session in Melbourne, January 18. The statistical reports showed a membership in the colonies of 27,585, with 1,836 on trial; in the mission districts, 32,064 members, and 5,699 on trial. In reference to recommendations on lay representation, received from three district meetings, the conference resolved: "That as the subject of lay representation in conference is at present receiving attention in Great Britain and Ireland, as well as in America, this conference regards it as expedient that it should take no action respecting it until it has been discussed by older and larger conferences in other parts of the world."

Japan.—The Christian Intelligencer contains some important intelligence respecting the mission work in Japan. At Yokohama a daily prayer meeting has been continued for several weeks, attended by large numbers of the Japanese, who are eager to have the word of God expounded. Several conversions had occurred, and the first Christian church in Japan had been organized under the direction of the Rev. Mr. Ballagh. It is not believed that the government will interfere with this movement. The Japanese call the Protestants "Bible men," and do not seem to have any special ill will toward those who walk in the light of the Bible. The Japanese mind is evidently becoming more and more inclined to Christianity.

The Free Church of Scotland Missionary Society has effected the purchase of a church and convent which were put up for sale at auction in Lisbon. This will give permanence and increased influence to the Protestant movement already inaugurated there by Rev. Mr. Stewart and Mr. De Mattos, and carried on under the evident blessing of God. These buildings will afford ample accommodation for both Scotch and Portuguese congregations, together with school rooms and pastors' houses. Mr. Stewart says: "From fifty to sixty Portuguese now meet regularly in our hall; and I do not doubt that the Lord, in giving this church, is opening a wide door by which many more will enter to hear the truth preached as it is in Jesus."

Condition of Women in the Holy Land.—A writer in the Central Christian Advocate makes the following statement concerning the condition of women in the Holy Land: "So far no traveler, I believe, has ever related that he saw a Moslem girl in a Moslem school. The Arabs have made schools, but they are only for the boys. The women who live under the sway of the Crescent of Stamboul never receive any education, being looked upon as beings of an inferior race. In some districts they are not considered to have any souls, and so rarely go through any devotions in the mosques or concern themselves about religious matters. And what is the consequence? Here woman is idle, dejected, corrupted, filthy, and just as repulsive as she should be attractive."

The directors of the London Missionary Society, in their report, just presented, call special attention to the results accomplished in the South Sea Islands. Regarding the number of converts, their growth in Christian character, and the proofs of their sincerity, they feel sure that the work there accomplished has not affected the surface only, but gone deep into the heart and life of the communities that have professed the gospel. Remarkable spiritual power has been manifested in the missions planted within the last eight years in the Ellice and Lagoon Islands. Even in the midst of prosperity and extension an increase of foreign missionaries is not regarded as necessary, except a certain number of experienced men at the centers of the great groups of islands. "Polynesia can now be evangelized by its own people."

A retranslation into Greek of the Curetonian Syriac fragments of the gospels has just been completed by Mr. Crowfoot. Dr. Cureton published an English version with the Syrian text, it is true; but this has been found to be imperfect and unreliable for critical purposes, wherefore this attempt of Mr. Crowfoot. The most valuable portion of the work is the translation of the three pages of the Curetonian version recently deposited in the Berlin Library, John vii, 38, to viii, 18; Luke xv, 22, to xvi, 12; and xvii, 1–23; embraced in a copy of the gospels made up of portions of several manuscripts purchased two years ago by Dr. Brugsch, the famous Egyptologist, then residing in Egypt, for the Royal Library at Berlin. The remainder is said to have formed ons out of between thirty and forty volumes of the kind offered to the librarians of the Bibliotheque Nationals, shortly before the commencement of the siege of Paris by the Germans.

The refusal of the Pope to receive Cardinal Hohenlohe as the German embassador at the court of the Vatican has led to a proposition in the German Parliament that the office be discontinued and the salary of the papal embassador be disallowed. Prince Bismarck opposed this proposition. He has determined that the rupture of diplomatic relations with the Vatican shall not be made by his government; and he is clever enough to throw all the odium of this unfriendliness upon the papal court. The rejection of Cardinal Hohenlohe is a great point for Bismarck in his conflict with the Jesuits. He can point to the fact that the Pope refuses to receive even a member of his College of Cardinals, when he comes as the representative of the German government, as a proof of the intense hostility of the Jesuits to Germany. The speech of the chancellor on this subject is said to have been one of his most powerful orations, and to afford proof that the nervous affection from which he has recently been suffering has not weakened his intellect.

Free Christian Church of Italy. We have been furnished with the declaration of principles and the constitution of the Free Church of Italy. The declaration consists of eight articles, embodying the essential doctrines of the evangelical faith. The constitution defines the Free Christian Church of Italy as formed out of the various Christian churches which adhere to the declaration and the constitution. The churches are independent in local affairs. When in the same town "there are different groups of believers, resulting from the preaching of different laborers," they may form a single local church or preserve their reciprocal independence. Gifts are recognized and acknowledged by each particular church at will, but cannot be exercised in other churches without previous recognition and acknowledgment by the General Assembly. The General Assembly has the power of interdicting ministers who are found unworthy, after regular proceedings have been held against them. The General Assembly meets annually, and is composed of deputies from the united churches. Each church may send one, two or three representatives. It exercises general sovereign power, and is the court of ultimate appeal. Its decisions in matters of faith must be unanimous; in other cases by a majority. The Evangelization Committee represents the General Assembly when it is not in session. It is elected annually, and must surrender its work each year to the Examining Committee of the Assembly. The church consists at present of thirty-five congregations. The Evangelization Committee is composed as follows: Dr. A. R. Van Nest, Florence, president; Paolo de Michelis, Pisa, secretary; John R. McDougal, Florence, treasurer and foreign secretary; Francesco Lagomarsino, Milan; Alessandro Gavazzi, Rome; Salvatore Ferretti, Florence. Signor Gavazzi and J. B. Thompson are its authorized agents in the United States, and solicit funds for the support of evangelists and the maintenance of schools.

Most controversies would soon be ended if those engaged in them would first accurately define their terms, and then rigidly adhere to their definitions.—Edwards.

WHAT TO DO.—YOUNG WOMEN.

It is, of course, their first business to be good. Nothing is more unwomanly than irreligion. A blighted flower, without tint or fragrance, is she without the element of piety. It is a fact most merciful and hopeful that two-thirds of the religious people in the world are women. But there are many in Christian lands, frivolous, vain, dissipated, and saturated with the spirit of wordliness, whose smiles are loaded with poison. "The hand that rocks the cradle rocks the world," and those who minister at the fountain of our being are the molders of human character and destiny. What goodness and greatness there are must be largely attributed to them, and much of the evil also. The bending of all the twigs is by them, and all the trees get their twists and inclinations, their majesty and their deformity in no small measure from them. There are natural elements of influence in womanhood—the gift and power of sex—which tell tremendously upon the moral and social condition of the world. Take religion away and this ever-acting and irrepressible influence falls on the side of wrong. A peculiar and fearful responsibility rests upon women, as they are women, and can no more be evaded than the fact of their womanhood.

It is the duty of the homeliest woman to be beautiful in the highest sense of the beautiful—inwardly so in the adornments of a meek and quiet spirit, and in the nobility of a pure and all-pervading spirituality. It is character which illuminates the face and gives grace to form, or overcomes its defects. Without this the finest form and features are

> Faultily faultless, splendidly dull,
> A dead perfection.

The striving after personal grace and attractiveness is nature, and duty also, if it be guided, informed and prompted by such principles. King Lemuel meant about this when he declared: "Favor is deceitful and beauty is vain; but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised." What often passes for beauty, and is prized and praised as such, is sheer deformity, because wanting in the all-beautifying principle of holiness. Under the dominion of true piety the instinctive aim after the attractive and the beautiful will be divested of vanity, and the manners and costume will be in accord with a refined and true taste. Women should fashion themselves inwardly and outwardly according to the pattern which God has shown to them "in the mount." A godly independence is indicated as a serious want of the times. Fashion is a hard and wicked taskmaster, and shows no mercy to its votaries. It was neither lightness nor trifling in an apostle to speak of this slavery, and to protest against it: "That women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with braided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but, which becometh women professing godliness, with good works." The adorning is well enough—taste to be exhibited in modest apparel—but the pearl and gold are barbaric, and the real jewelry consists of good works. More use of the gospel glass and less of the mirror; more attention to "the inward man of the heart," and less subservience to the improvident, shameless and tasteless laws of worldly fashion, are the thoughts which these words express. A declaration of independence, a rising up against these forms of folly and evil-doing are demanded. To spend the years of young womanhood chiefly in dress and coiffure, to cultivate the arts and to pursue the pleasures of society, to flit like butterflies and to scintillate like glow-worms, is to murder the best faculties which heaven has bestowed.

Besides the ultimate and crowning relation of womanhood, and as connected with it, or separated from it, there is work to be done. The girl in her teens, the young "Mistress of Arts," fresh from the commencement exercises, what is she to do? With painting, music and the solid attainments of science and literature at command, how to enter upon life earnestly and usefully is the perplexing question. The aim should be not to be merely good, but to be good for something. The necessity of doing something for independent maintenance should scarcely determine the answer. An idle woman, engaged in no real, earnest work, does not live—she simply floats and drifts. If education and wealth are given, there is the more reason for industry and purpose in the estimate and plans of life. There is an account to be rendered for these talents. Ordinarily her work lies in a different sphere from that of men, but it is wide and severe, nevertheless.—Woman, as much as man, needs the discipline and the development which practical industry supplies. Without it she is more a thing than a person, to be inventoried with the furniture and embellishments of the house, rather than regarded as the daughter or the mistress of the home. Where work is a duty, rather than a necessity, there are greater opportunities for the indulgence of taste and benevolence in the direction given to effort, but the homeliest domestic employments should be matters of habitual and cheerful performance. Every woman should be at home in the kitchen and laundry, and a better bread-maker than any cook that money can command. A post-college course in housekeeping would be of great service to young women generally.

Where it is a question of making a living, What to do? may not always be apparent, but a determined and spirited woman will find some employment suited to her capacity and strength. She will not bid for sympathy and compassion by asking pay for what she is not qualified to do. The path of literature can be trodden by very few. Teaching, for the educated woman, is both congenial and remunerative in its highest departments, but all may not follow it; and the demand for painting and embroidery is limited, especially in these hard times. What then? Only this: Better to qualify yourselves and to strive for the highest employments; but if these may not be reached, take hold of anything consistent with feminine purity and religious principle. Helpless women! Alas, that it has become the sad refrain and wail of social exigency! There is helpfulness in themselves if they only knew it, and if they were more trained and educated to this end. The lot of marriage may or may not be, and in any case there is need of strength, self-reliance and skill. Ornament, accomplishment, delicacy, refinement are to be cherished and sought, but in addition a true womanliness, which seeks to help itself, and scorns the thought of a purposeless, wilted and idle life.

CAMP MEETING.

The seashore camp meeting, held near Biloxi, was a most gratifying and profitable gathering. The site is probably the most delightful of any in the South—immediately upon the beach of the gulf, and within easy walk of the railroad. The charming water view, the ebbing and flowing tides, the bracing sea breeze, and the tonic springs abounding here, are among the accessories. Of annoyances there were none to speak of—absolutely no musquitoes. We heard something about snakes, but saw none, and the red bugs readily yielded to a judicious treatment with petroleum. The preaching shed is a permanent frame of sawed timber, covered with tarpaulins, and good proof, as we had occasion to know, against the heaviest rain-fall. It was large enough to seat comfortably a thousand people. The permanent tent-holders were not many—perhaps eight or ten in all. These tents were mostly frames covered with tarpaulins, and were proof against the rain. The public boarding tent was handsomely fitted up and the fare unexceptionable. The accommodations for lodging were not ready in time, however, and many on Saturday and Sunday nights were compelled to leave the camp ground on that account. The failure in this particular was owing to the non-delivery of lumber at the time for which it was contracted.

The services opened on Friday night, the twenty-first of June, with a sermon, and there were four sermons a day until the close of the meeting. The weather up to Monday night was unpropitious. On Sunday, especially at the eleven o'clock service, the rain fell in torrents, but there were probably five hundred persons present at the morning and afternoon sermons. The attendance improved daily until the meeting broke, on Thursday night, the twenty-seventh. The interest as well as attendance increased from day to day. There were a number of conversions, many reclaimed and revived, and penitent seekers lingering at the altar when the final doxology was sung. The congregations largely consisted of church members, and the work in them was most remarkable and profound. They were endued with power from on high, the weak hands were strengthened and the feeble knees confirmed.

The preaching was good; very good, practical, pointed and spiritual. A most rare and able corps of preachers were present from the neighboring Conferences: Cottrell from Columbus, Shapard from Mobile, Coleman from Whistler, C. G. Andrews, president of Centenary College, Dr. Watkins from Natchez, Moody from the North Alabama Conference, besides others from the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences, and nearly all of our city pastors. Bishop Keener, dispensing large hospitality in his own tent, also ministered in pulpit and altar in the spirit and power of the Asburys and McKendrees of other days. And there was Bro. Ayers, the octogenarian from Galveston, Texas, the patriarch of laymen, with his not less venerable wife, occupying his own tent, seeing, weeping, enjoying, but hearing only "what the spirit saith unto the churches." "And what shall we more say? for the time would fail us to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephtha; of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets."

There was no disorderly walking in the camp ground, no "lewd fellows of the baser sort" to disturb the exercises. Perfect peace and good behavior prevailed throughout. To the trustees, who had the entire arrangements in charge, much credit is due, and especially to John H. Keller, without whose unwearied efforts and supervision there would have been no camp meeting this year. This has been only a beginning, and as such a gratifying success. Next time we may look for greater things. There will be many more tent-holders, and the means of public entertainment will be more extensive and complete. All who visited the grounds, so far as we know, were enthusiastic in their admiration of the place.

DEATH OF W. H. DAMERON.

Our beloved friend and brother, William H. Dameron, died on Thursday, the twentieth of June. He was one of the most prominent and devoted members of our church in New Orleans. About thirty years ago, while a young man, he came to New Orleans, from Norfolk, Virginia, and has been ever since actively connected with the church. His personal effort, influence and money have been given to all the enterprises of Methodism in this city. Too much cannot be truthfully said of his excellence as a man, his high integrity as a leading merchant of our Southwestern metropolis, and of his spirituality and purity as a Christian. During an intimate acquaintance with him of twenty-five years we never discovered a flaw in temper or conduct. At the time of his death he was a member of the Felicity Street church, and filled the several offices of trustee, recording steward and class-leader. He was one of the trustees of the lake-shore camp ground, and was buried on the very day that it was opened for divine service. He was also president of the board of trustees of the New Orleans Methodist Depository. We believe he made it a rule to give a tenth to religious and benevolent objects, and many of his generous benefactions will not be known to any but their recipients until "that day." After an illness of five months he fell asleep in Jesus. During these months of sickness he enjoyed the fullest measure of religious consolation, often unutterably happy in the love of God, and always cheerful and perfectly resigned to death. He was a perfect man, and an upright, and his end was peace. In our relations to him as friend and pastor we can never tell how much we owe him for sympathy, advice, and other offices of helpfulness and consolation. With the bereaved household and the stricken church we mingle our own tears, while we rejoice and boast of the grace which molded and beautified a character so admirable and Christ-like in its every feature.

We closed up our second round of quarterly meetings by a visit to Baton Rouge on Saturday and Sunday last. The pastor, Rev. A. E. Goodwyn, has the church in good condition, with regular class and prayer meetings, and the trustees are completing some needed repairs on the church building.

Last week, in Baton Rouge, was a busy and interesting time, as it was the period for the closing exercises of the schools. The Read Villa school for young ladies, Mrs. Stanard's school for young ladies, Professor Magruder's Collegiate Institute, and the State University all had their usual annual exhibitions. The exercises of Mrs. Read's and Mrs. Stanard's schools were represented to us as most gratifying. These schools for girls are of high grade and under excellent management. The exhibition of the Collegiate Institute, on Friday night, has been described to us by several delighted witnesses as the best thing in its way that they ever attended. The declamation of the boys showed the most careful and judicious training. Professor Magruder, besides being a high-toned Christian gentleman, is a veteran educator, and we are most fortunate to have such a school as his located in our State. His teaching in the classics, mathematics and declamation is especially admirable and thorough.

We notice from the programme of exercises that the commencement of Whitworth Female College, at Brookhaven, Mississippi, promised to be a most interesting occasion. The exercises were to have begun on Friday, June 21. We hope to have an account of them in due time. Sorry that the programme was received too late for notice last week.

It is very dangerous for any man to find any spot that is sweeter to him than his home.

A REMARKABLE CONVERSION.

Mr. Editor: I have been some time expecting to see in your paper a notice of a conversion which took place in Mobile some two months since, viz.: that of the Jewish rabbi or priest in charge of the synagogue there. Happening to be in the city early in April, I found, one morning, much excitement on the streets at the report that "the Jewish priest had just been converted," and that all Judaism in the city was in a great state of excitement. Feeling a good deal of interest in the case, and hearing that the Jews were endeavoring to overawe and drive him from the city, in company with Bro. Rush I called upon him, and had a very interesting conversation with him. I found him a man of some thirty-five, of fine personal appearance, a German by nation, and evidently a man of cultivation. He stated that within a month he had published a bitter article against Christ in one of their leading periodicals, and that within three weeks he had taught the children of his Sabbath school not to believe in Jesus! And now he was one of the clearest and most remarkable converts with whom I have ever met. His case is altogether remarkable; and though he was in such a state of excitement from the greatness and suddenness of the change in his mind and heart, and from the furious opposition and insults from his "brethren according to the flesh," that he was then incapable of calmly analyzing the process of the work of grace in his heart, or designating the different stages of mind through which he passed in finding mercy; yet I was able so to comprehend the case as to see in it one of the most remarkable instances of God's saving goodness that I ever met with. It seemed to me to be nearer a case of salvation without a definite faith than I had ever met with before. His earnest declaration was that "it was not argument or reasoning that brought him to Christianity, but a revelation from God."

His statement relative to his preceding state of mind was substantially as follows: That he found himself—from what cause he could not tell—unsettled and unhappy. His mind had no faith, his heart no hope, for this world or the next; that he did not believe in Christ or Christianity; that he had no faith in Judaism beyond a kind of speculative philosophy, and that therefore he had no foundation, but was afloat in a sea of doubt and utter uncertainty. In this unhappy state of mind he took to reading the New Testament as he would read a novel—to occupy his thoughts and enable him to forget himself. As he read on the thought occurred to him, This book may be true. He read further, and found a half-formed wish that it might be; but he was not conscious of a distinct belief that it was so; his soul still travailed with its burden of emptiness and desolation.

In this frame of mind he retired to rest, not even venturing to offer a prayer in any direction! On waking in the morning, before he was fairly conscious of resuming his usual train of thought and feeling, he found himself suddenly exclaiming audibly: "Jesus!" "My Savior!" "My God!" The sound of his own voice startled him, and the purport of the words he uttered still more so; they thrilled him. With the utterance there came a sense of their import and consciousness of their truth! A tide of wonder and amazement, of joy and rapture swept over his soul, that nearly overwhelmed him.

Here in a minute, and without an effort, Judaism, the study and object of defense for a lifetime, was gone, leaving not a vestige behind. Christ, so long and strenuously opposed and maligned, was accepted and embraced; Christianity was demonstrated to be true to his inmost being, and a soul that, in its last waking hours, was region of alarm and despair, was emancipated and exulting in God! The reader will sympathize with his declaration that he was not "brought to embrace Christianity by reasoning, but by a revelation from God."

I never met with a convert more assured of the reality of the work of God in his heart than this man. His simplicity and earnestness, coupled with the deep gratitude and joy that beamed forth in face and manner, made him an interesting object of study.

I have alluded to the feeling of the Jews. All the ancient devil that stoned and killed the prophets and crucified the Lord Jesus showed himself on this occasion. They came in numbers to his house; they raged and stormed; they denounced him as a knave, a hypocrite and a liar; they shook their fists in his face, declaring that if he said he believed Christ to be the Son of God he was a liar, for he did not and could not—that nobody ever believed it. His poor old mother took the alarm, and declared she would not live with an idolater, and he had to take her to Chicago at once.

My last information is that Mr. Yager has joined the Baptist Church, and is preaching the faith and Christ he formerly persecuted.

J. Hamilton.

June 20, 1872.

Our Sunday school publications for July have been received, and the best lot of the year, as we think. The catechism lesson added to the regular Bible lesson is an excellent idea and a great improvement. The opening article in the Magazine, by Bishop McTyeire, on "Punctuality in Sunday School Teachers," is excellent, and we hope all our teachers will read it.

We regret to learn, through the Southern Christian Advocate of June 26, that the editor, Rev. Dr. Kennedy, has been very ill, and, though improving, he was not at last accounts able to be at his desk.

Sumac Leaves is a beautiful little paper, published by the young ladies of the Feliciana Female Collegiate Institute, Jackson, Louisiana. The paper is handsomely illustrated and well conducted.

Rebuilding the Publishing House.

AID FROM CHINA.

The following letter from the Rev. Young J. Allen, one of our missionaries in China, will be read with pleasure. Ought not such a letter to awaken an interest nearer home? Hundreds of large and wealthy congregations have, as yet, sent us no help toward rebuilding our Publishing House, while thousands of smaller churches, that could contribute something, have failed to respond.

The Publishing House belongs to the entire church, and will be a blessing to it when the present generation has passed away. Ought not every member to have some interest in its erection? or shall it go up without your aid? Whatever you wish to give, send as early as practicable. A. H. Redford.

"Dear Bro. Redford: I am exceedingly sorry to hear of the partial destruction, by fire, of the Publishing House, and sympathize with you, and especially with Dr. Summers, on account of the great losses sustained; and though absent, far in another hemisphere, I gladly embrace this opportunity to attest my loyalty to our beloved church, and my faith in its enterprises, by sending you an order on my agent for $100—$50 for Dr. Summers, and $50 for the Publishing House. May the doctor's new lease of life be an universal blessing, and the glory of the latter House be greater than of the former.

"Let us hear from you often, doctor; your letters will do us good.

"Kindest regards to Drs. McFerrin, Summers and Haygood. Yours, ever and obediently,

"Young J. Allen."

Death of the Rev. Isaac Milner. We have just received the sad intelligence of the death of the Rev. Isaac Milner, of the Tennessee Conference. He died suddenly at his residence near Columbia, Tennessee, June 16, after preaching in the morning. Bro. Milner's health had been so much improved that he told his wife, after his return home on Sunday, that he thought he would take a circuit next year. Alas! his work on earth is done. He was found lying on a sofa, sleeping the sleep of death. Dr. Green promises us a memoir of this excellent minister.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

The degree of D. D. was conferred by Trinity College, North Carolina, at its late commencement, upon Rev. F. M. Kennedy, editor of the Southern Christian Advocate. Well done

Experience is the best teacher; but—the school fees are heavy.—Coleridge.

MANUFACTURED TESTIMONY.

The Christian Advocate of Galveston nails another vile slander to the counter. We noticed the item in the Daily Advocate, and set it down at once as maliciously false. We quote the article of our Galveston cotemporary:

"The old spirit is at work. Rev. W. L. Malloy, presiding elder of Jefferson district, in Texas, in a private letter, dated Jefferson, Texas, May 1, 1872, to the Rev. W. H. Gillam, of the General Conference, says:

"The city election is at hand, and things have a warlike appearance. We have many difficulties to encounter here. The Ku-Klux here have just hung the man who traveled on this district last year. He was taken out of bed. God only knows but that my time will come next, but I intend to do my duty."

The above extraordinary statement appeared in the columns of the Daily Advocate, the organ of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North) in Brooklyn. Though well satisfied as to its true character, we withheld all comment until we could obtain reliable data. A copy of the statement was accordingly sent to Rev. Dr. Finley, pastor of our church in Jefferson, with the subjoined request appended:

"I am pretty well posted in Texas matters, but have no recollection of the case referred to. Can you post me as to the ex-presiding elder of the Church North? Was he hung, and for what? The design of the above is to create the impression that he was hung because he was a Northern Methodist, and that the present presiding elder stands in jeopardy from the same cause."

Dr. Finley handed our letter to the Daily Times of Jefferson, R. W. Loughery, editor, which comments on the letter of Rev. W. L. Malloy as follows:

"Now, did Mr. Malloy write this false letter? If he did, we hope no one will harm a hair of his head, but that all the churches, particularly the members of the Methodist Church, will unite in prayer for him. For shame! for shame! There is no man, Democrat or Radical, white or black, that does not know it does not contain a particle of truth. The man killed, to whom he alludes, lost his life by the hands of citizens he had offended, in causing the murder of two worthy citizens, and insulting a lady. He defied the moral instincts of a virtuous, patient, law-abiding community, a pastoral people, and lost his life by this and other outrages. As Mr. Malloy knows, his religious opinions had nothing to do with the matter. Therefore, will that gentleman arise to explain? His safety is in no danger, but his moral character is."

Mr. Malloy is evidently troubled with the itch for notoriety, which afflicts the class to which he belongs. Their efforts to impress the Northern mind that they are ever standing just beneath a martyr's crown must be very touching to those who accept their statements as true, but they awaken very different feelings among the people who would be ignorant of their presence, were it not for the slanders they utter, or the mischief they occasion.

It is unfortunate for the Church North and for Christianity that she has accepted such men as her representatives in this region. It is also unfortunate that the Northern Methodist press should give space to these slanders. They may build up party feeling, and intensify sectional hate, but they certainly will not foster those fraternal relations which the interests of Christianity demand, and for which good men should earnestly pray. A better state of feeling between the two branches of the Methodist family is a "consummation devoutly to be wished," but so long as Mr. Malloy and others like him have the ear and confidence of the Northern Church, they will persist in stirring up strife, and prolong that estrangement between the two great sections of the country and branches of the church which good men have long deplored.

The official organ of the General Conference may have satisfied its readers that "the old spirit is still at work" in the South, by the publication of this slander on the peaceable citizens of Jefferson, but it will not be considered a very graceful accompaniment of the commission which the General Conference has appointed to hear its tender of fraternal regards to the Southern Church. So long as the organs of the Church North consent to be the vehicle of the statements furnished by men who have personal or political reasons for misrepresenting the Southern people, they will maintain a barrier between the two branches of the church which no official compliments will be able to remove.

PERSONAL.—Bishop Morris, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was married to Miss Sallie A. Bruseup, of Lockland, Ohio, on Thursday, the sixth ultimo.

BISHOP PIERCE'S APPOINTMENTS.

CHANGE OF TIME.

MR. EDITOR: Please publish the following changes for me: Western Conference, Nebraska City, September 4; Missouri, Mexico, September 11; West St. Louis, Nevada City, October 2; St. Louis, Arcadia, October 16. G. F. PIERCE.

PARKERSBURG, June 17, 1872.

THE Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan, formerly of the North Mississippi Conference, and more recently connected with Soule Female College, Murfreesboro, Tennessee, we learn, says the Western Methodist, has accepted the presidency of Central Female College, Lexington, Missouri. Dr. Sullivan is a scholar of high grade, and in Christian character and devotion to the important work of education in the church he is eminently qualified for the new position assigned him, in which we anticipate for him a high degree of success.

WESLEY'S RULES CONCERNING SINGING.—Mr. Wesley's rules in relation to congregational singing have not yet been improved. They were:

1. Sing all.
2. Sing lustily, and with good courage.
3. Sing modestly.
4. Sing in time.
5. Above all, sing spiritually.

On each of these points he speaks at some length.

Obituaries.

RAIMON JOSEPHUS ALFORD, son of B. S. and Anna Alford, was born February 19, 1867, and died November 27, 1871, aged four years, nine months and eight days.

Death came and snatched the idolized boy—tore him from the hearts of father and mother, who had early begun to guide his footsteps from the forbidden paths of sin, making religious impressions upon his young heart, that they might become lasting ones. We will strive to bow in meek submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, ever remembering that he afflicts not in anger, but in love.

Ye soft winds, sigh your sweetest song
Above the bed
Where sleeps the dearest one among
The myriad dead!
Sweep gently over the grassy mound
Where my own loved and lost hath found
A dreamless pillow.

ONE WHO SADLY MISSES HIM.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT TO DAVID McCOY.

At a conference of the Cane Ridge church, Fayette circuit, Mississippi Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, March 3, 1872, J. Millsaps, C. C. Watkins and John Chamberlin were appointed a committee to prepare a suitable tribute to the memory of David McCoy. On motion the preacher in charge was added to the committee.

DAVID MCCOY was born in Kentucky, about the year 1800. He emigrated to this State when a youth, and settled in Jefferson county. He joined the Methodist Church about the year 1844, under the ministry of Rev. Levi Pearce. He died in peace, at his residence in Jefferson county, Mississippi, January 3, 1872.

Bro. McCoy was not without faults, for then he would have been more than human; but he had many noble traits of character that were recognized by all who knew him, and upon these we delight to dwell. He was an affectionate husband, a kind father, a good neighbor and a faithful friend. He was a liberal supporter of the church, a benefactor of the poor and needy, and a valid friend of the widow and the orphan. In his piety he was fervent and constant, delighting in class meetings and love-feasts, and often rejoicing in the Lord with his brethren, whom he loved with an ardent affection.

In the later years of his life he was a child of deep affliction, and in the midst of the dark waters through which his pathway lay he seemed at times to falter and waver; but those who knew him best saw in him the same fixedness of purpose, which ultimately triumphed, and he went down to his grave in hope of a blissful immortality.

Resolved, That as a church we deeply feel the loss of our brother, David McCoy, whom the great Head of the Church has removed from our midst. But we bow in submission to his will, who doeth all things well. We tender our sympathies to his bereaved family, and fervently pray God to sustain them and us in this sad affliction. COMMITTEE.

MRS. MARY SHAW died at her residence, in Jefferson county, Mississippi, April 1, 1872. She was about seventy-three years old, and had been an acceptable member of the Methodist Church about forty years.

For several weeks previous to her death her health had been precarious from disease of the heart, but no immediate danger was apprehended. On the night of the thirty-first of March she retired in her usual health. She knew not that it was her last night on earth, though she was always ready. Before day the next morning she was taken ill. The family was waked, and a physician sent for. In less than one hour her pure spirit entered into the rest that remains for the people of God.

Sister Shaw was extremely modest in her expressions of religious sentiments and feelings, but her life was always consistent, her example always good. As long as she was able she attended regularly at the house of public worship; and though seldom if ever demonstrative, the earnest attention and the silent tear often betokened a heart overflowing with unfeigned devotion to her divine Savior.

She was esteemed by all who knew her as a mother in Israel. Her house was always a welcome retreat for the Christian minister. Her sweet Christian spirit was the light and joy of the family circle. That light is extinguished—that joy has departed. But she waits to welcome us in that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

Her obsequies were attended by a large concourse of weeping friends, who fully sympathized with the wail of sorrow that burst forth from hearts all torn with anguish around her coffin. It was indeed a sore trial to lose such a mother, but her children and grandchildren mourn not as those who have no hope. They know full well that she who was so Christ-like on earth is now with Christ in glory. Let them follow her as she followed the Lord, and this separation will be but for a season. A FRIEND.

MAS. JUDITH LACY, who died near Longstreet church, DeSoto parish, Louisiana, April 16, 1872, was born January 8, 1832, and was for twenty-six years a devout and faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. She united with the church at Harmony, east Texas, during the ministry of Rev. F. M. Stovall on Panola circuit, in 1846. Sister Lacy's life was one of extreme suffering; but, looking not at the things which are seen, she sought through suffering to be perfect in patience and in the love of God. In life suffering crucifies the flesh, and in death, by its sharpest pangs, the soul more swiftly breaks its way to God. She has left a large family to the care of her husband, her church and her God. May his grace so prepare them that not only this, but all events of his providence may redound to their salvation from a world of sin, and to an eternal home in the "house not made with hands," where their loved one, sanctified, has gone. R. H. ADAIR.

DIED, in Mobile, Alabama, on the twelfth of June, 1872, after a protracted illness, Miss MAGGIE SMITH, in the twenty-second year of her age.

No tongue can tell or pen depict the sorrow that has been caused among friends and loved ones by the death of this most estimable young lady. Dark, indeed, must be the gloom which has been left around the hearthstone once illuminated by her smile. A loving and dutiful daughter and an affectionate sister, she was the pride and pet of the household.

Two years ago, after a long search, she found the pearl of great price, and connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Smith's chapel, near Mount Vernon, Alabama. Since that time her life has been such as would characterize a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus. She was truly pious and deeply devotional in her habits. When at home she would take down her Bible and read to her aged mother from its sacred pages, and then they would bow themselves in earnest prayer for the blessings that God alone can give.

The triumphant manner of her death is a sure evidence of the genuineness of her faith. She remarked to me, as her pastor that she could trust God as her Savior; and the day before her death was spent in shouting the praises of God. One by one she called her brothers and friends, and made them promise to seek religion. Her faith was steadfast to the end, and though the bridegroom came at midnight, she was ready to obey the call and enter into the everlasting feast of love. Like the setting sun, she sank beneath the horizon of life, and bright beams come back over this dreary canopy to influence and attract us to that bright home to which she has gone. Her body rests beside the grave of her father, who had long preceded her to his resting place. Her spirit, no doubt, has joined his on the other shore. As the last soil fell on the remains of our departed sister, we might well have said:

"O death! where is thy sting?
O grave! where is thy victory?"

J. A. PETERSON.

SKETCH OF REV. THOS. S. ABERNETHY.

Rev. Thomas S. Abernethy, Jr., son of Rev. Thomas S. Abernethy, of the Alabama Conference, and his wife Martha W. Abernethy, departed this life on the first day of December, 1871, at Enterprise, Mississippi, of what is called the "yellow disease," in the fortieth year of his age.

Bro. Abernethy evinced in early youth a fondness for books, and devoted much of his time to reading, with the purpose of devoting himself, in early manhood, to the profession of the law. But soon after he passed his twenty-first year he was persuaded by a pious lady friend to attend a camp meeting at Suggsville, Alabama, where he was awakened and converted. He soon realized that he was called to a higher vocation than the law, and immediately offered himself to and was received by the Alabama Conference into the itinerant ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and was appointed junior preacher on Monroe circuit, with Rev. L. M. Wilson. After several years of itinerant life, on various circuits, Bro. Abernethy returned to his native town, Marion, Alabama, (where he was born May 11, 1832,) and there married Eliza Hines, an interesting and an accomplished young lady.

At several times during his ministerial life his brethren honored him with the laborious and responsible position of secretary of the Conference, which he filled creditably.

After the war it was with Bro. Abernethy as it has been with many other good men and preachers—he became embarrassed in his relation to the financial world, and this embarrassed his relation to the ministry, and, harassed by indebtedness, and disturbed and depressed in mind, and paralized in energy, his mind reverted to the law as a means of supporting his increasing and interesting family. He read and studied, and soon obtained license to practice law, and was appointed district attorney. But before his mind was relieved from its depressed condition he concluded to surrender his ministerial credentials to the Mississippi Conference, into whose bounds he had just fallen, and did so in December, 1870. But he soon repented of this, and in a few months sought and obtained license to preach, and with freshened energy re-entered the ministry, and looked forward with eagerness to the Conference for the restoration of his credentials. He also looked forward to another day, not far distant in the future, when, disembarrassed and fully equipped, he would re-enter the itinerant ranks, and in that grandest of all campaigns, and in co-operation with the Son of God, in the conquest of the world, spend the remainder of his life. But these bright hopes were all blighted and blasted by one terrible shock of the fell destroyer, and he sank into the grave in the prime of manhood and at the culminating period of a brilliant intellect. Beside his dying bed stood his aged father in the deepest grief, and with the greatest solicitude to know the state of preparation for the eternal future upon which his son was now about to enter. Earnest, pointed and direct questions were put, and a long, close and profoundly interesting conversation ensued, in which our brother testified repeatedly that his way was clear, and that the grace that is in Jesus Christ was sufficient even in this last dreadful hour and conflict, to give the victory and to save forever. In the Quarterly Conference of Enterprise circuit, to which he belonged, the brethren, with many kind words and falling tears, expressed their love for him, and requested the presiding elder to prepare an obituary of him, and have it published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

With fine social and conversational qualities, genial spirit, warm affections, generous impulses and brilliant mind, he was popular in manners, and was an able and popular preacher. But, alas! he is gone. A devoted but now widowed heart, four sweet, intelligent, but orphaned children, a fond and aged father, and brothers and friends, mourn his untimely fall. But we all expect to join him by and by in that pure world, "where friends shall meet again who have loved," and where our friendship and love will be unmixed with the weaknesses, imperfections and accidents incident to this life.

The increase of business and demands of our readers require that we should part with our beautiful Hoe cylinder printing machine, which, with eighteen pounds of steam, will print from thirteen hundred to fifteen hundred per hour. See the work, as in our issue, and call or send a competent judge on Mondays or Wednesdays to see it in motion, if you wish to buy. BUSINESS NOTICES.

Physicians Use Them in Their Practice.—It is almost universally the case that physicians condemn what are generally known as "patent medicines." Although DR. TUTT'S LIVER PILLS IS NOT A PATENT MEDICINE, yet its composition (the result of years of study) is known only to himself, and so palpable are their valuable curative properties that very many of the first physicians in the South and West have adopted them in their practice, and recommended them to their patients.

SHELBY COUNTY, ALA., Sept. 12, 1869.

DR. WILLIAM H. TUTT—Sir: Although I am an M. D., and naturally hostile to all "nostrums," yet "seeing is believing, and feeling is the naked truth." I must say, from actual observation, that your Liver Pills are all you represent them to be, and a little more besides. I shall always recommend them.

Undisputed Facts.—It has been truly and significantly said that domestic happiness is more dependent on good digestion than virtuous creeds or moral codes. If the dogma holds, the oracle can be consulted by a prompt application to Price, the Delphic author of the Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Wherever, within the length and breadth of the land, Price's Bitters have penetrated, every household has been illumined by the sunshine of an unclouded joy, and every family reveled in the sweets of health and contentment. The sparkling eye, the ruddy cheek, the cheerful smile and happy glance, no less than the elastic step and the unfaltering tread, what are they but the eloquent tellales of some vitalizing elixir? No secret Botany holds the charm, no scientific alchemy creates the spell. The days of miracles are gone; the magic, mysteriously working wonders have passed away, and the age is a plain, practical one; give us a simple tonic that, by a happy amalgamation, restores to energy and strength the enervated system. Take Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters, and you bid an eternal farewell to such unwelcome guests as dyspepsia, indigestion, nervousness, neuralgia, flatulency and debility.

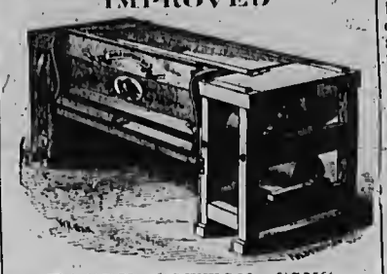
NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

IMPROVED



EAGLE COTTON GINS.

THE GREAT POPULARITY of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

STATE OF LOUISIANA,

PARISH OF ORLEANS,

CITY OF NEW ORLEANS.

BE IT KNOWN that on this twentieth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-two, and of the Independence of the United States of America the ninety-sixth, before me, ANDREW HERO, JR., a Notary Public in and for the Parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, duly commissioned and qualified, and in the presence of the witnesses hereinafter named and undersigned, personally came and appeared the several persons, residents of this city, whose names are hereto subscribed, who declared that, availing themselves of the provisions of the Statutes of Louisiana relative to the organization of CORPORATIONS in this State, they have covenanted and agreed, and do by these presents covenant and agree, and bind themselves, and those whom they represent, to form themselves into a corporation for the objects, and under the stipulations, regulations and obligations following, to wit:

ARTICLE FIRST.

The name and style of this corporation shall be THE CONSOLIDATED PORTABLE GAS-LIGHT COMPANY OF NEW ORLEANS.

ARTICLE SECOND.

The domicile of this Association shall be the city of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, and its object shall be the manufacture, sale and use of Carburetted Hydrogen Gas, and the manufacture and sale of Gas Machines; and the sale of the right to use said machines in the States of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Arkansas and Florida. The company shall also have power to purchase patent rights for the manufacture, use and sale of other gas machines than those now owned by them for the above-named States, or for any other States for which they may acquire patents.

ARTICLE THIRD.

The said corporation shall have and enjoy succession by its corporate name for the period of twenty-five years; shall contract, sue and be sued. It shall hold, receive, purchase, sell and otherwise convey, as well as mortgage and hypothecate, under its corporate name, property, both real and personal, movable and immovable; shall name and appoint such managers, directors and officers as its interest or convenience may require; it shall make and establish such by-laws, rules and regulations for the proper management of its business and affairs as may be necessary and proper, and shall possess generally all such powers and privileges as are given by law to corporations. All legal processes shall be served on the president of the company. The company shall have a seal with such device as the Board of Directors may determine.

ARTICLE FOURTH.

The capital stock of this corporation shall be Fifty Thousand Dollars, divided into five hundred shares of One Hundred Dollars each, two hundred and thirty shares of which are to be declared full-paid and transferred to the present owners of the patent rights and franchises which are to form the basis of the operations of this Association; and are to be in full payment for the transfer to the company of all such rights and franchises. Ten per centum of all other stock subscribed shall be paid at the time of subscription; ten per centum more within thirty days; and ten per centum more within the next thirty days, making in all thirty per centum of subscription to the capital stock to be paid in cash within sixty days from date of subscription. The remainder may be called for by the Board of Directors in installments not to exceed ten per centum within any thirty consecutive days.

All installments called for shall be paid within ten days after due notice be given thereof, and any neglect or refusal to pay the same shall forfeit to the corporation the entire stock of such delinquent stockholder, together with the amount paid thereon and all accumulations, interest or benefit thereto belonging; provided, that the Board of Directors may extend said payments for a term not exceeding sixty days, upon the payment of interest thereon at the rate of eight per cent. per annum.

ARTICLE FIFTH.

The capital stock of this corporation may be increased to ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, or any part thereof, whenever deemed necessary by the Board of Directors, and they shall have the right of fixing the time and manner of paying the same; provided, that subscriptions to any increase of the capital stock shall be open first for ten legal days to those already stockholders, pro rata, on the amount of stock owned by each, and if not all taken up, then secondly to the stockholders at will for three legal days, after which any remaining stock may be open for public subscription.

ARTICLE SIXTH.

Dividends may be declared by the Board of Directors, either annually, semi-annually or quarterly; provided, however, that where the amount of such dividend may exceed the rate of ten per cent. per annum on amount paid up on stock, all such excess of ten per cent. per annum shall be credited upon any unpaid balance of the subscribed stock, until such subscribed stock shall have been declared full-paid.

No certificate of stock shall be issued until the same shall have been declared by the Board of Directors fully paid up, and no transfer of less than one share of the capital stock shall be made on the books of the Association.

ARTICLE SEVENTH.

The powers of the corporation are vested in the Board of Directors, consisting of six stockholders, (three of whom shall form a quorum for the transaction of business,) who shall be elected annually on the second Tuesday in June, beginning with the second Tuesday in June, 1874, by the stockholders, at such place in the city of New Orleans as may be selected, after ten days' advertisement in one of the daily newspapers published in the city of New Orleans, or by special notice to each stockholder; said Directors to hold office for one year, or until their successors are elected. The fiscal year of the company shall end on the thirty-first of May of each year, and the newly-elected Board of Directors shall take their seats on the first Monday in July following.

Any stockholder shall be eligible as a Director who may own five shares of the stock of the Association, and who is not a delinquent subscriber to the stock of the company.

All elections of Directors shall be by ballot, and held under the superintendence of a committee of three stockholders, to be appointed by the Board of Directors. Every owner of stock shall be entitled to one vote for each share of stock owned by him, her or them; provided, that no one shall be entitled to vote on any share or shares that have not stood in his, her or their names on the books of the Association for sixty days prior to any such election; also, that no one shall be entitled to vote at any election of stockholders who has not paid up all the installments called for by the terms of the charter or by the Board of Directors.

Proxies may vote when the authority is in writing. A plurality of the votes cast shall be sufficient to elect.

ARTICLE EIGHTH.

No stockholder shall ever be held liable for the contracts or faults of this corporation in any further sum than the unpaid balance due to the Association on the shares owned by him; nor shall any mere informality in organization have the effect of rendering this Charter null, or of exposing a stockholder to any liability beyond the amount of his stock.

No transfer of any stock not full-paid shall be made without the consent of the Board of Directors.

ARTICLE NINTH.

Any modification, additions to, or any changes in this act of incorporation may be made or the corporation may be dissolved by two-thirds of the stock represented and voting at any meeting of stockholders called for that specific purpose; provided due notice shall have been given of such meeting as provided in Article Seventh.

ARTICLE TENTH.

At the expiration of the term of this act of incorporation, or at its earlier termination, as provided in the preceding article, the affairs of the Association shall be liquidated, its debts and all other liabilities paid, and the balance of its funds, if any, shall be divided pro rata among the stockholders; all to be done under the supervision of a Board of three Commissioners, to be appointed by the Board of Directors, who shall continue to act until the business of the Association shall be entirely closed and liquidated; and in the case of the death of either one or two of them, the survivor or survivors shall act.

ARTICLE ELEVENTH.

The Board of Directors shall elect annually, at their first meeting, a President and such other officers, clerks or agents as shall be necessary to carry on the operations and objects of the corporation for such time as they may choose; they shall fix the salaries of all officers and the amount of security to be required from each. The Board shall also have the power to fill vacancies caused by the death, resignation or insolvency of any of its members.

The following-named persons shall constitute the first Board of Directors, and they shall hold their seats until the first Monday in July, 1874, or until their successors shall have been elected and qualified in accordance with the provisions of this charter, viz.: John L. Dimmlen, Fergus Hathorn, Robert M. Walmsley, Henry N. Soria, John Lawrence Guberinator and Joseph Walker Champlin.

THUS DONE AND PASSED, in my office, at New Orleans aforesaid, in the presence of George Cenas and Paul A. Conand, witnesses, both of this city, who hereunto sign their names with the parties and me, the said Notary, the day and date aforesaid.

Original signed: J. L. Gubernator, F. Hathorn, E. C. Palmer & Co., C. L. Walmsley & Co., and others.

The Child's Corner.

TEA-DRINKING.

BY CHARLOTTE M. PACKARD.

Miss Margery kneels at the cricket
Where a nursery feast is spread;
Invisible tea in the teapot,
On the plates some invisible bread.

Sugar one lump in the china;
Milk just a drop in the jug;
And she pours some into the water
Into Dorothy Clarissa's mug.

Miss Dorothy's lips are the reddest,
Her hair the most wonderful black,
And her face would be lovely, I doubt not,
But for one most unfortunate crack!

'Tis easy to spy she's a beauty,
Her dimpy fat hands white as milk,
Her dimpy fat throat like the snow-flakes,
Her pearl little gown made of silk.

"Miss Dorothy, will you take honey?
Just nibble a bit of this cake;
My beautiful I fear, are but dorothy,
Tin ovens are so bad to bake."

And Dorothy stares at her hostess
With eyes that are blue as the sea,
Standing stiff at her end of the cricket,
As prim as a body need be.

"Now ring for the maid!" Take the dishes.
And, Polly, be sure there's no waste."
Miss Margery seizes Miss Dolly
And makes for the garden in haste.

Little Corporal.

Little Harry's Riches.

Once we told elsewhere a certain story to a crowd of young readers, and now "A Mother" asks us to tell it again. "I too have a little Harry," she writes, "and often his childish tears flow and his young heart seems filled with discontent and bitterness. I would tell him myself about your little boy; but I cannot remember your account exactly, and so I turn to you."

Well, dear mother of the new Harry, who, strange to say, is expected to get some good from the old Harry, send the little fellow here and we'll tell him what took place in our happy home not so very many years ago:

One day our little Harry spent the forenoon with his young playmate Johnny C. Johnny's mother had died when he was a baby, but his father was still living. He was an only child, and he dwelt in a fine house, and on Sundays rode to church in the grandest carriage to be met with in all the country round. He had a great many toys, and a real watch that would go all day without stopping; and as for candies and cakes, why the physician who attended the family said that Johnny had enough of such things given him to supply a whole regiment of little boys. He was a funny doctor, and liked to make queer speeches; but for all that, he would often shake his head very gravely when he felt his little patient's pulse; then he would look sternly at the great big gold watch, which he held in his hand to count the pulse-beats by, and mutter: "Too many good things are bad things for youngsters." Johnny would try for a while to puzzle out the strange sentence, but as he generally was sick on these occasions, he would soon give up the attempt in despair, and close his eyes, longing to get well, so that he might eat plum-cake and pop-corn balls again.

But Johnny was not always sick; and, as I said before, he had many beautiful things. So, of course, this visit promised to Master Harry a world of enjoyment. But, alas! when the poor little fellow returned home in the afternoon his brow was clouded, and he had a dismal look in his blue eyes, and the least bit of a pout on his cherry lips.

Something was wrong, I knew, and at last out it came.

"Mother, Johnny's got money in both his pockets!"

"Has he, dear?"

"Yes, ma'am; and he says he could get ever so much more, if he wanted it."

"Well, now, that's very pleasant for him," I returned cheerfully, as a reply was evidently expected. "Very pleasant; don't you think so?"

"Yes, 'um, only ——"

"Only what, Harry?"

"Why, he has a big pop-gun and a watch and a hobby-horse, and lots of things." And Harry looked up at my face with a disconsolate stare.

"Well, my boy, what of that?"

"Nothing, mother," and the telltale tears sprang to his eyes, "only I guess we're very poor, ar'n't we?"

"No, indeed, Harry, we are very far from poor. But we are not as rich as Mr. C.'s family, if that is what you mean."

"O mother!" insisted the little fellow, "I do think we're VERY poor; anyhow I am!"

"O Harry!" I exclaimed reproachfully.

"Yes, ma'am, I am," he sobbed; "I haven't scarcely anything at all—I mean anything that's worth money—except things to eat and wear, and I'd have to have them any way."

"Have to have them?" I echoed, at the same time laying my sewing upon the table, so that I might reason with the young gentleman on this point; "do you not know, my son ——"

Just then Uncle Ben looked up from the paper he had been reading.

"Harry," said he solemnly, "you know I m a doctor, and if you'll give me a chance to try some experiments, you can earn quite a handful of money."

"Can I?" asked Harry, looking up quickly through his tears; "I'd like that ever so much; but what is a 'speriment, uncle?"

"An exporiment," said his uncle, "is just a trial, a way of finding out things. If you want to find out what will happen when sugar is put into water, you just try the experiment of putting a lump into this tumbler, so, and you'll find out that the sugar'll melt and the water will become sweet. Now for business. I want to find out something about eyes; so, if you'll let me have yours, I'll give you a dollar apiece for them."

"For MY EYES!" exclaimed Harry, astonished almost out of his wits.

"Yes," resumed Uncle Ben quietly, "for your eyes. I'll give you chloroform, so it won't hurt you in the least, and you shall have a beautiful glass pair for nothing to wear in their place. Come, bub, a dollar apiece, cash down. What do you say? I'll take them out as quick as a wink."

"Give you my eyes, uncle," cried Harry, looking wild at the very thought, "for two dollars? I think not!" and the startled little fellow shook his head defiantly.

"Well, five, ten, twenty dollars, then?" but Harry shook his head at every offer.

"No, sir! I wouldn't let you for a thousand dollars. Why, what could I do without my eyes? I couldn't see mother, nor the baby, nor the flowers, nor the horses, nor nothing," added Harry, waxing warmer.

"I'll give you two thousand," urged Uncle Ben, taking a roll of bank notes out of his pocket. Harry, standing at a respectful distance, shouted that he never would do any such thing.

"Very well," continued his uncle, with a serious air, at the same time writing down something in his note-book. "I can't afford to give you more than two thousand dollars, Hal, so I shall have to do without the eyes; but," he added, "I'll tell you what I will do. I'll give you twenty dollars if you will let me put a few drops out of this bottle into your ears. It won't hurt, but it will make you deaf. I want to try some experiments with deafness, you see. Come quickly, now! Here are the twenty dollars all ready for you."

"Make me DEAF!" shouted Harry, without even to king at the gold pieces temptingly displayed upon the table. "I guess you won't do that either. Why, I couldn't hear a word if I was deaf, could I?"

"Probably not," replied Uncle Ben dryly. So, of course, Harry refused again. He would never give up his hearing, he said, "no, not for three thousand dollars!"

Uncle Ben made another note in his book, and then came out with prodigious bids for "a right arm," then "left arm," "hands," "feet," "nose," etc., finally ending with an offer of ten thousand dollars for "mother" and five thousand for the baby.

To all of these offers, however, Harry shook his head, his eyes flashing, and exclamations of surprise and indignation bursting from his lips. At last Uncle Ben said he must give up his experiments, for Harry's prices were entirely too high.

"Ha, ha!" laughed the boy exultingly, and he folded his dimpled arms and looked as if to say, "I'd like to see the man who could pay them."

"Why, Hal, look here!" exclaimed Uncle Ben, peering into his note-book, "here is a big addition sum, I tell you; come, help me do it."

Harry looked into the book, and there, sure enough, were all the figures, though he had not the slightest idea how to add them together. Uncle Ben read the list aloud:

Eyes	$2,000
Ears	5,000
Right arm	2,000
Left arm	1,000
Hands	2,000
Feet	4,000
Nose	500
Teeth	500
Tongue	1,000
Mother	10,000
Baby	5,000

He added the numbers together, and they amounted in all to thirty-two thousand dollars.

"There, Harry," said Uncle Ben, "don't you think you are foolish not to take up some of my offers?"

"No, sir, I don't," answered Harry resolutely.

"Then," said Uncle Ben, "you talk of being poor, and by your own showing you have treasures that you'll not take thirty-two thousand dollars for. What do you say to that?"

Harry didn't know exactly what to say, so he laughed and blushed for a second, and just as a big tear came rolling down his cheek, he threw his chubby arms around my neck.

"Mother," he whispered, "isn't God good to make everybody so rich."—Hearth and Home.

How Quarrels Begin.

'I wish that pony was mine,' said a little boy at a window looking down the road.

'What would you do with him?' asked his brother.

'Ride him; that is what I'd do.'

'All day long?'

'Yes, from morning till night.'

'You would have to let me ride him sometimes.'

'Why would I? You would have no right in him if he was mine.'

'Father would make you let me have him part of the time.'

'No, he would not!'

'My children,' said the mother, who now saw that they were beginning to get angry with each other, 'let me tell you of a quarrel between two boys no bigger nor older than you are. They were going along a road, talking in a pleasant way, when one of them said:

"'I wish I had all the pasture land in the world.' 'And I wish I had all the cattle in the world,' said the other. 'What would you do then?' asked his friend. 'Why, I would turn them into your pasture land.' 'No, you wouldn't,' was the reply. 'Yes, I would.' 'But I wouldn't let you. You shouldn't do it.' 'I should.' 'You shall not.' 'I will.' And with that they seized and pounded each other like two silly, wicked boys as they were.'

The children laughed, but their mother said: 'You see in what trifles quarrels often begin. Were you any wiser in your half angry talk about an imaginary pony? If I had not been here, who knows but you might have been as silly and wicked as they were?'

IF THAT marvelous microcosm, man, with all the costly cargo of his faculties and powers, were indeed a rich argosy, fitted out and freighted only for shipwreck and destruction, who among us that tolerate the present only from the hope of the future, who that have any aspirings of a high and intellectual nature about them, could be brought to submit to the disgusting mortifications of the voyage?—Colton.

Training Steers.

To properly train a pair of steers, I advise the trainer first to get acquainted with them, so that they will not stand in fear of you, then put them in a yard furnished with a good strong fence, that has no stray nooks or byways, then with a whip, with a stock of light spring timber, eight or ten feet long, and lash of twelve to eighteen inches, go in with them and commence driving them as though they were old cattle, remembering to coax them to do what they are bid, if it takes two hours; also show them what is wanted; but, above all, keep your temper and spare the whip, which is not so much to strike with as to make motions with for steers to see when an order is given. It is generally best to take one steer at a time; give him a lesson on one point; then let him rest and take the other, and so on. After getting them learned so they will start, stop and back at the word alone, get them abreast of each other and repeat the lessons, which will come easier than at first. This will finish the training for the day. The next day review, and teach them to turn to the right and left on a circle, or short, to keep together and haul on a line. On the third day put the yoke on them in a careful manner, and proceed to go over the previous lessons, bearing in mind that the whip must not be used to induce them to draw. Encourage them by look, action and voice, if necessary, and praise them afterward, and there will be no danger of any balkiness about them.
